Dhaka looks to Beijing for fresh loans

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and JAGARAN CHAKMA

Talks on Chinese loan proposals will be at the fore during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's upcoming visit to Beijing.

During her visit, Bangladesh may seek around $5 billion in budget support in addition to loans for a number of large projects, said a finance ministry official on condition of anonymity.

While visiting Bangladesh in October 2016, Chinese President Xi Jinping promised about $20 billion -- the largest amount committed by a bilateral partner of Bangladesh -- over the following four years to implement 27 projects.

Bangladesh is again expecting Chinese financing at a time when it is facing pressure to maintain adequate foreign currency reserves.

Hasina's is likely to be in China on July 8-11.

Seeking anonymity, a top official of the Economic Relations Division (ERD) said they have received proposals for large projects from different ministries which suggest taking loans.

The government has been in talks with China about the projects. However, nothing has been finalised yet, the official said.

One of the projects under consideration for Chinese funding is the construction of a broad-gauge rail line from Bhanga to Kuakata via Barishal and Payra Port. It is estimated to cost about $5 billion.

Another project under consideration is the MRT Line-2, from Gabtoli to Narayanganj via Gulistan with a branch line from Gulistan to Sadarghat.

The underground and elevated metro rail is estimated to cost around $5 billion.

Besides, Bangladesh has already sought more than 36 billion yuan, equivalent to $5 billion, as soft loans from China for

Two S Alam firms evaded Tk 3,500cr in VAT: NBR

With penalty, they owe govt Tk 7,000cr; S Alam Group official says they didn't 'evade even a single taka in VAT'

SOHEL PARVEZ

S Alam Vegetable Oil Ltd and S Alam Super Edible Oil Ltd have unpaid value added tax (VAT) and consequent penalty worth over Tk 7,000 crore, as they allegedly evaded VAT through various means, including by presenting lower purchase and sales data in VAT returns between 2019 and 2022, according to an audit by the NBR's VAT wing.

During the period, the two companies "evaded" Tk 3,538 crore in VAT, for which they were fined another TK 3,531 crore, the audit report says.

The audit was carried out by the field office of Customs, Excise & VAT Commissionerate, Chattogram, and was subsequently reviewed by a five-member committee headed by an additional commissioner, Chattogram VAT Commissionerate, which drew the same conclusion.

Of the amount, S Alam Vegetable Oil Ltd allegedly evaded Tk 1,917 crore and S Alam Super Edible Oil Ltd Tk 1,621 crore in three years from the financial years 2019-20 to 2021-22, according to the audit report submitted in October 2023 and the subsequent review report submitted in May 2024.

The two companies denied any wrongdoing.

The regulator came up with the unpaid VAT claims after analysing the VAT returns and the financial statements audited by the two companies' CA firm as well as their written response to the VAT Commissionerate.

The field office audit team submitted its report on October 2 last year. Later, the field office formed a five-member committee to

- S Alam Vegetable Oil Ltd 'evaded' Tk 1,917 crore in VAT in 3 yrs
- S Alam Super Edible Oil Ltd 'dodged' Tk 1,621 crore in VAT during same period
- The two companies were also fined Tk 3,532 crore
- They have 90 days to appeal by paying 20 percent (over Tk 700 crore) of the VAT claim
- S Alam Group to appeal the decision

Cybercriminals breach NBR server again

Use login credentials of customs official in a bid to get container of cigarettes released at Ctg port

MOHAMMAD SUMAN

A "cybercriminal gang" attempted to release a container of cigarettes from Chattogram Port after breaching the server of the National Board of Revenue with the login credentials of a customs official.

Acting on a tip-off, customs officials seized the container loaded with 50 lakh sticks of Mond cigarettes, worth about Tk 5 crore, at the port on Thursday, hours after a ship carrying the container reached the port.

The breach of the server came to light on Saturday after the officials launched an investigation into the incident. They found that Hamko Corporation Limited imported the cigarettes by providing false declaration and fake LC (letter of credit) documents.

The "gang" used the login ID of Mohammad Zakaria, deputy commissioner of Chattogram Customs House,

Militants turning to apps to draw new recruits

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

With the so-called Islamic State trying to regroup in Syria and beyond, Neo JMB, a Bangladeshi IS-inspired group, is becoming active again.

Since June last year, at least 315 people accused of militancy have been released on bail, and around 70 of them are suspected Neo JMB members, said officers of the Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime (CTTC) unit of Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

- Neo JMB chief Abu Bakar, a former Huji leader, is now in the Middle East
- At least 315 suspects released on bail since June 2023
- CTTC arrested 826 suspects, including 128 Neo JMB men
- Neo JMB uses Threema, Signal, Telegram, and Wickr Me

Many of these suspects who know how to make bombs and have combat training are now a cause for concern, they added.

According to five CTTC officials, citing intelligence reports, many of them may have joined four or five online groups of Neo JMB.

US PRESIDENTIAL RACE

Top Democrats rule out replacing Biden

REUTERS, Washington

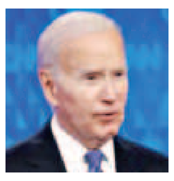
Top Democrats yesterday ruled out the possibility of replacing President Joe Biden as the Democratic nominee after a feeble debate performance and called on party members to focus instead on the consequences of a second Donald Trump presidency.



After days of hand-wringing about Biden and the outcome of the November 5 election, Democrat leaders firmly rejected calls for their party to choose a younger presidential candidate. Biden, 81, was huddling with family members at the Camp David presidential retreat, with his political future a likely topic of discussion.

But the drumbeat of calls for Biden to step aside continued, and a post-debate CBS poll showed a 10-point jump in the number of Democrats who believe Biden should not be running for president, to 46 percent from 36 percent in February.

Diesel, kerosene prices lowered by Tk 1

Petrol, octane prices unchanged

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has reduced diesel and kerosene prices by Tk 1 per litre while keeping petrol and octane prices unchanged at Tk 127 and Tk 131, respectively, for the month of July.

The new price will be effective from July 1 (12:00am), said a gazette of the Ministry of Power, Energy and Mineral Resources.

As per the gazette, the prices of diesel and kerosene were set at Tk 106.75 a litre, which was Tk 107.75 in June.

The government has been adjusting local fuel prices in parallel with the international market since March this year.

On February 29, the Bangladesh Petroleum Corporation (BPC) issued a notification on Automatic Fuel Oil Pricing Guidelines.

According to the notification, the prices of all petroleum fuels – petrol, diesel, octane, kerosene, furnace oil, jet fuel, and marine fuels – will be set automatically based on the international market price.

In May, the government hiked diesel price by Tk 1 per litre, and petrol and octane prices by Tk 2.50 per litre.

In April, the price of diesel and kerosine was reduced by Tk 2.25 per litre but the petrol and octane remained unchanged.

In the first adjustment of March, diesel and kerosene prices decreased by Tk 0.75, Octane dropped by Tk 4 and petrol by Tk 3.

review the audit findings.

The review report, submitted in May 21, said the "VAT dodging allegations have been proven beyond doubt."

On June 9, the Customs, VAT & Excise Commissionerate, Chattogram, in its adjudication orders asked the companies to pay the "evaded VAT" worth Tk 3,538 crore along with the penalty to the tune of Tk 3,531 crore and applicable interest to the state coffers within 15 working days.

The deadline ends on July 3 and if the companies do not appeal against the order, the regulator will "take steps to realise the evaded VAT, penalty and interest as per the law," NBR officials said.

S Alam Group Executive Director (Finance) Subrata Kumar Bhowmik told The Daily Star on June 27 that they did not "evade even a single taka of VAT" and that they will appeal the decision.

The two sister concerns of the business conglomerate have 90 days to appeal by paying 20 percent (over Tk 700 crore) of the VAT claim.

Md Mustafizur Rahman, S Alam Group's company lawyer, told The Daily Star on June 29 that before they file any appeal, they are seeking an in-person hearing with the VAT authorities to present their full response and the relevant documents that the regulator had sought during the audit and review.

"If they give us a full hearing and allow us adequate time, we will be able to convince them that their unpaid VAT claims against us do not reflect the reality," he said, adding that they applied for a full hearing on June 6, three days before the VAT authorities asked them to pay the unpaid VAT, but were not allowed the opportunity.

FIELD OFFICE AUDIT FINDINGS

The VAT office came up with the findings by comparing the sales data given in the VAT returns and the annual financial statements from 2019-20 to 2021-22 that the companies submitted to the income tax office in the port city.

In its report on S Alam Vegetable Oil Ltd, the VAT Commissionerate said the company showed "deflated sales in its VAT returns" than that in its annual reports, audited by a Chartered Accountancy (CA) firm, submitted to the tax authorities by the company itself.

"As per the audited reports from the financial years 2019-20 to 2021-22, total sales of the company were Tk 12,725.95 crore. On the other hand, the reported sales by the organisation in the VAT returns during the period were Tk 2,401.92 crore," the report says.

"This means, the company did not present sales worth Tk 10,324 crore in the VAT returns. By concealing actual sales in VAT returns, the organisation did not pay VAT amounting to Tk 1,346.61 crore during the period which is realisable," it says, citing the 15 percent VAT rate on sales of edible oil applicable at the time.

The other company -- S Alam Super Edible Oil Ltd -- did the same, but only on a different scale, the audit found.

During the same period, this company's "sales value in its audited financial statement was Tk 12,850.48 crore. But in the VAT return, the figure was Tk 3,620.63 crore, which is Tk 9,229.84 crore less than that presented in the audited financial report," the report says.

Besides, both companies "evaded" revenue by showing lower value of raw material purchase in VAT returns than that reported in their annual reports during the three financial years.

For example, S Alam Vegetable Oil Ltd in its financial statement showed "purchase value of raw materials worth Tk 11,245 crore during those three years. But the VAT returns and other related documents submitted by the company to the VAT authorities show the purchase of raw materials was worth Tk 3,145 crore."

The amount is Tk 8,100.39 crore less than that shown in the company's own financial statement.

"It is clear from the comparative analysis of its audited financial statements and VAT returns that in order to evade VAT, soybean and palm oil was sold after producing the item with ingredients procured from local sources or collected by any other means," the report says.

"In the company report audited by a CA firm, there is information of sales without processing ingredients (CDSO [Crude Degummed Soybean Oil] and RBD palm olein).

"It is clear from data that Tk 8,100.39 crore worth of raw materials have been procured locally against which the company failed to submit any VAT chalan or Bill of Entry."

During the period, 7.5 percent VAT rate was applicable on such local purchase, and as such "the total amount of unpaid VAT is Tk 607.52 crore, which is collectable from the firm."

As for the other company -- S Alam Super Edible Oil Ltd -- its raw material procurement value was shown Tk 11,171.42 crore during the three years, but the VAT returns and other related documents submitted by the company to the VAT authorities put the purchase value at Tk 5,206.53 crore.

"It is clear from data that Tk 5,964.89 crore worth of raw materials have been procured locally against which the company failed to submit any VAT chalan or Bill of Entry," the report says, adding that the total amount of unpaid VAT in this case was Tk 447.36 crore.

The Customs, VAT Commissionerate, Chattogram, also compared the procurement data of goods and services provided in the annual financial statements and VAT returns in the years from 2019-20 to 2021-22 and found that "S Alam Vegetable Oil paid lower VAT at source, known as VAT Deducted at Source (VDS), than the required amount against its purchase during the period."

The company's unpaid revenue against VDS on goods and services, on which 5 percent to 15 percent VAT is applicable, was Tk 5.63 crore in those three years, the report says.

During the same period, S Alam Super Edible Oil had unpaid revenue against VDS worth Tk 1.78 crore.

The Commissionerate report on both the companies says "these sorts of activities of the organisations are a clear violation" of 10 sections of the VAT and Supplementary Duty Act 2012, and six Rules of VAT and Supplementary Duty Rules 2016.

The field office of the NBR also slapped a penalty of Tk 1,911 crore and Tk 1,620 crore on S Alam Vegetable Oil and S Alam Super Edible Oil respectively for "non-compliance" of VAT rules.

"Legal steps can be taken to realise the evaded VAT against the company under sections 85 and 111 of the VAT and Supplementary Duty Act 2012," the report says about both firms.

During its audit, the field office sought explanations from the companies and asked them to appear in a hearing on October 30, 2023. In the hearing, both companies submitted a written response and sought more time for a detailed written reply.

The Commissionerate office allowed time extension for both companies three times since, and the companies submitted its written response on December 28 last year, seeking withdrawal of the charges after a review.

'PROVEN BEYOND DOUBT'

Following the written submission by the two companies and their appeal for a review of the unpaid VAT claims, the Customs, Excise & VAT Commissionerate formed a five-member committee, which submitted its report on May 21 this year after examining the audit report by the field office and other related documents as well as the response submitted by the two firms.

"All things considered and having analysed everything, it is clear that the allegations of VAT evasion worth Tk 1,917.39 crore by S Alam Vegetable Oil has been proven beyond doubt," the review report says, drawing the same conclusion about S Alam Super Edible Oil whose total unpaid VAT is Tk 1,621.92 crore.

RESPONSE TO REVIEW TEAM

Both companies in their written response to the VAT authorities said the allegation of VAT dodging and the demand notice by the regulator is "totally unlawful, baseless, fabricated and not based on data."

"We have been carrying out business by paying all sorts of applicable VAT as per laws and regulations," the two companies said in an identical response.

"Every year, we deposit crores of taka in revenue to the state coffers. But bank loans are needed to operate this large company. We have been carrying out business and producing goods with bank loans. For availing bank loans, we have to show excess transactions which is why excess sales and purchase of raw materials have been shown in the financial reports audited by the CA firm," read both the letters.

"Excess sales value has been presented in the audited reports by the CA firm to get loans from banks. But [VAT] returns have been filed as per the actual sales and VAT has been paid accordingly."

The two companies also said it was "not even possible to produce the goods shown in their audited financial statements with the raw materials that were imported from 2019-20 to 2021-22."

"If import and input-output coefficient and imported raw materials data are analysed, it will be clear that the sales data shown in the annual reports audited by our CA firm is not correct. Rather, the sales data presented in the returns and the amount of VAT paid against the sales are correct," both companies said.

Further, they informed that "the machinery and workforce of the respective companies also do not have the capacity to produce the goods shown in the audited report" and that the "market demand is much lower than the sales value presented" in their financial reports.

They also maintain that the findings by the NBR's VAT wing that they procured raw materials from local sources is "incorrect".

"Because, all the raw materials to produce edible oil is import-based. As such, no raw materials have been procured locally. So the demand for VAT at source is not right."

'CRIMINAL OFFENCE'

The VAT authorities' review report says that purchases and sales data of any firm should be the same in all its commercial documents submitted to regulators, bank, income tax and VAT authorities. This means, it is a legal obligation on the part of the firm concerned that its purchase and sales data presented to VAT office, income tax office, banks and in the financial reports audited by CA firms should all be the same.

"It is clear from analysis of the written response from the firm that the said entity concealed information of actual sales/procurement and VAT at source," the review team said in case of both the companies.

Also, the company authorities "did not provide any proof/documents to support their written response" although they were requested and granted opportunities more than once to submit proofs against their claim. Neither did the companies "nominate any representative to re-examine the evaded VAT amount" though the audit team made such requests in writing to the companies, the review report says.

"They claim that in order to avail loans from banks, they prepared the report by incorporating inflated purchase and sales data. If this is true, they have clearly committed a criminal offence.

"On the other hand, the audit firm that has prepared this report has demonstrated professional dishonesty and aided the accused firm to commit a criminal offence," the review report says, again about both firms.

The related bank has also "acted very unprofessionally" if it sanctioned loans based on an "imaginary and untrue" financial statement, it added.

"To accept such claims by an accused firm will be to patronise its criminal activities, which no government agency can do.

"The related income tax circle has determined tax liabilities of the firm based on the audited financial reports submitted by the firms. It has no relations with bank loans. So the claim that the report has been prepared to get bank loans cannot be acceptable."

Howladar Yunus & Co, which audited the financial statements of these two companies for two of the three years in question, said they were the "auditor of the companies, not preparer of the accounts."

"Our mandate was to audit the accounts along with notes to the accounts prepared by the management. We followed the international auditing standards to conduct the audit and concluding our audit opinion. The question of cooperating with anybody for any reason does not arise at all," it told The Daily Star in a written statement.

RESPONSE TO THE DAILY STAR

S Alam Group company lawyer Mustafizur Rahman said, "The VAT auditors had legal obligations to inspect the factory to assess the sales records and hear us out. But they reached the decision without doing any of these. That is why there has been a misunderstanding. It is solely because we were not given the opportunity to be heard. They would have gotten a clearer picture if they heard us."

He admitted that the VAT authorities communicated with them several times in writing during the audit and review and allowed them time to offer their explanations in personal hearing and in writing.

"But that was not enough. They gave us way less time than what we sought. It was not sufficient for us to prepare all the documents that date back to 2019 and a detailed response in a matter as serious involving such a huge VAT claim," he told The Daily Star on June 29.

About the discrepancies in sales records presented in their financial statements and the VAT returns, he said the financial reports audited by their CA firm contained advance sales as well. "But some of these sales eventually did not take place, and we returned the money to the buyers who were not delivered the goods. We did not conceal anything. We have bank documents showing that we returned the money."

Regarding the VAT authorities' findings that the two companies sourced certain volumes of goods from the local market and "dodged relevant VAT" in the process, he said, "The goods in question are not available in local markets, they can only be imported. And the VAT authorities' own report says that they found our import data correct. So the claim that we procured raw materials from local markets is based on assumption."

'LAME EXCUSE'

Syed Mushfequr Rahman, commissioner at Customs, Excise & VAT Commissionerate, Chattogram, said they allowed the two companies "multiple opportunities for hearing" which are minutely recorded in the adjudication order.

On the June 6 appeal by the two companies for a fresh hearing, he said they already appeared for hearing and made their submissions during the audit.

"Later, we formed a committee to examine their submissions. Based on the committee reports, we asked them to appear before the hearing twice but they failed. Then when we issued the order, they sent another letter for hearing which couldn't be entertained. All these details are recorded in my adjudication order."

On the question of sales figure, he said sales are final figures as per their own audited annual reports.

"We didn't create any figures. Based on their audited reports, they have paid the income tax, but failed to show the same in VAT returns. If any refunds were made to buyers, how come it was not reflected in their financial statements audited by their CA firms? This is an absolutely lame excuse," he told The Daily Star on June 29.

On the question of sourcing raw materials, the commissioner said companies are supposed to import the raw materials.

"But they can be procured locally from other manufacturers, which is the only plausible explanation for the higher sales volumes in their financial statements compared to their imports. That is why, we have imposed VAT that is due to be deducted by the two S Alam companies at source while buying from local sellers."

trade facility.

At present, Bangladesh has about $22 billion trade deficit with China. Once received, the $5 billion policy loan will help the country ease the ongoing pressure on foreign currency reserves.

The ERD official said they were in talks with China regarding the policy loan and that a deal could be signed during Hasina's visit.

Although China had promised to lend about $20 billion in 2016, as of January this year, the two sides managed to sign agreements on only nine projects, involving $8.08 billion, figures from the ERD show.

Of the $8.08 billion, Bangladesh could utilise only $4.91 billion, less than a quarter of the money promised by China.

Red-tape on both sides is largely to blame for the slow loan disbursements, said officials and experts.

The ERD official said this time, loan agreements are expected to be signed under a model different from the one used after 2016.

After China promised the $20 billion, agreements were signed on a project-by-project basis.

This time, officials are expecting that the loan agreements would be signed during Hasina's visit.

Speaking to The Daily Star, Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist at the World Bank's Dhaka office, said what the Chinese president had announced was a promise.

He thinks that red-tape on both sides has been responsible for the slow progress and low fund disbursements.

Kazi Shofiqul Azam, a former secretary to the ERD, said there were bottlenecks on both sides, causing delays in loan-deal finalisation and implementation.

"The countries need to follow a number of formalities, and they are time-consuming sometimes. This has been the main reason behind the delays a project face ... ."

STATUS OF 27 PROJECTS

Twenty-seven projects were supposed to be funded with the $20 billion initial commitment. Of those, two projects have been struck off the list.

Two projects – the digital connectivity project of Bangladesh Telecommunication Company Ltd (BTCL) and the Info Sarker-3 of the Bangladesh Computer Council -- involving $388 million have been implemented.

Seven other projects received $7.7 billion and their implementation is ongoing.

The Karnaphuli Tunnel, built under a $707 million project, has been opened to traffic.

The $550 million Single Point Mooring with a double pipeline project and the $2.67 billion Padma rail link project are nearing completion.

The expansion and strengthening of the power system network ($1.4 billion), the power grid network project ($977 million), the Dhaka-Ashulia elevated expressway project ($1.12 billion), and Rajshahi Wasa surface water treatment plant project ($276.25 million) -- are in various stages of implementation.

The loan applications have been sent for two projects. The loan agreement for the establishment of digital connectivity involving $473.75 million is likely to be signed this year.

Negotiations for commercial contracts to convert the Akhaura-Sylhet rail line to dual-gauge from metre gauge, involving $1.3 billion, and expansion and modernisation of Mongla port, costing $354 million, were underway.

Four projects are being evaluated by the Chinese side: Chinese economic and industrial zone in Chattogram ($221 million); construction of dual-gauge line parallel to the existing metre-gauge line on Joydevpur-Mymensingh-Jamalpur section ($902 million); water supply, sanitation, drainage and solid waste management for small size municipalities ($229 million); and construction of the sewage collection system under Dasherkandi sewage treatment plant catchment of Dhaka city ($198 million).

8 YEARS OF HOLEY ARTISAN ATTACK

Final justice yet to be delivered

ASHUTOSH SARKAR

Although eight years have passed since the horrific militant attack on the Holey Artisan Bakery in Dhaka's Gulshan, justice is yet to be finalised for the families of the victims.

The High Court bench of Justice Shahidul Karim and Justice Md Mostafizur Rahman on October 30, 2023, delivered a verdict in the case filed over the attack, commuting the death sentences of seven militants to jail sentences until their deaths.

But the HC bench is yet to release the full text of the judgement, which is needed to move any appeal before the Supreme Court.

The judges are now writing the judgement of the Holey Artisan attack case.

According to court sources, it cannot be specifically said when the full text of the verdict will be released and when appeals will be moved, heard and disposed of before the apex court.

Ariful Islam, a defence lawyer for the convicts, told The Daily Star on June 29 that his clients wanted to move their challenge appeals. But they have not been able to do so as the full text is yet to be released, he said.

Contacted, Attorney General AM Amin Uddin said the state will decide, after receiving the full text of the judgement, whether any appeal will be moved before the Appellate Division seeking enhancement of the convicts' sentences.

On July 1, 2016, five militants with firearms, machetes, and grenades stormed the bakery and held the diners hostage before killing three Bangladeshis, seven Japanese people, nine Italians, and one Indian.

The militants were killed

UNB, Dhaka

Dhaka University, the oldest university in Bangladesh, marks its anniversary today, celebrating a rich history of academic excellence and significant contributions since its establishment in 1921.

DU has chalked out elaborate programmes.

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday greeted all concerned on the occasion and wished continual success of the university.

The university played a pivotal role in the Language Movement and Liberation War. However, despite its illustrious past, the university faces numerous challenges, including technological lag, insufficient funding, inadequate campus and library facilities, and the impact of student and teacher politics.

The Higher Secondary Certificate and its equivalent exams began nationwide yesterday, except in Sylhet division, where exams were postponed until July 8 due to severe flooding.

The government made this decision on June 20, in response to the ongoing flood impacting the region. Exams scheduled from July 9 onwards in Sylhet will continue as planned.

On the opening day, nearly 10,000 students from nine general education boards remained absent, according to the Secondary and Higher Secondary division of the education ministry.

Exams are being conducted with a reduced syllabus, a measure that was implemented during Covid-19 pandemic and continued for 2021-2023 academic years.

MPs criticise corruption in education system

The opposition Jatiyo Party and independent MPs yesterday in parliament raised allegations of widespread corruption in the education system.

The level of corruption in the education sector cannot be expressed in words. Nothing happens without money. For getting monthly pay order (MPO) facilities, a teacher has to pay from table to table, they said.

They were speaking at the cut motion proposals against the demand of the Secondary and Higher Studies Division of the financial year 2024-25.

Education Minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury in his response speech, neither refuted the corruption allegations, nor acknowledged it.

Md Hamidul Haque Khandker of Kurigram-2 highlighted that the education budget consistently falls short of the GDP target. He pointed out institutional, curricular, and regional disparities, adding that field-level education officers remain in the same workplace for 5-7 years, leading to irregularities and corruption.

Independent MP Pankaj Nath from Barishal-4 praised the NTRCA's teacher recruitment process but added that teachers are often posted at places far from home, which ultimately ends up with them not joining their schools.

He suggested regionalising recruitment, especially in hilly areas, and called for filling vacancies swiftly.

Jatiyo Party MP Hafiz Uddin Ahmed criticised the education system's focus on building unnecessary infrastructures over ensuring quality teaching.

"Today's education is like -- I have a house and bathroom but do not have food," Hafiz added.

Independent MP Abul Kalam from Natore-1 said no teachers get retirement allowances without paying bribe.

Nasser Shahrear Zahedee from Jhenaidah-2 proposed reducing administrative expenses to boost educational research funding.

The education minister acknowledged the issue of teachers not joining distant posts and mentioned ongoing efforts to amend laws to address this.

Metro fares won't go up from today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Despite the NBR not extending the VAT exemption on metro rail fares, the metro rail authorities have decided not to increase fares from today.

The Metro authorities said they are yet to receive a reply from NBR regarding their appeal seeking a review of the revenue authority's decision to impose 15 percent VAT from Monday.

"We are waiting for their [NBR] reply... We have to talk to them about some technical issues even if we have to impose VAT on fare," MAN Siddique, managing director of Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd (DMTCL), told The Daily Star.

Another DMTCL official, wishing not to be named, said even if DMTCL decides to impose VAT, they would not increase metro rail fares without giving a prior announcement.

The issue of whether 15 percent VAT would be imposed on metro rail fares from July 1 has been under discussion for the last couple of months.

The discussion began in April when NBR decided to revoke the tax exemption for DMTCL.

But, DMTCL, through the Road Transport and Bridges Ministry, wrote to NBR to review the decision.

An NBR official said they did not extend the exemption order till Saturday.

Meanwhile, MAN Siddique said no reply from NBR came till 8:30pm yesterday.

"There are technical issues regarding the imposition of VAT on fare. We have to talk with the [NBR] officials to settle the issues. But they were busy as the budget was passed today," he said.

Chattogram experienced heavy rain yesterday morning, causing difficulty for commuters, including HSC examinees.

The Met Office reported 32mm of rain between 6:00am and 9:00am.

Many areas, including GEC, Muradpur, Katalganj, and Bahaddarhat, were waterlogged, forcing residents to wade through knee-deep water. Low-lying parts of the city faced a shortage of vehicles, making it difficult for students and parents to reach their destinations.

Many vehicles were stranded for hours. Traffic jams were severe on Zakir Hossain Road and in GEC area. Shahnaj Begum, whose son is an HSC candidate, said they had to walk in the rain to the exam centre for transport shortage.

Meteorologist Ali Akbar cautioned that the monsoon could bring more rainfall causing similar distress to the city dwellers.

Magistrate to look after Benazir's Gulshan flats

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday appointed a first-class magistrate as an administrator to look after four confiscated flats of former IGP Benazir Ahmed and his family members.

The flats are located in Gulshan.

Judge Mohammed Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain passed the order accepting a petition filed by ACC director (property management unit) Md Monjur Morshed, said its Public Prosecutor Mahmud Hossain Jahangir.

In the application, Morshed told the court that the same court on June 6 appointed administrators to look after some of the immovable properties of Benazir and his family members.

After that, Morshed along with some ACC officials went to visit the flats and talked to the building's receptionist Meherab Hossain. The receptionist informed them that the flats' owners did not live there, and he did not know their

Padma Bridge project now complete

PM to formally conclude much-talked-about project July 5

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Padma Multipurpose Bridge Project came to an end yesterday, around 17 years after it was taken in August 2007, giving great relief to tens of thousands of users daily.

Although Padma Bridge, the largest bridge in the country with roadway on the top and railway on the bottom, was inaugurated in June 2022, some works, including river training, remained incomplete then.

So, the authority extended the deadline up to June 30 this year, with a one-year defect liability period.

"Yes, the much-talked-about project is going to be completed today," Project Director Shafiqul Islam told The Daily Star yesterday. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina will formally conclude the project through a programme at Mawa end of the bridge on July 5, he said.

When the project was taken in August 2007, the cost of the project was Tk 10,161 crore and it was supposed to be implemented with foreign loan.

The project went through a major revision in January 2011, when the rail line was incorporated into the bridge, bringing the project cost to Tk 20,507 crore.

The project went through several revisions afterwards and the cost rose to Tk 32,605 crore. However, some Tk 1600 crore may not be required, Shafiqul said, adding that the cost of the project would be around Tk 31,000 crore.

The cancellation of World Bank loan, changes in bridge design and the pandemic shrouded uncertainty over the long-cherished project but the project was completed with the government's funds, directly connecting the capital with the southwestern region.

The prize giving ceremony of "Aly Zaker Liberation War Book Reading Initiative" was held at Liberation War Museum in Dhaka on June 29. Students from various schools, colleges and universities took part in the competition. Among others, Shyamoli Nasrin Chowdhury, lawmaker and a trustee of the museum Asaduzzaman Noor, Dr Sarwar Ali, Mofidul Haque, Sara Zaker, jury board member and Jatiya Grantha Kendra director Minar Mansur and Iresh Zaker were present. Tragedy strikes family twice

Mother dies in road crash while taking deceased son home for burial

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Her boy just died. The relatives could not part the grieving mother from her dead son's side while they were taking the body back home from the hospital.

Although Puspo Begum, 65, was told to travel in a separate vehicle, she refused and boarded the ambulance, which was taking her deceased son Alam Howladar, 45, to their home in Gandamari village of Patuakhali for burial from Sher-E-Bangla Medical College Hospital in Barishal.

Alam had just died in the hospital while undergoing treatment for liver cirrhosis.

Who knew, death was waiting for the mother too.

Or maybe it was destiny which could not keep the mother and son apart.

Puspo died when the ambulance carrying them collided head-on with a motorcycle on Saturday night.

After the collision, the ambulance driver lost control over the steering and the vehicle fell into a ditch.

Everybody in the ambulance survived, except Puspo, said her grandson Omar Farooq.

The motorcyclist, Rubel Sikder, 32, also died in the incident which took place at Daktarbari bus stand in Amtali upazila on Patuakhali-Kuakata highway, confirmed OC Kazi Sakhawat Hossain Tapu of Amtali Police Station.

Alam Howladar's wife Maqsuda Begum, 35, and motorcycle passenger Monirul Islam, 40, were given first aid at the local health complex for minor injuries, he added.

ASP sent to forced retirement over corruption

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

An assistant superintendent of police has been sent to forced retirement after allegations of misconduct and corruption were proven against him, according to a circular signed by Md Jahangir Alam, secretary of the Public Security Division under the home ministry.

The circular said Yakub Hossain, ASP of the Bangladesh Police Academy in Sarda, Rajshahi, formed a team in 2019 with the intention of making financial gains.

The other members of the team included former sub-inspector Jiban Biswas, constables Al Amin and Abdus Sabur, driver Samiul, and runner constable Anik.

According to the circular, on January 19, 2019, Jiban, Al Amin, and Sabur entered the house of a ward councillor in Kushtia. They handcuffed two individuals, Ashraf Hossain and Shamim Reza, who were present at the time, and beat them up under the pretence of criminal allegations. They had to pay Tk 1 lakh to the ASP's team through a mobile financial service agent for their release.

Ashraf and Shamim then filed a complaint, leading to the investigation that found ASP Yakub guilty.

Govt deals with India anti-state: Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP yesterday denounced the 10 MoUs signed with India during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's recent Delhi visit.

Party Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir termed the deals a "new form of slavery".

He said allowing India to establish a corridor through Bangladesh for linking different parts of their country via railway tracks would compromise Bangladesh's sovereignty and national security.

He accused Hasina of signing agreements for personal gain and demanded transparency in the deals.

The party said they would mobilise public opinion against what it said "anti-state" agreements.

KHALEDA'S ILLNESS

BNP providing false info: Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday said BNP leaders are confusing people by providing false information regarding illness of the party chief Khaleda Zia.

"There is no precedent for a person convicted of a criminal offence to receive such treatment freely. But the BNP has been demanding Khaleda Zia's release for the last few years without any legal procedure. They are also instigating the people by spreading rumours about her physical condition and trying to get sympathy from the people after failing in their movement," said Quader in a statement signed by AL Office Secretary Biplab Barua.

Quader also said demanding the release of a convict by going beyond the constitution and the legal process is nothing but audacity.

"According to the constitution of Bangladesh, everyone is equal in the eyes of the law. Khaleda Zia is convicted of corruption ... There is no scope for a convicted person to leave the country beyond the legal procedure," added the AL's second-in-command.

Unfit vehicles, brick kilns behind air pollution: minister

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

LGRD Minister Tazul Islam yesterday told parliament that the main causes of air pollution are unfit vehicles, black smoke emitted from factories and brick kilns, and dust pollution caused by urbanisation.

The minister said this while responding to a tabled question of ruling Awami League MP Mohammad Sayeed Khokon.

He also said the impact of methane gas emitted from landfills on air pollution is not serious.

However, modern technology-based sanitary landfills and waste-to-energy projects have been planned to control methane gas emissions, he added.

for students and their guardians.

Besides, waterlogging and severe traffic congestion further complicated the situation.

Prof Tapan Kumar Sarkar, chairman of Dhaka Education Board and president of Inter-Board Coordination Committee, said students would be allotted extra time if exams started late due to traffic or waterlogging.

"If an exam centre starts at 10:30am instead of 10:00am, the exam will end at 1:30pm instead of 1:00pm," he added.

HSC written exams are scheduled to continue till August 11, followed by practical exams from August 12 to 21.

This year, a total of 14,50,790 students from 9,463 educational institutions are registered for the exams, which are being held across 2,275 centres.

Among the examinees, 11,28,281 are from the nine general education boards, 88,076 from the madrasa board, and 2,34,433 from the technical education board.

during a rescue operation by army commandos. A chef who worked at the cafe was also killed during the 12-hour standoff, while another injured employee died later. Two police officers died from wounds sustained during the immediate response to the attack.

After the attack, which drew global condemnation, law enforcers launched a massive crackdown on terror networks.

On November 27, 2019, the Anti-Terrorism Special Tribunal in Dhaka convicted and sentenced seven militants to death for their involvement in the Holey Artisan attack, terming it a disgraceful attack aimed at assassinating the non-communal character of Bangladesh.

The convicted are Jahangir Hossain, Aslam Hossain Rash, Hadisur Rahman, Rakibul Hasan Regan, Md Abdus Sabur Khan, Shariful Islam Khaled, and Mamunur Rashid Ripon.

The tribunal also acquitted one accused as it found him not guilty.

The convicted individuals then filed appeals with the HC challenging the tribunal verdict.

After holding hearings on the death references (lower court documents for confirmation of death sentences) and the appeals, the HC bench on October 30 last year commuted the death sentence of seven jailed militants to imprisonment until death.

Asked why the HC gave them jail sentences until death when the law stipulates life sentence as the highest punishment for the offences, Deputy Attorney General Bashir Ahmed said failing to understand a sub-section of the Anti-Terrorism Act, the tribunal gave death sentences to the convicts, and that's why the HC changed it.

He, however, said 20 people, from home and abroad, and two police officials were brutally killed, which tarnished the country's image abroad and hampered public safety seriously.

So the court handed down jail sentences until death, citing a previous verdict.

The competition will be held in two phases. In the first phase, participants will have to send a video speech spanning 3-4 minutes through e-mail with a Google Drive link. The drive link should be sent by July 30, mentioning the participant's name, identity, age and phone number, alongside the topic of the speech, at "tarkajaal@gmail.com".

The final round will be held in the capital with the top 10 contestants from each category.

A total of 20 participants will be awarded from each category. In both categories, Tk 10,000 will be awarded as first prize, Tk 8,000 as second, and Tk 5,000 as third prize. The winners will be awarded with a certificate and crest.

Each of the remaining 14 will get Tk 1,000 in cash, a certificate, and books.

After the final selection, the information about the prize distribution programme will be announced in September on the occasion of Abul Mansur Ahmad's birth anniversary.

Matiur's wife seeks withdrawal of travel ban

COURT CORRESPONDENT

Laila Kaniz Lucky, wife of former member of National Board of Revenue Matiur Rahman, yesterday applied to a Dhaka court to withdraw a travel ban imposed on her for alleged corruption.

The same court on June 24 issued a travel ban on her, her husband and their son Ahmed Taufiqur Rahman Arnob.

Laila, also upazila parishad chairman of Narsingdi's Raipura, in her application, said she is suffering from different ailments, including heart disease, for which she has taken treatment from India, Canada, USA and Dubai.

The application said the travel ban needs to be lifted as she requires regular check-ups in those countries.

ACC Public Prosecutor Mir Ahmed Ali Salam opposed it saying that she will flee if the court allows her to go abroad.

Judge Mohammed Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain of the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka set July 27 for a hearing on the issue.

On June 24, the ACC placed an application to the court and said Matiur, also former president of the NBR's Customs, Excise and VAT Appellate Tribunal, and his family members were trying to leave the country, so a travel ban should be needed to prevent them for going abroad.

Moreover, they are also trying to launder money abroad, it said.

Earlier, the ACC formed a three-member committee to probe into the allegations brought against them over amassing a huge amount of wealth through illegal means.

The controversy regarding Matiur's wealth surfaced after his son Mushfiqur Rahman Ifat posted a photo of a sacrificial goat on social media and claimed to have bought it for Tk 12 lakh.

Santal community yesterday observed the 169th anniversary of their historic rebellion, commonly known as Santal Hool, in Gaibandha. The revolution lasted eight months and thousands of Santals and others were killed. PHOTO: COLLECTED

15.90 tonnes of rice seized from UP chairman's home

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Local administration has seized 15.90 tonnes of government VGF rice meant for fishers from the house of Angaria Union Parishad chairman Syed Golam Mortuza Sukkur in Dumki upazila, Patuakhali.

Upazila Nirbahi Officer Md Shahin conducted the raid around 10:30pm on Saturday, confirmed the UNO.

A total of 318 sacks of rice weighing 50kg each were seized, he said.

"Nobody is allowed to store government rice in any place except for a government warehouse. A case was filed accusing the UP chairman with Dumki Police Station," he said.

Md Kamrul Islam, Patuakhali district fisheries officer, said the government allocated the rice for distributing among fishers but the UP chairman illegally hoarded it. Contacted over phone, Chairman Ghulam Mortuza, who was not at home during the seizure, said since the union parishad building is far away, he kept the rice at his house to distribute among the local fishers.

Resolving irregularities major hurdle

Says new Biman MD

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Resolving irregularities in selling tickets and improving on-time performance are the two main challenges for Biman Bangladesh Airlines, said Biman's new Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer Mohammad Jahidul Islam Bhuiyan yesterday.

Jahidul Islam Bhuiyan

While exchanging views at Biman headquarters in the city's Kurmitola, he said the national flag carrier wants to eradicate all kinds of mismanagement by agents in selling air tickets.

"Biman Bangladesh Airlines wants to be free from the situation where no tickets are accessible online despite having empty seats on a flight," said the Biman MD.

This was the Biman MD's maiden press briefing since he assumed office.

Jahidul, additional secretary to the Prime Minister's Office, was appointed as the new MD on June 26.

"We want to solve the ticket problem completely so that no more questions arise in the future. That's why we have already warned the online travel agencies," he said.

On the issue of its 10-year fleet plan, the MD said, "Biman will be an airline with 47 fleets by 2034. In the meantime, six aircraft of the existing 21 fleet will be phased out. So, we have to add 32 new aircraft by the next decade to achieve the expansion plan."

"Discussions with Airbus have taken shape. There is also a proposal from Boeing. Since our needs are high, one company might not be able to meet them," he also said.

Stating that Biman will make a profit in the next year as well, he said, "We expect to earn 1,200 crore taka in the current financial year from cargo alone."

Nexus of politicians, businessmen misusing 'indemnity act'

Speakers tell CAB discussion on power sector

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A nexus of politicians and businesspeople has been taking advantage of the "indemnity act" in the power sector and increasing the energy supply cost, which is ultimately borne by the public, said speakers at a discussion yesterday.

Since the government took charge of setting energy prices by themselves, the prices have been increasing irrationally, they also said.

Consumers Association of Bangladesh (CAB) organised the citizens' discussion on their proposed Energy Transition Policy 2024 at the capital's CIRDAP auditorium.

The Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply (Special Provisions) Act, 2010 is commonly known as the indemnity act, as it doesn't require any tender process to allow any company to build power plants, or establish transmission or distribution facilities.

Besides, no officer or employee shall be subject to a suit, prosecution, or other legal procedure for anything done under this act.

The government initially passed the act for two years in 2010 which was later extended several times.

CAB President Ghulam Rahman said it seems like there is a nexus between businesspeople and politicians, which has not been working for public interest.

If the government wants to provide electricity at reasonable prices, Bangladesh Energy Regulatory Commission (BERC) should be strengthened for transparency, accountability and equality, he said.

In the keynote paper, Prof M Shamsul Alam, energy adviser to CAB, said since the government bypassed BERC to set the energy prices by themselves, energy supply costs and prices have been increasing irrationally and illogically.

"The monopoly of the government has been enhancing the scope of corruption. When the private sector gets involved in the market, they also don't face any competition, as they get permissions with the help of illegal transactions and collusion," he said.

In January 2023, the government amended the BERC Act and curtailed the commission's power to set tariffs on electricity and other energies to set them by themselves.

Since then, the electricity and fuel prices have been hiked several times.

"Earlier, BERC set prices after public hearings and let people know the rationale for hiking the prices. But now, there is no transparency, accountability, or clarity in this sector," said Prof MM Akash, former chairman of Economics department at Dhaka University.

"The prime minister announced an all-out drive against corruption. The first step of the drive should be cancelling the indemnity act, which created the opportunity for corruption in this sector," he added.

Barrister Jyotirmoy Barua said the amendment of the BERC Act is contrary to the spirit of the main act.

Former Buet Professor Ijaz Hossain said, "It is absurd that we produce electricity from high-priced diesel or furnace oil during the daytime when we could use solar energy instead."

"We should focus on only exploring gas reserves until we confirm that there is no more gas left. But the government always neglects the process. They always depend on either private or foreign investments," he added.

> The monopoly of the government has been enhancing the scope of corruption. When the private sector gets involved in the market, they also don't face any competition, as they get permissions with the help of illegal transactions and collusion.

9TH WAGE BOARD

SC to hear NOAB's arguments

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday said it will hear the arguments from the Newspapers Owners Association of Bangladesh (NOAB) about awarding the ninth wage board.

The apex court also said it will pass an order to this effect today.

A three-member bench of the Appellate Division headed by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan passed the order during hearing on two petitions filed by the government challenging the High Court verdict that declared illegal the cabinet committee's recommendations in the ninth wage board award.

Yesterday, Additional Attorney General Sk Md Morshed told The Daily Star, "We will give the particulars of NOAB to the Supreme Court tomorrow [Monday] so that it can issue a notice to NOAB for placing arguments on the matter."

The SC may fix a date for further hearing on the issue, he added.

Bangladesh is lagging behind in female-led projects:

SADIA KHALID REETI

MAHIYA TABASSUM

From penning screenplays to critiquing global cinema, meet Sadia Khalid Reeti– who has navigated the complexities of a male-dominated industry with grace and determination. A multi-faceted talent, Reeti wears the hats of film critic, screenwriter, and journalist with equal aplomb, bringing a fresh perspective to an industry often set in its way.

PHOTOS: SHEIKH MEHEDI MORSHED

Fresh from her second stint as a jury member under the International Federation of Film Critics (FIPRESCI) division at the prestigious 77th Cannes Film Festival, Reeti has also secured her place on the Golden Globes voting panel for an impressive third consecutive year. Her sharp critical eye and deep understanding of cinema have earned her respect in film circles around the globe.

You've recently returned from the Cannes Film Festival as a jury member. How would you describe your experience?

It was exhilarating. My second time at Cannes, I was thrilled by the increased Bangladeshi representation, with co-producers Adnan Al Rajeev and Tanveer Hossain present. The festival buzz and interactions with global filmmakers were incredible, showing Bangladesh's growing mark on this prestigious platform.

Congratulations on your third nomination to the Golden Globes voting panel. What's your approach to evaluating films for such a prestigious award?

Thank you! It's an honour and a massive responsibility. The process is incredibly demanding – we're talking about potentially watching over 1,000 hours of content. I've learned to be efficient, dropping projects that don't meet the mark early on. It's about balancing quantity with quality of assessment. Given my background, I pay special attention to the screenplay but I strive to consider all aspects – cinematography, direction, acting – to give a holistic evaluation.

How do you maintain objectivity in your critiques when you have personal preferences as an audience?

It's a delicate balance. Previously, film critics avoided other industry roles to prevent conflicts of interest, but this is changing. Personal tastes inevitably play a role – I prefer fantasy and horror and usually avoid the crime genre. But as a critic, it's crucial to step back and evaluate each work on its own merits. I believe in specialised criticism; experts in cinematography, for instance, can offer deeper insights. If critics evaluate films based on their expertise, we can elevate and diversify the role of film critics.

We cannot survive wearing only one hat in the evolving media landscape; we must wear multiple hats. The key is acknowledging our biases while striving for a comprehensive assessment.

You've worked with major Hollywood studios. Any standout experiences?

The relentless pace in Hollywood makes it hard to dwell on any single project. I'd say working on To the Bone was a highlight. It's currently on Netflix, starring Keanu Reeves. Interestingly, my least favourite project also starred Reeves – Siberia, which I haven't brought myself to watch yet.

Bangladesh's OTT platforms are buzzing with content, but there seems to be a lack of diversity in storytelling. What's your take on the current state of Bangladeshi cinema?

Frankly, we're stuck in a rut of caution, too afraid to explore new territories. The capital-intensive nature of filmmaking and limited resources make filmmakers hesitant to break from established trends, sticking to proven formulas instead of risking innovation.

What we desperately need is more comprehensive market research to understand audience preferences and demands. Until we're willing to take calculated risks, we'll struggle to bring fresh perspectives to our cinema.

How do you view the representation of women in Bangladeshi cinema, both on-screen and behind the scenes?

It's a complex issue. Globally, there's a rise in female-led projects, but Bangladesh is lagging. Even acclaimed films like Rehana Maryam Noor sometimes receive underwhelming audience reception. Ironically, films with misogynistic themes often perform better, even with female viewers. It's disheartening, but producing quality, progressive content may gradually shift audience preferences.

What advice would you give to aspiring filmmakers and critics in Bangladesh?

Do your research. Analyse films, understand the grammar of screenwriting, and then make it your own. No one's born a genius – it takes consistent hard work, expert feedback, and constructive criticism to improve. Remember, cinema is for the audience. And please, avoid shortcuts.

Parambrata calls Pori Moni a 'powerhouse of talent'

Indian actor Parambrata Chattopadhyay's full-length film Ajob Karkhana is set to release in Bangladeshi theatres on July 12. During a recent visit to Dhaka to promote the film, he expressed admiration for Bangladeshi artistes, including Mosharraf Karim and Chanchal Chowdhury.

However, he showered praise on the Bishwoshundori actress Pori Moni as he believes her to be one powerful artiste. "I think Pori Moni is a 'powerhouse of talent'. If she utilises her skills properly in films, she could do very well," said the actor.

Parambrata also spoke about his admiration for Afran Nisho and Apurba's performances. He has also seen Tasnia Farin's work and believes that as a budding artiste, she is doing really well.

Arifin Shuvoo to lead in Indian web-series

Jubilee famed director Soumik Sen is on his way to showcase the story of Bangladesh's Liberation War in his upcoming web-series.

According to several sources, Arifin Shuvoo and Sauraseni Maitra will be seen in the lead roles. The still-untitled project will be in Hindi, and reportedly, Arpita Chatterjee will be the producer. The series will stream on OTT platform Sony Liv.

Rumour has it that the first draft of the script is done, and the initial conversations with the two actors have also been completed. If all goes well, shooting will commence soon.

as a public interest litigation based on a report published on The Daily Star on June 2 headlined "Jobs in Malaysia: Mismanagement left over 3k workers with no ticket to KL".

According to the report, Mismanagement by government authorities and local recruiting agents led to over 3,000 workers failing to reach Malaysia before the deadline of May 31.

Bangladesh Association of International Recruiting Agencies (Baira) initially estimated that 3,000 to 4,000 Bangladeshi workers could not reach the Southeast Asian country within the deadline, set by Kuala Lumpur in early March.

On May 31, several hundred workers waited for hours at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport to catch flights. Many of them went there without tickets after receiving assurances from local recruiters that they would be given tickets on time, the report added.

Latifur Rahman's 4th death anniv today

terrorists during the July 1 attack at the Holey Artisan Bakery in Gulshan in 2016.

Latifur was the founding director of Mediaworld, the company that owns The Daily Star, and chairman of Mediastar, the owning company of Prothom Alo. The newspapers are the leading English and Bangla dailies in the country.

A respected figure in the global business community, he single-handedly built one of the biggest business conglomerates in the country with his hard work, perseverance, and entrepreneurial skills.

Born in Jalpaiguri on August 28, 1945, he began his education at St Francis School and then went to St Edmund's School, Shillong, in 1956. He also studied at St Xavier's College in Calcutta (now Kolkata).

After coming to Dhaka, he started as a trainee at his family-owned jute mills -- W Rahman Jute Mills in Chandpur -- in 1966. The jute mill was the first to be owned by a Bangalee in the erstwhile East Pakistan.

He became an executive and worked there until 1971. But the government nationalised industries in 1972 and Latifur found himself in a very difficult situation. The family also owned some tea estates in north-eastern Bangladesh but after the independence the price of produce was less than production cost.

But he did not give up hope. The same year, Latifur came across a Swiss company and started a trading business. There was no looking back after that.

He established the Transcom Group in 1981. It is now one of the country's largest conglomerates, with operations in the areas of manufacturing, pharmaceuticals, electronics, beverages, media, consumer, food, and insurance.

Latifur was a member of executive board of ICC-Paris, VP of ICC-Bangladesh and member of Brac's governing body. He was a member of the Bangladesh Better Business Forum and Advisory Committee on World Trade Organisation.

He was also president of the MCCI, Dhaka for seven terms and of Bangladesh Employers' Federation.

Latifur was also chairman of the Bangladesh government's Trade Body Reforms Committee and a member of Bangladesh Bank's executive board.

The business icon was an honouree of "Oslo Business for Peace Award 2012" and was awarded Business Executive of the Year 2001 by the American Chamber of Commerce in Bangladesh. He was also honoured with the "Saarc Outstanding Leader" award and Lifetime Achievement Award.

Latifur Rahman married Shahnaz Rahman. They have three daughters Simeen Hossain, Shahzreh Huq, (late) Shazneen Rahman and son (late) Arshad Waliur Rahman.

Teachers go on work abstention indefinitely

Following the briefing, DU authorities, in a notice yesterday, announced the suspension of all exams until further notice citing "unavoidable circumstances".

As part of the work abstention programme, protesting teachers at their respective universities will observe an hour-long sit-in every afternoon to speak to the media and provide updates about the programme.

They had earlier threatened the action in case the government did not meet the demand.

Now, teachers in all 35 public universities, including Dhaka University, Jahangirnagar University, Jagannath University, Chittagong University, Rajshahi University, Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology, and Shahjalal University of Science and Technology, said they will join the work abstention programme starting today.

"The decision to implement the new pension scheme was taken without first discussing it with us -- the teachers who are the primary stakeholders. This is discriminatory and unacceptable," said Prof Zeenat Huda, general secretary of the Dhaka University Teachers' Association.

Prof Habibur Rahman, president of the Rajshahi University Teachers' Association, said, "Our demand is based on the fact that those who join as teachers in July will face problems in the future. We've clarified our stance by holding a press conference during the movement. But the government did not respond to our demands."

Earlier, FBUTA, citing a recently published gazette, said teachers who will be appointed in public universities from July 1 will fall under the new pension scheme instead of the current pension facilities offered by the universities.

They fear that many meritorious students will not join the teaching profession if the new scheme, which they termed "discriminatory", is implemented.

They have been demanding the cancellation of the gazette in this regard through several peaceful protests since May 26.

Speaking on the issue, Education Minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury said the ministry could not make any decisions on the Universal Pension Scheme as it is a matter of government policy and falls outside the ministry's jurisdiction.

"We cannot comment for or against a government policy. This policy applies to all autonomous institutions, not just universities," he told reporters at the International Mother Language Institute.

The minister, however, said that they are aware of the ongoing movement of the university teachers and that a dialogue is ongoing with the protesters to resolve the issue.

Bellingham, Kane

Gareth Southgate's reign as England boss.

Kane then headed in just a minute into extra-time to set up a quarter-final meeting with Switzerland on Saturday.

"That's the desire and the attitude from the boys. It looked tough for a second there but you keep going... Jude does what Jude does and what an unbelievable goal," Kane said.

Southgate looked certain to fall on his sword after steadfastly refusing to make changes to a side that stumbled through as winners of Group C despite scoring just two goals in three games.

Kobbie Mainoo was introduced for his first competitive start in Southgate's only change and he paid the price with another lacklustre display lacking in any speed or invention for long spells.

The one saving grace of England's performances in the group stage was that a makeshift defence had held up well, conceding just once in three games.

However, they were torn to pieces early on by a Slovakia side ranked 45th in the world.

England did not heed a couple of warnings as David Hancko and Lukas Haraslin were wasteful with big chances.

Slovakia finally punished their more illustrious opponents when David Strelec was given acres of room to turn and play in Schranz, who confidently stroked past Jordan Pickford for his third goal of the tournament.

Despite his lack of experience, Mainoo was one of the few players who threatened to spark England into life as the Manchester United midfielder's effort was deflected wide.

The half-time whistle was met with a chorus of boos but Southgate still stuck to his guns and did not make a change until 25 minutes to go.

England did at least improve on a dismal first half and had the ball in the net within five minutes of the restart.

Phil Foden turned in Kieran Trippier's cross but was caught offside after a VAR review.

Slovakia should have doubled their lead shortly afterwards when England gave away possession and Strelec saw Pickford well off his line but failed to hit the target from the halfway line.

Southgate's hand was finally forced on 66 minutes by an injury to Trippier.

With Luke Shaw not match-fit, Bukayo Saka was forced to deputise at left-back to make room for the introduction of Cole Palmer.

England's chances seemed to have gone when Kane headed wide a golden opportunity and Declan Rice smashed the post with a long-range pot shot.

However, there was an incredible twist as Bellingham acrobatically turned home Guehi's flick-on from a throw-in in the final moments of added-on time.

Kane hailed the goal as "one of the best in our country's history, I reckon".

The Brentford striker headed Eberechi Eze's mishit shot back across goal for Kane to power home his second goal of the tournament.

French far right wins

The final turnout in 2022 was just 47.5 percent.

The July 7 second round will see run-off votes take place in seats where there was no absolute majority, allowing the final composition of the National Assembly to take shape.

With Russia's war against Ukraine in its third year and energy and food prices much higher, support for the anti-immigration and eurosceptic RN party has surged despite Macron's pledges to prevent its ascent.

The two-round vote could put the far-right in power in France for the first time since the Nazi occupation in World War II and give 28-year-old RN party chief Jordan Bardella, a protege of its longtime leader Marine Le Pen, the chance to form a government.

This would create a tense period of "cohabitation" with Macron, who has vowed to serve out his term until 2027. Bardella has said he will only form a government if the RN wins an absolute majority in the elections.

In the southern city of Marseille, Nabil Agueni said he had skipped the European elections but voted on yesterday.

UK ELECTION

Govt warns of Russian interference

AFP, London

Britain's deputy prime minister warned yesterday that the country's upcoming general election faces threats from hostile actors such as Russia seeking to influence the UK's democratic process.

The country will go to polls on Thursday, in an election expected to oust governing right-wing Conservatives and put opposition Labour party in power.

His comments came after the Australian Broadcasting Corporation reported that it had uncovered five Facebook pages spreading the same pro-Kremlin talking points.

Some of them encouraged support for the hard-right Reform UK party led by Brexiteer Nigel Farage.

"There is a threat in all elections, and indeed we see it in this election from hostile state actors seeking to influence the outcome of the election campaign," Oliver Dowden told Sky News.

Russia downs 36 Ukraine-launched drones

Claims two more east Ukrainian villages

REUTERS

Russia's air defence systems destroyed 36 drones that Ukraine launched overnight targeting several regions in Russia's southwest, the Russian defence ministry said yesterday.

Fifteen drones were destroyed over the Kursk region that borders Ukraine and nine over the Lipetsk region, several hundred kilometres south of Moscow, the defence ministry said on the Telegram messaging app.

Four drones were destroyed each over the Voronezh and Bryansk regions in southwestern Russia and two each over the nearby Oryol and Belgorod regions.

The governors of the Lipetsk and Bryansk regions said on their Telegram channels that there were no injuries or extensive damage as a result of the attacks, reports Reuters.

Kyiv has said attacks on Russia's military, transport and energy infrastructure are in response to Moscow's attacks on Ukraine's territory since the start of Russia's invasion of Ukraine in 2022.

Meanwhile, Russia yesterday also claimed two more east Ukrainian villages as its forces have had the upper hand over Kyiv on the battlefield for months.

Moscow has claimed new villages in the east of Ukraine regularly for weeks, as outgunned and outmanned Ukrainian forces struggle to hold them back.

Delhi's heavy rains claim 11 lives

Flight operations stutter in the city's main airport

REUTERS, New Delhi

The death toll from this week's sudden heavy rain has climbed to 11 in New Delhi, including four citizens who drowned in submerged underpasses, the Times of India reported, while flight operations stuttered in the Indian capital.

New Delhi, which endured one of its worst heatwaves in history earlier this month, faced the biggest downpour in decades on June 28, with rainfall in a single day surpassing the city's average for the entire month.

The torrential rain caused a fatal roof collapse at one of the three terminals of Delhi's main airport, disrupted flights, flooded underpasses, and led to massive traffic jams, power and water outages in parts of the city.

Nearly 60 flights were cancelled from New Delhi's main airport in the last 24 hours. Operations were largely normal yesterday, with most flights from the affected terminal diverted to the other two, an airport official said.

Hospital generators to run out of fuel in 48 hrs

Warns Gaza health ministry as much of electricity infrastructure decimated by Israeli attacks

AGENCIES

Gaza's few functional hospitals and health facilities could lose power in 48 hours if they don't receive fuel, causing life-saving medical equipment to stop working.

"We appeal to all relevant, international and humanitarian institutions to intervene quickly to bring in the necessary fuel," the Hamas-run health ministry said in a statement.

With much of Gaza's electricity infrastructure decimated by Israeli attacks, hospitals are largely dependent on generators, powered by fuel, for life-saving operations.

Recurring fuel shortages have frequently caused hospitals to go dark, putting patients' lives at serious risk.

Meanwhile, explosions, air strikes and gunfire rattled northern and southern Gaza yesterday, the fourth day of an Israeli military operation that has uprooted tens of thousands of Palestinians.

Mohammed Harara, 30, said he and his family fled their home in Shujaiya with nothing, "due to the bombardment by Israeli planes, tanks and drones", reports AFP.

The United Nations humanitarian agency OCHA estimated that "about 60,000 to 80,000 people were displaced" from the area this week.

At least 1,15,000 Palestinians from Gaza have fled to Egypt during the Israeli bombardment.

The number includes several thousand sick and wounded Palestinians who were medically evacuated, Al Jazeera reports according to The Washington Post, who cited the Palestinian embassy in Cairo.

The rest reached Egypt with assistance from foreign embassies or through a private Egyptian travel agency, which charges large sums to coordinate their exit, The Post added.

"Most remain in limbo, with no legal status and nowhere else to go," it reports. "They are members of a new diaspora of Palestinians, a people already haunted by memories of displacement."

In a separate development, Saudi Arabia's foreign ministry has issued a statement expressing the kingdom's condemnation and denunciation of the Israeli decision to "expand blatant settlement activity in the West Bank", Al Jazeera reports.

The ministry said Saudi Arabia "firmly rejects the continuous Israeli violations of international law and resolutions of international legitimacy".

The Israeli action poses "severe consequences", given the "lack of international accountability mechanisms," the statement said, adding that "these transgressions undercut the prospects for peace and exacerbate conflicts, destabilising regional and international security and stability".

Israeli Finance Minister Bezalel Smotrich's plans to recognise five illegal settler outposts in the occupied West Bank.

In addition to recognising the outposts, Smotrich's plan removes civilian powers related to construction and zoning in one-fifth of the occupied West Bank, in what is known as "Area B".

'Asian version of Nato'

North Korea condemns drills by US, Japan, South Korea

REUTERS, Seoul

North Korea criticised a joint military exercise by South Korea, Japan and the United States held this month, state media said yesterday, saying such drills show the relationship among three countries has developed into "the Asian version of Nato".

On Thursday, the three countries began large-scale joint military drills called "Freedom Edge" involving navy destroyers, fighter jets and the nuclear-powered US aircraft carrier Theodore Roosevelt.

Pyongyang will not ignore strengthening of a military bloc led by US and its allies and will protect regional peace with an aggressive response, North Korea's foreign ministry said. It also said Washington was continuing its effort to link up South Korea and Japan to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (Nato).

POST-COUP MYANMAR

Central bank denies UN report on weapons transactions

REUTERS

Myanmar's central bank denied a UN report that the military government can still access money and weapons for its war against anti-coup forces, saying financial institutions under bank's supervision followed prescribed procedures.

The Central Bank of Myanmar "expressed our strong objection to the UN Special Rapporteur's report", it said in a statement published in a junta newspaper on Saturday. "The UN report severely harms the interests of Myanmar civilians and the relationship between Myanmar and other countries."

The rapporteur on Myanmar's human rights, Tom Andrews, reported on Wednesday that while international efforts to isolate the junta appear to have dented its ability to buy military equipment, it still imported $253 million worth of weapons, dual-use technologies, manufacturing equipment and other materials in the 12 months to March.

The report said Myanmar had the help of international banks, including those from Southeast Asian neighbour Thailand, for its purchases.

Facing its biggest challenge since its 2021 coup against Nobel laureate Aung San Suu Kyi's government, Myanmar's military is caught up in multiple, low-intensity conflicts and grappling to stabilise a crumbling economy.

Militants turning to apps

Some of these groups have over 500 members or followers, who are possibly looking for an opportunity to stage a subversive act, they add.

"Our research suggests that only 10 percent of the militants on bail have been de-radicalised ... The militants on bail are supposed to appear at the respective police stations every month. We do not have the capacity to monitor each of them, but we are trying our best," says CTTC chief Asaduzzaman.

In the Middle East, Al Hafs Al Koraisi took IS leadership on August 3 last year. In separate messages in September last year and on January 7 this year, Hafs asked all the IS-inspired militants to organise and conduct subversive activities, officers say.

Subsequently, there have been a number of IS attacks killing hundreds in Iran, Turkey, Pakistan, Syria, and Afghanistan, they add.

Inspired by the messages, Neo JMB members who have been inactive since the countrywide anti-militancy drive in 2016 and 2017 are beginning to organise.

According to law enforcers, 69 militants, including top leaders, were killed in the raids over those two years.

Neo JMB was earlier found involved in the Holey Artisan café attack in Gulshan that left 22 people dead, including foreigners and two policemen.

After the Holey Artisan Cafe attack, CTTC arrested 200 suspected members of Jamaat-ul-Mujahideen Bangladesh (JMB), 128 of Neo JMB, 230 of Ansar Al Islam, 15 of Huji-B, 120 of Hizb ut-Tahrir, 41 of Imam Mahmuder Kafela, 18 of Jama'atul Ansar Fil Hindal Sharqiya, and 22 of other militant outfits.

"We are keeping an eye on the suspects now out on bail," says SK Imran Hossain, additional deputy commissioner of the CTTC.

NEW LEADERSHIP

According to an intelligence report, the new Neo JMB chief Maulana Abu Bakar is believed to be hiding somewhere in the Middle East.

He spent a period in Afghanistan, and was earlier involved with Harkat Ul Jihad Al Islami Bangladesh, reads an intelligence report.

Bakar got the charge after Abul Abbas Al Bangali, also known as Mahadi Hasan Jon, was arrested in Turkey based on CTTC's intelligence a year ago.

Bakar has tasked some of the followers to buy foreign firearms by collecting funds, says the report.

Besides, the outfit is planning to hack into the cable TV network in different parts of the country and "broadcast" content asking viewers to join it.

It also has plans to bring all its members under a single platform, form separate cells under a chain of command, and reduce its "gap" with other Islamist groups.

Rahmat Ullah Choudhury, deputy commissioner at CTTC unit, says, "There is a very thin line between the Islamist terrorist outfits like Neo JMB or Ansar Al Islam ABT and the so-called Islamist parties. The ideological spectrum of all Islamist parties overlap and they may come to a common platform in the near future."

In its last attack, the outfit on May 17, 2021, exploded a strong IED in front of a police traffic control room in Narayanganj. The members are using Threema, Wickr Me, and Telegram for communication to avoid surveillance, the report reads.

CTTC unit chief Asaduzzaman said, "There is no specific threat. The extremists do not have the capacity to carry out an attack like the Holey Artisan. But they have many sympathisers and supporters online."

to register the consignment with the NBR server, said customs officials involved in the investigation.

However, the importer and Zakaria denied their involvement in the incident.

Chattogram Customs House Commissioner Mohammad Fyzur Rahman has sent a primary report on the breach of the server to the NBR chairman with a recommendation that an investigation committee consisting of IT experts be formed to identify the "cybercriminal gang".

The report said cigarettes were imported from Thailand with a declaration of importing water purifiers. The consignment was registered with the server at 11:45pm on May 20 by using the ID of Zakaria. The data on the consignment was accessed again by the same user at midnight on May 21 to complete the clearing process.

According to officials, an authorised individual can access the NBR server only from a specific IP address. Once the individual uses his user ID to log into the server, an OTP (one time password) is sent his mobile phone for verification. This is done to restrict any unauthorised access to the server.

However, in this particular case, the "gang" accessed the server from a different IP addresses and no OTP was sent to the mobile phone of the official concerned, said investigators.

Customs Commissioner Mohammad Fyzur Rahman said, "The NBR had taken some steps after a large numbers of consignments were cleared from the port by using the IDs of customs officials to evade tax. Use of the particular IP and sending OTP to mobile phone are among those.

"After the latest incident of breaching the server, it seems that those measures are not enough," he told The Daily Star.

Mamunor Rahman, manager (supply) of Hamco Corporation, told The Daily Star, "We are not sure who used our company's name to import the consignment of cigarettes. We have requested the customs officials to probe the incident to identify the culprits."

The use of the login credentials of customs officials to release imported goods is not a new phenomenon.

Over the last three years, at least 38 imported consignments of goods were released illegally by using the IDs of at least eight revenue officials.

Customs Commissioner Fyzur said, "I hope if an investigation committee consisting of experts is formed in this regard, we will get the real picture."

A facility encouraging malfeasance

Provision granting amnesty for black money holders is a disgrace

We condemn the parliament's decision to once again approve a provision allowing black money holders to legalise undisclosed wealth without any scrutiny by paying a 15 percent tax, despite protests over the past few weeks. The provision is set to come into effect from July 1. While the country's highest income tax rate stands at 25 percent, allowing black money holders—many of them accumulating their wealth through corrupt means—to legalise it at a much reduced rate is truly befuddling. Experts, anti-graft watchdogs and even some lawmakers had strongly opposed the move which would send a wrong message to both individuals amassing black money and honest taxpayers.

The message is simple: the law is set in such a way that it favours black money holders over honest taxpayers. The former will no doubt be encouraged by it. And when those who earn their money legally are made to pay higher taxes compared to those who do so illegally, why should they, too, not try to game the system? Because the Awami League government has regularised this budget provision over the years, citing scenarios that defy logic, honest taxpayers (belonging to the higher tax slabs) may be forgiven for thinking they would be better off by not filing regular taxes, and making use of this provision later to pay a reduced tax. When laws are designed to create such discrepancies and encourage immoralities, it is not difficult to understand the moral standards of those arguing for these laws.

Given how widespread corruption has become in the country, the provision would come as a huge relief for the corrupt. They would be assured to know that despite massive public outcries, many in key positions are still willing to bend the rules in their favour. Not only that, they are even willing to undermine Article 20(2) of the constitution to do so. Except in 2020-21 (during Covid-19), the amount of black money whitened through this process has been a drop in the ocean compared to the estimated size of our black economy. The data clearly debunks the government's narrative that providing such a facility is going to bring significant amounts of black money into the mainstream. But even if it did, why would lawmakers accept money made from drug dealing, human trafficking, or other criminal activities being legalised under a special provision in the first place?

Having provided this facility repeatedly, has the government succeeded in reducing the size of the shadow economy? Has it improved its tax system or revenue collection as advertised? Has it managed to reduce corruption and strengthen rule of law? The answer to all these questions is a resounding "No". The government should, therefore, immediately withdraw the provision, and make sure black money holders—particularly those involved with criminal and corrupt activities—are held to account.

Chattogram testing lab remains inoperative even after nine years

It is disheartening that Chattogram's Modern Food Testing Laboratory—a Tk 34.4 crore project funded by the Asian Development Bank—has remained non-operational despite its completion in 2015. The facility, intended to enhance food safety, began trial testing in January 2016. However, according to a report by this daily, the lack of a signing authority has rendered its results useless, as no official certifications of food safety can be made. This is a glaring testament to the systemic negligence and inefficiency that so often stymie the functionality of government facilities.

The laboratory, divided into two sections, is equipped to test a wide range of food items including milk, meat, vegetables, edible oil, etc. It's a pity that such an important and expensive facility would sit idle year after year just because no one in the administration cared to provide the support necessary to make it fully operational. Normally, the first order of business in any such project would be appointing an appropriate signing authority, since no actionable steps can be taken without one regardless of how dire its findings. The second priority would be having adequate and properly motivated manpower. Reportedly, out of the 24 officials initially appointed in the laboratory, only seven remain due to delays in regularising their jobs. So the question is, why would these basic issues remain unresolved even after nine years, and despite receiving operational approval in as far back as 2016?

Unfortunately, we have seen too many cases of vital technical or medical projects languishing after completion of construction to consider the Chattogram case as an isolated one. In fact, the government has a rather unenviable reputation when it comes to operationalising such public-interest initiatives. Among the issues that new projects usually suffer from are staff shortages, lack of equipment, lack of power supply, coordination issues among the relevant institutions, etc.—all of which can be attributed to bureaucratic inertia and mismanagement. The gap between the completion of projects and their actual operationalisation can be overwhelming.

We, therefore, urge the government to remove all barriers to the seamless operation of the food testing laboratory in Chattogram so that it can serve its intended purpose. As well as the problems mentioned above, another issue delaying its operation is that the Chattogram City Corporation has yet to assume control of the lab despite this transition being scheduled post-2021. All this should be addressed urgently.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

8 years of Holy Artisan terrorist attack

On this day in 2016, five militants with firearms, machetes, and grenades stormed the Holy Artisan Bakery, an upscale eatery in Dhaka's Gulshan area, and held the diners hostage before killing 22 people, including three Bangladeshis, seven Japanese, nine Italians, and one Indian.

Can the latest school census data help curb dropout?

MANZOOR AHMED

The Annual Primary School Census (APSC) 2023 report published by the Directorate of Primary Education provides an account of children attending and completing primary education and of institutions at this level. It says little about what students take from primary schools by way of knowledge, skills and values that can make a difference for the next stages of their education and life.

Rumana Ali MP, state minister of primary and mass education, said in a preface to the recently published report that insights from it would help undertake "targeted actions and strategic measures" to enhance the "educational journey and achievements of every Bangladeshi child." Shah Rezwan Hayat, director-general of primary education, added that the insights and recommendations of the report would serve as a "fundamental platform for fostering informed discussions and collaborative actions."

What are the insights offered by the report, and what are the recommendations? There are two pieces of advice: about improving the quality of data for the report itself, and about improving primary education outcomes. Let's look briefly at them.

As the report notes, a post-enumeration quality check of the APSC data, undertaken by the Bangladesh Bureau of Educational Information and Statistics (BANBEIS), showed that there was an estimated error of 3.44 percent in coverage of institutions in the school census. This means that over 4,000 primary-level institutions may have been missed out by the census.

More importantly, the quality check also showed that there was a measurement discrepancy of five percent (plus or minus) between the school census data and the post-enumeration check. The report claims that a probability of five percent error was "negligible" and the results "seemed to be good and acceptable" for policy measures. Actually, the under-coverage of institutions and the error margin do cast doubt on the validity of the findings as the basis for corrective actions and policy measures.

For example, the drop in student enrolment by about 8.5 lakh from the previous year is under 0.5 percent of total enrolment, well within the five percent plus or minus margin. It is also noted in the report that accuracy regarding the data from kindergartens and private schools has been challenging and no data has been collected from Qawmi madrasas. These institutions together are likely to be enrolling one-third of the primary-level students. The declining birth rate in recent years also reduces the number of children seeking primary education enrolment.

The latest Annual Primary School Census report points to problems, but does not provide a full and reliable picture. FILE PHOTO: PRABIR DAS

The report mentions that better methodology and tools such as the Integrated Primary Education Information Management System (IPEIMS) may have helped to correct past data biases, and that the improved tools as well as verification through post-enumeration check should be applied to maintain data quality. These are reasonable advice and deserve serious attention to come out with reliable educational input data regarding students, teachers, and institutions.

At the same time, it is necessary to remember that by its very nature and intended purpose, the APSC lacks outcome data regarding how much and what students learn. The annual school census is far from a comprehensive and holistic picture of primary education.

So, should we not be concerned about dropout and exclusion of children from school? Yes, we should, and the APSC points to problems but does not provide a full and reliable picture. We should also ask what light the school census throws on improving primary-level performance and student-learning outcomes.

Drawing conclusions from the collected input data about institutions, students, and teachers, the report suggests a number of action steps. These are based more on general discourse on education equity, quality and inclusion issues, rather than extracted specifically from the census findings. They include: targeted interventions to engage all primary school-going children more effectively in education; expanding access to pre-primary education for equitable participation across genders; strengthening special needs education with improved resources and teacher training; community engagement; and professional development opportunities for teachers.

These are sound general advice with which few would disagree. But how can these be acted upon with practical strategies, plans, and actions? Along with the input data from the APSC (which needs to be more inclusive and accurate), we also need to have reliable and inclusive outcome information in the form of learning achievements of students, derived from practical learning assessment tools.

In fact, the National Student Assessment exercise that takes place periodically (roughly every two years) since 2011 can be seen as such an instrument. The last NSA report for 2022 was released in June 2023. It revealed that almost half of the students in Classes 3 and 5 had below grade-level competencies in Bangla, and only a third of the students achieved expected grade-level competencies in mathematics. These were results largely similar to those seen from the NSA in 2017 and earlier rounds. In other words, more than half of children who attend and complete primary grades do not achieve the expected basic skills in literacy and numeracy, and the situation has not improved over the years. By contrast, the primary school completion examination (now discontinued) and Class 5 annual examination routinely showed pass rates of over 95 percent.

It has been noticed that there is a greater involvement of education officials and external development partners, much fanfare and public discussion associated with the annual APSC reports than with the less regular NSA reports. The policymakers seem to be more interested in inputs than outcomes, and there is an antipathy towards connecting the two.

Periodic assessment of learning and annual reporting on inputs have not been undertaken systematically at the secondary level, which is under the jurisdiction of a different ministry. But available evidence suggests that learning outcomes at secondary level could not be any better. A reason, it may be plausibly argued, is that poor foundational learning of children at primary level has knock-on effects on later stages of education.

A pragmatic, relatively simple and easily implementable assessment of learning known as Annual State of Education Report (ASER) has been pioneered in India by the NGO Pratham, and replicated in Pakistan, Nepal and a number of African countries. An NSA or ASER model, with adaptation as necessary, developed and applied systematically to school education can be a way to better understand the interplay of learning inputs and learning results. Thus, policy and action can be better guided and implemented to ensure basic education for all children with equity, quality, and inclusion.

As argued by this writer and others, taking the sustainable development goal for education (SDG4) and the education imperatives for scaling the heights of a higher-middle-income country status seriously means that basic K-12 school education must be ensured for all children.

We cannot continue to keep primary and secondary education in discrete boxes and try to plan and manage these separately just because the education bureaucracy has been set up in a certain way. Denial of basic education to more than half of the children should not continue.

Bangladesh on the renewable energy race track

RMG NOTES

Mostafiz Uddin
is the managing director of Denim Expert Limited. He is also the founder and CEO of Bangladesh Denim Expo and Bangladesh Apparel Exchange (BAE).

MOSTAFIZ UDDIN

When deciding where to source clothing from, an increasingly important factor will be energy use as fashion brands and retailers look to reduce carbon emissions in supply chains.

A country's energy mix may even one day override all other issues given the climate crisis we face. Here I look at progress made by five garment exporting countries—China, Bangladesh, Vietnam, Pakistan, and Turkey—in their transitions to renewable energy sources.

China

China, the world's largest energy consumer, has made significant strides in renewable energy development. The country's energy mix is still dominated by coal, accounting for more than 50 percent of its energy consumption in 2021.

However, China is the global leader in renewable energy capacity, with extensive investments in solar, wind, and hydropower. As of 2023, China has over 500 GW of solar and wind capacity combined, with ambitious plans to reach 1,200 GW by 2030.

Hydropower also plays a significant role, contributing about 20 percent to the national grid. The nation has committed to achieving carbon neutrality by 2060. Government policies, substantial subsidies, and advances in technology have propelled China's rapid growth in renewables.

Bangladesh

Bangladesh's energy mix is heavily reliant on natural gas, which accounted for about 62 percent of its total energy consumption in FY 2021-2022. Bangladesh has made remarkable progress in solar home systems, with over five million installations serving rural households. Despite this, renewables contribute only around three percent to the national grid as of 2023.

This has to improve if we are to remain internationally competitive. Our customers will demand that it does. To this end, the government has set a target to generate 10 percent of its electricity from renewables by 2030, but achieving this goal requires significant investments and policy support. The energy mix also includes imported oil and coal.

Vietnam

Vietnam, the third largest exporter of clothing after China and Bangladesh, has a diverse energy mix, with coal being the predominant source, accounting for more than 40 percent of the total energy consumption in 2023. Hydropower is also significant as well as natural gas and oil.

Vietnam has seen a dramatic increase in its renewable energy capacity, particularly in solar and wind power, thanks to favourable government policies, including feed-in tariffs and tax incentives. The wind energy sector is also growing, with projects like the 99.2 MW Bac Lieu wind farm. Vietnam aims to have 30 percent of its electricity generated from renewables by 2030.

Pakistan

Pakistan's current energy mix is dominated by fossil fuels, with natural gas, oil, and coal making up the majority as of 2023. The renewable energy sector is still in its early stages, but the country has significant potential, particularly in wind and solar power.

As of 2023, renewable energy accounts for about six percent of Pakistan's total energy mix, with plans to increase this share to 30 percent by 2030. Key projects include the Quaid-e-Azam Solar Park and various wind farms in the Sindh province.

Government initiatives and international support have been crucial in advancing these projects. However, Pakistan faces challenges such as bureaucratic hurdles, financial constraints, and a need for more robust policy frameworks to attract private investment.

Turkey

Turkey's energy mix is quite diverse, with natural gas (27 percent), coal (25 percent), and oil (29 percent) being the primary sources of energy in 2022. Renewables including wind, solar power and hydro also makes significant contributions.

The country has implemented various incentives, including feed-in tariffs and purchase guarantees, to encourage investment in renewable energy.

However, the transition is challenged by economic instability and fluctuating policy environments, which can impact investor confidence.

Overall, the renewable energy transition in China, Bangladesh, Vietnam, Pakistan, and Turkey highlights diverse paths and challenges. China's leadership in capacity and investment sets a global benchmark, while Vietnam's rapid adoption showcases the potential of favourable policies and incentives.

Pakistan's journey emphasises the need for policy and financial frameworks, and Turkey's balanced approach reflects a strategy of building energy security through renewables.

But what about Bangladesh? We must improve the supply of renewable energy available to our industrial base. Our government, regional authorities, garment manufacturers and international fashion brands must collaborate on this issue to better understand the current state of our energy mix, decide how it can be shifted heavily in favour of renewable energy and then work out what this will cost—and, most importantly, how it will be funded.

Bangladesh has a chance to lead on this issue, but China, Pakistan, Turkey, Vietnam and other garment producing countries will also be looking to boost their own renewable energy use. The race is on.

4TH DEATH ANNIVERSARY OF LATIFUR RAHMAN

Remembering the flagbearer of independent journalism

THE THIRD VIEW

Mahfuz Anam
is the editor and publisher of The Daily Star.

MAHFUZ ANAM

Latifur Rahman—Shamim or Shamim Bhai to all—was an unlikely person to become a flagbearer of independent journalism. But once he did, he was most unswerving about it.

Before The Daily Star, he never showed any sign of wanting to get involved in this complicated and highly sensitive industry. Credit to draw him towards the media goes, as far as I know, to his one-time business partner and friend, Mr AS Mahmud (Mahmud Bhai to me) who convinced him about the importance of this crucial industry. It was my privilege to enjoy the latter's affection through my elder brother, Mahbub Anam, who was his professional colleague in the oil sector from pre-Bangladesh days. It was Mahmud Bhai who organised my first meeting with Shamim Bhai at the Dhaka Club in 1988-89. I really don't know if I had made any significant impression on him, but it seemed enough for him to continue to meet and carry on the discussion for investing in a new English language newspaper. He was a no-nonsense person and thought about whether I would really leave my tenured UN job—at that time posted in Bangkok, Thailand—to plunge into the uncharted waters of Bangladeshi media, which in the 1990s had very few new investors. I think it was our meeting at my apartment in the Thai capital in January 1990 that convinced him that my determination was for real. From then on, our friendship grew and we soon became partners in giving journalism in Bangladesh a new life, with SM Ali, our founding editor, at its helm.

A young Latifur Rahman.

It was in the initial board meetings of Mediaworld Ltd, the owning company of The Daily Star, that the true commitment of Shamim Bhai to independent journalism became apparent. Both Ali Bhai—a very famous and highly respected journalist and editor in the Asia-Pacific region—and I were most thrilled by the rules of the game that Shamim Bhai was enunciating, along with other founding directors, to run the newspaper. Before Ali Bhai or I could suggest it, Shamim Bhai persuaded other directors to collectively declare that the role of the board would be to formulate the overall policy and only monitor the financial aspect of the paper. The full journalistic control of The Daily Star would be totally in the hands of its editor-publisher. Nothing could energise us more.

It would be fair to think that it was as a mark of respect for Ali Bhai that the board of Mediaworld took such a hands-off approach. But when I was made its editor-publisher, following the sad demise of Ali Bhai in 1993, within two and half years of our founding, the same respect and independence was shown to me, proving that Mediaworld board's approach was institutional and not personal.

It was this institutional approach that was the hallmark of Shamim Bhai. The Daily Star must become an institution and everything must function systematically—this was the supreme message of the board. I can say with utmost pride that The Daily Star has a board which is among the most enlightened anywhere in terms of giving the utmost respect to the institution of the editor and allowing the management a free hand in running the newspaper. That is how we started, and that is how it remains till date.

Both Ali Bhai—a very famous and highly respected journalist and editor in the Asia-Pacific region—and I were most thrilled by the rules of the game that Shamim Bhai was enunciating, along with other founding directors, to run the newspaper. Before Ali Bhai or I could suggest it, Shamim Bhai persuaded other directors to collectively declare that the role of the board would be to formulate the overall policy and only monitor the financial aspect of the paper. The full journalistic control of The Daily Star would be totally in the hands of its editor-publisher. Nothing could energise us more.

There are many examples, but two would suffice to tell the whole story of Latifur Rahman's commitment to independent journalism.

Once, Shamim Bhai was contesting to become the president of (Federation of Bangladesh Chambers of Commerce and Industries) FBCCI. His opponent was Yussuf Abdullah Harun. Throughout the campaign, the paper, of which he was a vital leader, gave equal coverage to both. We interviewed both, wrote on both, but never tilted on either side. I went one step further. In every coverage, his opponent's item featured before his. As a contestant, he definitely must have wanted more coverage. But as a newspaper owner, he knew that the public would be watching and judging us as to how we handled the coverage. He never said a word to me about it. That is how objective he had the quality to be.

There was another occasion when a fellow businessman complained to him about some coverage by The Daily Star about corruption, especially wilful loan default and laundering of that money. Shamim Bhai advised him to contact the editor. "I don't run the paper, the editor does," he said. The businessman was shocked and exclaimed, "You own the paper and the editor runs it. How can that be possible?" That was Latifur Rahman.

When Matiur Rahman (Mati Bhai) and I approached him with the suggestion to launch a Bangla newspaper, he immediately agreed and found in Mati Bhai the perfect editor to go forward with it. All his values about journalism that he started with in The Daily Star, he implemented with equal gusto in Prothom Alo. He realised that an English newspaper was necessary, but a Bangla one would reach a far greater audience with the message of independent journalism. He greatly appreciated the extra efforts that Mati Bhai made and encouraged him to take newer initiatives like Prothoma publications, etc.

He would never miss the annual staff meetings of the two papers, especially of Prothom Alo. While appreciating the paper's magnificent performance and congratulating the staff and the editor for it, he would never fail to goad them to aspire for greater circulation, quality and business. When the paper reached a circulation of five lakh, he said, "Why not aim for 10 lakh?" That sort of ambition would require huge additional investment, but Shamim Bhai never shied away from it. When Prothom Alo's digital version became the biggest Bangla news portal in the world, outstripping Anandabazar Patrika of Kolkata of that position, his happiness showed no end. He was usually not very expressive, but on that occasion, it crossed the usual bounds.

There was an occasion when Transcom was about to own a well-known TV channel. Mati Bhai and I were assisting Shamim Bhai. At the very end of months-long negotiations, it came out that there was no official channel to pay the satellite fee and the channel paid it through "unofficial means." Shamim Bhai would have none of it. He said he would never accept that as a practice. We again marvelled at his ethical stance and wholeheartedly supported him.

Following every board meeting, he would join many of the senior colleagues of the paper and spend hours talking with them about any issue that would come up, but never forgetting to inquire about their personal and family situations. Once, a photographer of Prothom Alo suffered a life-threatening accident; Shamim Bhai arranged for him to be airlifted to Singapore and personally paid all his expenses till he recovered. This endeared him forever to all of us.

Today, as we commemorate Latifur Rahman on his fourth death anniversary, we at The Daily Star sorely miss his presence. We miss his warmth and his personal touch in going forward in the cause of independent journalism. He will be remembered for, among many other things, his sterling contribution in helping the emergence and continued success of the two most trusted and respected newspapers in Bangladesh.

8 years since Chotoo, 4 years since Nana Bhai

Zaraif Ayaat Hossain,
grandson of Latifur Rahman and elder brother of Faraaz Ayaaz Hossain, is head of strategy and transformation at Transcom Group.

ZARAIF AYAAT HOSSAIN

To write a piece on July 1 in remembrance of my loved ones is a challenge. The same day belongs to two of them, and maybe that's exactly what they'd want. My clever younger brother wouldn't have had it any other way but to be remembered on the same day as his Nana Bhai for eternity.

Remembering both Chotoo and Nana Bhai today, I think about what a 20-year-old could possibly have in common with his grandfather. It turns out, quite a lot. A calming presence that made everyone feel at home. A quiet confidence that exuded incredible strength, without ever being loud. A tenacious sense of right and wrong. Their refusal to back down when faced with adversity.

One day, when Faraaz and I were kids, we went to see Nana Bhai and Nanu Ma the evening before the beginning of a new school year. That night, he told us the story of his first day of boarding school at St Edmunds. On a cold morning in Shillong, he landed up in school as the new kid, when a student a year senior to him decided to pick on him. The senior student, according to Nana Bhai, was "acting funny" and so he had to do something to stand up for himself. He gave this senior a strong shove to back off, and that's when he established himself as the kid nobody should bully. He told us this story to teach us that we must find the strength to fight back even in our most vulnerable state.

That young Latifur Rahman would then lead a life with the same spirit. Standing up for himself, his family and protecting his loved ones.

Faraaz would go on to stand up to fiends of a greater magnitude as a young man. On July 1, 2016, Faraaz found himself confronted by armed terrorists. With his life in danger, he chose to fight, to protect, to not cower to evil.

Remembering both Chotoo and Nana Bhai today, I think about what a 20-year-old could possibly have in common with his grandfather. It turns out, quite a lot. A calming presence that made everyone feel at home. A quiet confidence that exuded incredible strength, without ever being loud. A tenacious sense of right and wrong. Their refusal to back down when faced with adversity.

On July 1, to remember Nana Bhai and Chotoo is to keep standing by the same righteous values they both lived by. To remain steadfast in doing good while weathering malicious storms, undue pressure and dire circumstances. To honour them is to keep standing up the way they did.

Mr Latifur Rahman, business icon, industrialist, founder chairman of Transcom Group. Faraaz Hossain, the boy who heroically sacrificed his life during the terrorist attack at Holey Artisan Bakery. But to me, to my family, they'll always be Nana Bhai and Chotoo. Nana Bhai as a grandfather, a husband, a father, and Chotoo as a brother, a son, a grandson. Our beloved Latifur Rahman and Faraaz Hossain remind us to keep fighting for what is right.

Remembering both our guardian angels together on this day, the ultimate remembrance of both Nana Bhai and Chotoo is to live with the courage they would want to see in us. I pray their light shines brighter than ever and that the strength they give never fades.

To our family, friends, loved ones, and well-wishers, our deepest gratitude to you on behalf of our family for always standing by us.

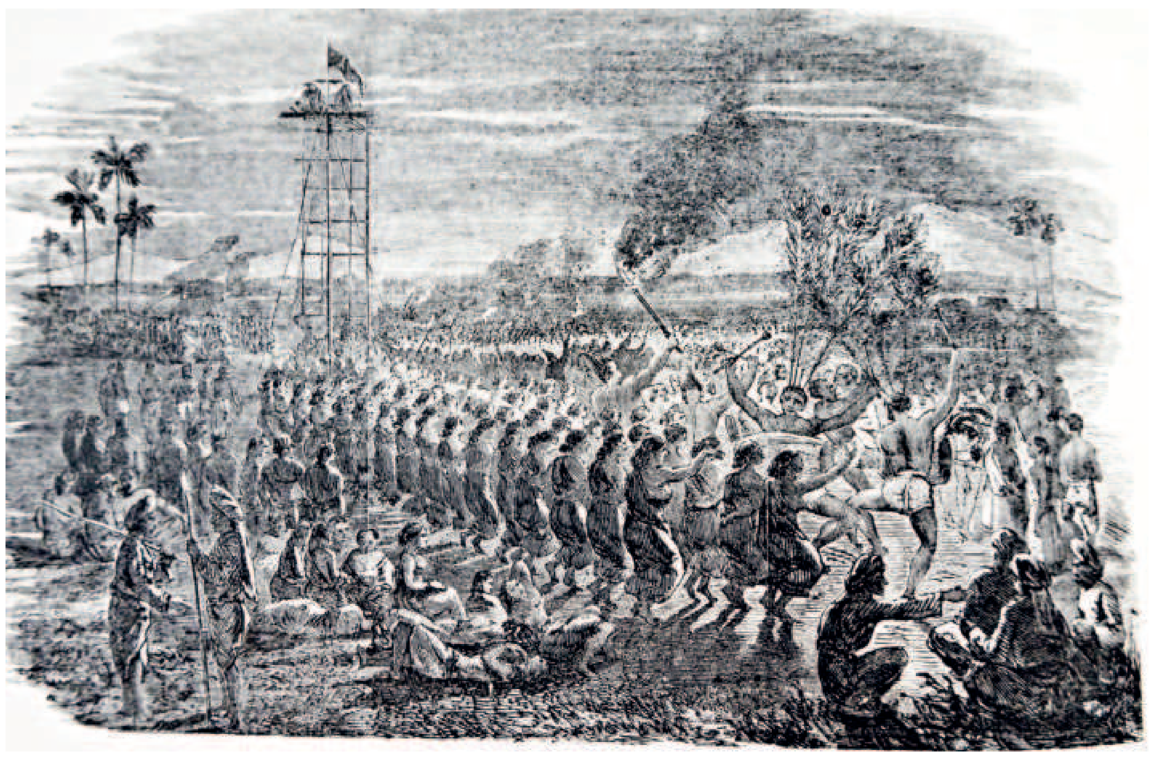
THE SANTAL HUL



A British artist's depiction of a Santal ceremony, one of the few depictions made of the Santals before the Hul, which hints at their rich communal traditions. IMAGE SOURCES: ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

The Hul was and is not just important to Santals alone. It was an event of importance in India's colonial history. The rebellion which consumed the Santal country in 1855 was (after the great mutiny-rebellion of 1857) the single largest rebellion faced by British India's rulers until the great independence movement began in the late nineteenth century.

PETER STANLEY

Exactly 169 years ago, in the jungles of what is now the Indian state of Jharkhand, Bengal Army sepoys fired the final shots in what became known as the 'Hul', or uprising, of 1855. The last of about two thousand Santal fighters died in the Hul's last, anonymous clashes. For six months Santal bands had roamed the jungles of Bengal, burning, plundering and murdering those who had oppressed them. The Hul remains the central event in the recorded history of the Santal people of India and Bangladesh, the subject of songs, poems and stories – and later novels and even films, a heroic episode more celebrated than analysed.

Though of great importance to the Santals, the Hul has been the subject of just a handful of books, though many anthropologists refer to it in explaining how Santal culture has evolved, especially in relation to the nations of which they are a part, of India and Bangladesh. In 2022, my own book on the uprising appeared – Hul! Hul!: the Suppression of the Santal Uprising, Bengal 1855, published in India by Bloomsbury: its first military history. I tried to explain the failure of the Hul by drawing upon an historical source never before used by its historians – the vast and detailed records of the Bengal Army.

I consulted the existing sources (including precious Santal accounts of the Hul), visited some of the sites where the Hul occurred and especially read the huge number of detailed accounts of the rising as it is revealed in unpublished British records. That gave me a new and challenging view of it. Was I merely repeating British accounts? I don't think so: read on.

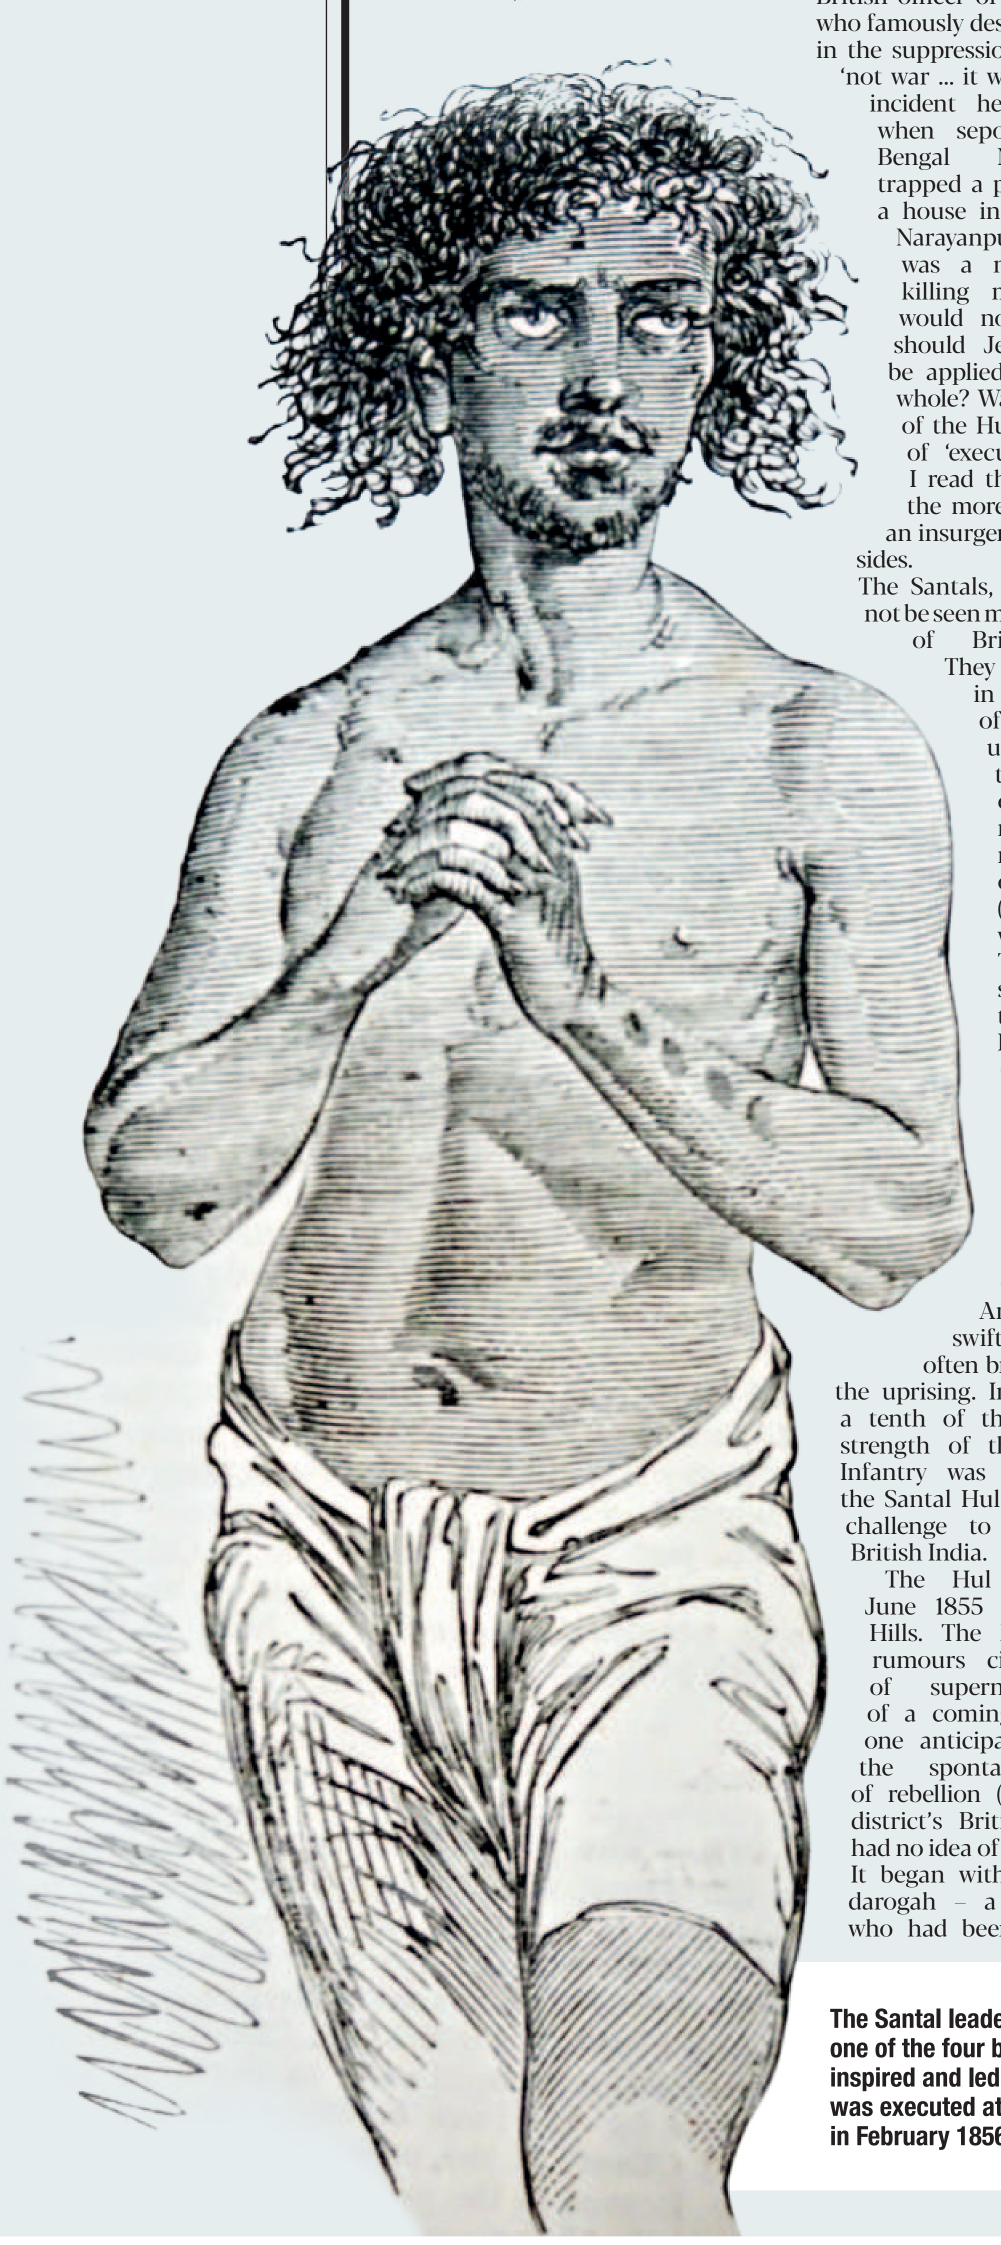
But what right, you might ask, did I, an Australian historian, have to write about an event of such importance to Santal people – especially when I have not a word of Santali? I must admit that my research might seem to be surprising; even offensive. I can only reply that I think that the Hul deserves to be accorded the respect of being treated like the major conflict it clearly was. The Hul was and remains important to Santals, and Santal authors should be writing about the Hul, drawing upon the communal and cultural sources only they can obtain. I offer a perspective that can only help to illuminate Santal historical experience.

But the Hul was and is not just important to Santals alone. It was an event of importance in India's colonial history. The rebellion which consumed the Santal country in 1855 was (after the great mutiny-rebellion of 1857) the single largest rebellion faced by British India's rulers until the great independence movement began in the late nineteenth century.

In describing the Hul, many authors quote Vincent Jervis, a British officer of the Bengal Army, who famously described an incident in the suppression of the rising as 'not war ... it was execution'. The incident he was describing, when sepoys of the 56th Bengal Native Infantry trapped a party of Santals in a house in Narainpore (now Narayanpur, West Bengal), was a matter of simply killing men who simply would not surrender. But should Jervis's description be applied to the Hul as a whole? Was the suppression of the Hul merely a matter of 'execution'? The more I read the British records, the more I saw the Hul as an insurgency fought by both sides.

The Santals, I realised, should not be seen merely as the victims of British repression. They rose in rebellion in the monsoon of 1855, finally unable to stand the oppression of the landlords, merchants and moneylenders who oppressed them (most of whom were Bengalis). They rebelled not so much against the rule of the East India Company (though they were disillusioned at how poorly its officials protected them from exploitation) but it was the forces of the East India Company's Bengal Army which acted swiftly, efficiently and often brutally to suppress the uprising. Indeed, more than a tenth of the entire infantry strength of the Bengal Native Infantry was deployed against the Santal Hul: this was a major challenge to the stability of British India.

The Hul began late in June 1855 in the Rajmahal Hills. The hot weather had rumours circulated, reports of supernatural portents of a coming apocalypse. No one anticipated the scale of the spontaneous outbreak of rebellion (certainly not the district's British officials, who had no idea of Santal grievances). It began with the killing of a darogah – a police official – who had been notable for his cruelty against Santals. The killing sparked a mass movement, in which thousands of Santals joined.



The Santal leader, Sidhu Manji, one of the four brothers who inspired and led the Hul, who was executed at Bhugnadihee in February 1856.

Columns of Santals moved out of the Rajmahal hills, killing the merchants, zamindars and petty rajahs who had oppressed them. Reports of atrocities they committed – a measure of their desperation and despair – reached the British authorities, who reacted swiftly. Within a week, sepoy regiments began marching toward the disturbed region.

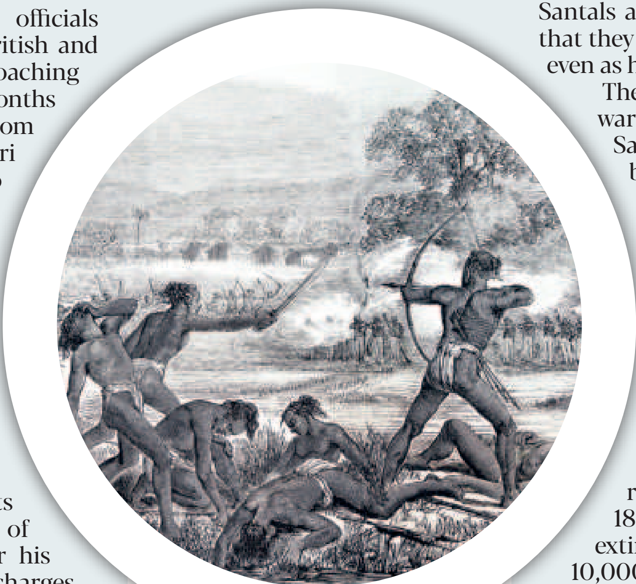
At first, the Santals experienced military success. At Peer Pointee, just south of the Ganges, on 16 July, they routed a force of Hill Rangers sent from Bagulpur. Inspired by the charismatic brothers of Bugnadihee (today Bugnadee, Jharkhand), especially the Santal heroes Sidhu and Kanhu, they believed that sepoys' musket balls would turn to water. Some British officials panicked and refugees, British and Bengali, fled from the approaching Santal bands. For several months a huge swathe of Bengal, from Bagalpur in Birhar to Suri in West Bengal, and east to the Bagiruti River, was out of British control.

Soon, though, the Bengal Army exerted its power. The 7th Bengal Native Infantry marched from Berhampore and as early as 15 July attacked a large Santal force at Moheshpore (now Mahespur, Jharkhand). Sepoys arrived on elephants (provided by the Nawab of Morshedabad, anxious for his security) and met Santal charges with musket volleys, a fight in which perhaps 200 Santals died. In that battle three of the Bhugnadihee brothers were wounded, bravely leading their followers. Sepoy columns advanced into the Santal country from Suri in the south, Bagalpur in the north and from Berhampore to the east. While for a month or so the two clashed almost accidentally, each side then developed a sort of strategy.

Lacking coherent leadership, the Santal bands roamed around the region, looting and living off villages, driving off tens of thousands of refugees, many Bengalis. Gradually, they moved towards the south-west, seeking to cross the Grand Trunk Road towards their ancestral lands in Chota Nagpore. When British movements frustrated this impulse, diehard Santals gathered in rugged jungle-clad hills on the borders of what were then Bhagalpur and Beerbhoom districts, holding out even as they suffered from starvation and disease.

After initial indecision and even panic, the British strategy blocked Santal movements by holding chains of military posts, combined with aggressive forays (which they called 'dours') under energetic younger officers, and then in November and December declared martial law and launched a concerted 'drive' to destroy and disperse the last Santal bands.

The Hul saw many fights between small sepoy forces and large Santal bands, the names of which have usually never been published in English sources, though Santal songs and stories may record them. These included the six-day Santal siege of the post at Koomerabad (Kumrabad, now covered by the waters of a dam on the Mayurakshi River), and the fight at Bissohuwa, somewhere in eastern Jharkhand. There, on 1 August the two sides clashed, at a place I could not identify, but the fight was described by the British officers, and drawn by a surveyor accompanying the force. The officer wrote of Santals who 'arose as if by magic', charging the sepoys even as they fired volleys at them. Many other skirmishes occurred at nameless places. Though often the only accounts of them were written by the British officers – never before published – they give valuable insights into the Santals' experience of rebellion, including making clear why so many risked so much for their communities.



The fight at Bissohuwa, fought on 1 August 1855 and drawn by a British officer whose admiration for the Santals was expressed by depicting it from the Santal perspective, and in distinctly heroic terms.

The Santals acted out of desperation, hampered by many serious shortcomings: they had no warrior tradition or military organisation or political program; their only arms were hunting weapons – bows and arrows. Crucially, they had no accepted commanders, besides the four brothers of Bhugnadihee, whose charismatic leadership inspired the outbreak of the Hul but proved unable to control it.

While the Hul failed largely because the Santal bands abandoned their villages and fields and increasingly suffered from disease and starvation in huge, improvised jungle camps, Santals learned how to fight an insurgency as they went. They used their assets well – they knew their own country and were able to move more swiftly than the slow-moving sepoy columns, moving at the speed of their elephant transport. While at first trusting in sorcery, Santal leaders learned how to direct their bands to stand and fight, even using bows and arrows against musket volleys. They learned the tactics of jungle insurgency: these brave men were not simply the victims of 'execution'.

The Bengal Army 'Field Forces' which responded to the Hul also learned. Sepoys learned how to move and live in the jungle, adopting 'light infantry' tactics, search-and-destroy patrols, bringing in cavalry and even using rockets in pursuing Santal bands. They used river steamers and Bengal's first railway to move troops, supplies and intelligence around the region. British records show that they saw the Santals as an enemy whose courage they came to respect. A British civilian who witnessed Santals attacking wrote admiringly that they 'never dodged but stood' – even as he shot at them.

The Hul was a war, and a 'dirty' war at that. For every report of Santal 'savagery' – they took bloody revenge on those who had oppressed them – there was a report of the troops' 'severity'. Eventually, after the end of the monsoon, columns of sepoys conducted 'drives', advancing across the Santals' lands, breaking up their bands and killing or capturing those still resisting. By the end of 1855 the rebellion had been extinguished, at a cost of about 10,000 Santal lives, most dead of hunger and illness: many women and children.

Although the rebellion failed, it did bring change for the Santals. Recognising that a tribal people needed protection, the Company created the Santal Parganas, governed by British officials whose paternal care contrasted with the indifference that had provoked the Hul. They ruled through the very village leaders who had been instrumental in the Hul.

The Hul was largely forgotten by India's British rulers – they published almost nothing about it. But the Santals never forgot, creating a rich seam of songs, stories and poems about it. In due course, as India's freedom movement grew, Indian nationalist historians re-interpreted the Hul as a rebellion against British rule, one suppressed by 'British' troops. In fact, the Santals rebelled against the oppression of Bengalis, the Hull suppressed overwhelmingly by Indian troops – under British command.

Regardless of how it may be viewed, the Hul deserves to be better known, and not just among Santals. My book Hul! Hul! offers a new view of the Santal uprising, inevitably largely from the perspective of those who fought against it. But even the British records shed new light on the Santals' bravery, ingenuity and resolution in fighting to defend their interests as a people.

Reliance on gamechanger Bumrah key in India's triumph

AGENCIES

Jasprit Bumrah was one of the main architects of India's T20 World Cup triumph and he capped off his tournament as the player of the tournament after the Men in Blue won the final by seven runs against South Africa on Saturday.

Bumrah's campaign will go down in history as one of the greatest individual displays ever seen in the event's history.

Collecting 15 wickets at an average of 8.26, Bumrah finished with an astonishing economy of just 4.17, by far and away the best rate of those to bowl a minimum of 20 overs at the tournament. He joins teammate Virat Kohli (a two-time winner) as India players to claim the Player of the Tournament award.

"I honestly think he's the best seam bowler who has played white ball cricket," former England captain Michael Vaughan told Cricbuzz yesterday.

"If you can tell me a better seam bowler. I know Wasim Akram was special and there have been many others to mention but I just think he's got this amazing action ability and he's got the pace, he's got all the different skill sets and he does it under pressure day in and day out. It's not just two or three times at the World Cup. It's pretty much every single game."

Vaughan put it neatly as Bumrah delivered outstanding displays of his acumen throughout the tournament and propelled his reputation to newer heights. He was immaculate in all three phases of play. He bowled unplayable deliveries with the new ball, disrupted the opposition's momentum in the middle overs, nailed yorkers as well as slowers to knock the wind out of the opposition's sails in the latter stages, and was skipper Rohit Sharma's go-to option whenever India were in a bothersome position.

One could hardly point out an occasion when a batter tried to take Bumrah on as most, if not all, tried to see off his overs and look for scoring opportunities elsewhere.

His economy rates of 4.07 in the Powerplay, 4.75 in the middle overs, and 3.78 at the death were also instrumental in Bumrah winning phases of play. And that assurance he brought gave Rohit and India the belief of winning games from any situation.

Legendary trio's FAREWELL TO REMEMBER

SPORTS REPORTER

"The nice guy who finished first" is the title of a biography on Rahul Dravid, an obvious attempt at wordplay in reference to Dravid's reputation as cricket's ultimate nice guy who went on to become one of the greatest batters India has ever produced.

However, before June 29, 2024, this title was essentially propagating a lie. While Dravid had risen to incredible heights in his playing career, 'The Wall' never truly came 'first' as he was never a world champion.

As a coach, he shepherded India's Under-19 team to a World Cup trophy in 2019, and after taking over the reins of the senior team in 2021, India played two finals in 2023 – the World Test Championship and the ICC ODI World Cup – but once again, his side slipped up.

Up against South Africa, the final of the just-concluded Men's T20 World Cup was Dravid's final chance to be involved in a World Cup triumph for India in any capacity for the foreseeable future, as the 51-year-old had already announced that he would be leaving the post after the tournament.

Meanwhile, for Virat Kohli and Rohit Sharma, two modern-day greats of India and world cricket, the final was their chance to bid adieu to the shortest format as world champions. Both knew what it felt like to lift a World Cup, with Rohit being part of India's triumph in the maiden edition of the T20 World Cup in 2007 and Kohli lifting Sachin Tendulkar on his shoulders after they won the final of the ODI World Cup in 2011 in front of an enraptured home crowd in Mumbai.

But after tasting the ultimate success so early in their respective careers, the duo had to endure the agony of getting close but eventually falling short in ICC tournaments for over a decade. Rohit and Kohli, aged 37 and 35 respectively, are nearing the swansong of their respective careers and, while they had already done more than enough to cement their positions as icons of Indian cricket, failure to drive their team to a world championship as leading figures remained a blemish in both of their careers.

The desperation to win a World Cup trophy was evident, as Rohit wanted his batters to move past the circumspect approach that brought their downfall in previous T20 World Cups and lead by example at the top. Especially, his assault against Australia in the Super Eight, a swashbuckling 92 off 41 balls, set the stage for Australia's eventual elimination, removing the biggest thorn to India's charge for the title.

Kohli, on the other hand, had a terrible tournament leading up to the final. But even though he couldn't get among the runs, he continued opening the innings for India, not dropping down to his favourite one-down position where he averages almost 54 in T20Is. Kohli conceding his superstar status for the betterment of the team is one example of how motivated The Men in Blue were to make sure this time they return home with the trophy.

In the end, Rohit's bold stance and Kohli's sacrifice bore fruit as they both have now hung up their boots in T20Is as World Cup winners. Meanwhile, the place where Dravid had experienced his biggest failure, when India got eliminated from the group stage of the 2007 ODI World Cup in the Caribbean under his leadership, has become the place where he finally became a world champion.

WIMBLEDON prepares for new era

REUTERS

Defending champion Carlos Alcaraz and world number one Jannik Sinner will take their simmering rivalry at the top of the men's game to Wimbledon, where the two young guns will look to prolong seven-times winner Novak Djokovic's trophy drought in 2024.

Even before the tournament begins, however, Djokovic's quest for a record 25th Grand Slam title is under a cloud with the Serb building match fitness after undergoing knee surgery three weeks ago for an injury that prematurely ended his French Open.

Fellow 37-year-old and former champion Andy Murray is also in a race to be ready for what is likely his Wimbledon swansong after the injury-plagued Briton went under the knife last week for a back issue.

With Roger Federer retired and Rafa Nadal skipping Wimbledon to focus on next month's Paris Olympics, the potential pullout of Djokovic would ensure the first Wimbledon without any of the Big Three since 1998.

All eyes would then be on Alcaraz and Sinner as they usher in a new era at Wimbledon.

"I don't feel more pressure about playing a tournament that not one of the Big Three is playing in," Alcaraz said last week before Djokovic arrived in London on Sunday to give fans hope.

Swiatek looks for a breakthrough

For all her achievements over the last few seasons, Iga Swiatek remains largely unproven on grasscourts, but the Pole will have a golden opportunity to claim a maiden Wimbledon title with her rivals hampered by injuries and illness before the Grand Slam.

The five-times major champion has been an unstoppable force since inheriting the world number one spot, although none of the 22 titles have come on the sport's slickest surface.

But fresh from her fourth French Open title amid a 19-match winning streak stretching back to May, the 23-year-old will head to the All England Club primed to go past the quarter-finals for the first time and prove herself as an all-court player.

Even though the Cristiano Ronaldo-led Portugal looked confident in training, they have been a lot patchy on the field as Roberto Martinez's side fell to a shock 2-0 defeat to debutants Georgia in their final Euro 2024 group game. They progressed as group champions regardless. However, as they face Slovenia in a Round of 16 game in Frankfurt on Monday, they will hope for a lot more potency up front, especially from star man Ronaldo who is yet to score in this edition of the tournament.

Misfiring France & Belgium on collision course

AGENCIES

By this stage of the European Championship, favourites France and contenders Belgium would have wanted to be well into their stride and hitting their straps as they enter the knockout stages.

Instead, the neighbours go spluttering into the last 16 and into a head-on collision in Duesseldorf on Monday after both failed to finish top of their first-round group.

France's much-vaunted attack is suffering from a crisis of confidence and coach Didier Deschamps, usually a steady hand guiding the squad, looks unsure of what his next move will be.

Belgium will have had some motivation sucked out of their cause following an astonishingly hostile reaction from their own supporters after they limped into the next stage of the tournament in Germany.

Despite Wednesday's draw with Ukraine assuring them progress, they were subjected to loud barracking from their fans and have since closed ranks.

Captain Kevin De Bruyne did not take kindly to the abuse. His attitude and demeanour will set the tone for the rest of the Belgian side as they look to leave behind them the limp performances from the group stage.

De Bruyne did, however, later mention that they would "need the fans against France". It is understandable as Belgium will be looking for revenge against the French, who beat the Belgians in the 2018 World Cup semifinal to hand their so-called "golden generation" a bitter experience.

For that to happen, Romelu Lukaku would need to find his scoring touch after a number of missed opportunities in the tournament. His record 85 goals for Belgium does not include any from Euro 2024, and overall he has a poor scoring record at major tournaments.

Few would have envisaged a French forward line failing to score in open play in their opening three matches at the tournament.

One of their two goals was a penalty from Kylian Mbappe and the other an own goal from Austria in their opening game.

Deschamps must now decide whether to restore Antoine Griezmann to the line-up and pair him up front with Mbappe.

Griezmann has been a long-time mainstay for Deschamps but was dropped for their last game, a 1-1 draw with Poland, which allowed Austria to emerge as unexpected winners of Group D, which also included the Netherlands.

As things stand, the oldest and most frequent opponents will hope for getting everything right, both tactically and selection wise, in order to get their rhythm back through this crucial encounter.

Latifur Rahman's 4th death anniv today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Today is the fourth death anniversary of Latifur Rahman, founder chairman and CEO of Transcom Group, a well-known and highly respected business house in Bangladesh.

Soft-spoken and humble, the visionary and ethical businessman passed away in his sleep on this day at his paternal home in Cumilla after suffering from lung-related illness for a long time.

His passing coincided with the death anniversary of his grandson Faraaz Ayaaz Hossain. Faraaz, a student of Emory University in Atlanta, US, was brutally killed by Public university teachers across the country will go on an indefinite work abstention starting today as the government has not heeded their demand to reinstate previous pension facilities in place of the Universal Pension Scheme.

Nizamul Hoque Bhuiyan, secretary general of the Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association, announced the programme yesterday afternoon when teachers were observing a full-day work abstention programme at Dhaka University's Arts building.

"The work abstention programme will continue until our demand is met. Classes, exams, and other academic and administrative activities will remain suspended during the movement," Nizamul said while briefing the media.

LEGISLATIVE ELECTIONS IN FRANCE

French far right wins first round: exit polls

AFP, Paris

France's far right won the first round of pivotal legislative elections yesterday with the centrist forces of President Emmanuel Macron coming in only third behind the left after the highest turnout in over four decades, estimates said.

But it remained unclear if the far-right National Rally (RN) party of Marine Le Pen would win an absolute majority of seats in the new National Assembly lower house in the July 7 second round and claim the post of prime minister.

Macron had stunned the nation and baffled even some allies by calling snap polls after the RN trounced his centrist forces in European Parliament elections this month.

That gamble risks backfiring, with Macron's alliance now expected to win a far smaller minority contingent in parliament, making the president a far less powerful figure for the remaining three years of his term.

Projections from prominent French polling firms gave the RN 34.5 percent of the vote, compared to 28.5-29.1 percent for the left-wing New Popular Front alliance, and 20.5-21.5 percent for Macron's centrist camp.

The polling agencies projected this would give the RN a majority of seats in the 577-seat National Assembly after the second round and a possible absolute majority.

In a statement, Macron called for a "broad" alliance against the far right in the second round.

Julien Martin, a 38-year-old architect, who voted in the southwestern city of Bordeaux, said: "These are not easy elections, the results are very uncertain, and the repercussions could be serious for society."

With the French facing their most polarising choices in recent history, turnout soared. The Elabe organisation projecting a final turnout of 67.5 percent, the highest participation in a regular format legislative election in France since 1981.

Israeli forces push deeper into Gaza

43 more Palestinians killed

REUTERS, Gaza

Israeli forces yesterday advanced further into the Shejaia neighbourhood of northern Gaza and also pushed deeper into western and central Rafah in the south, killing at least six Palestinians and destroying several homes, residents said.

Israeli tanks, which moved back into Shejaia four days ago, fired shells towards several houses, leaving families trapped inside and unable to leave, the residents said.

Speaking at the start of the weekly cabinet meeting yesterday, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu repeated his position that there was no substitute for achieving victory in the offensive against Hamas.

"We are committed to fighting until we achieve all of our objectives: Eliminating Hamas, returning all of our hostages, ensuring that Gaza never again constitutes a threat to Israel and returning our residents securely to their homes in the south and the north," he said.

The Israeli military said forces operating in Shejaia had over the past day killed several Palestinian gunmen, located weapons, and struck military infrastructure. On Saturday it announced the death of two Israeli soldiers in northern Gaza.

The armed wing of Hamas and the allied Islamic Jihad reported fierce fighting in both Shejaia and Rafah, saying their fighters had fired anti-tank rockets and mortar bombs against Israeli forces operating there.

More than eight months into Israel's air and ground offensive in Gaza, Hamas fighters continue to stage attacks on Israeli forces, operating in areas that the Israeli army said it had gained control over months ago.

Bellingham, Kane rescue England

AFP, Gelsenkirchen

England escaped an embarrassing Round of 16 exit at Euro 2024 thanks to Jude Bellingham's overhead kick before Harry Kane struck in extra-time for a 2-1 win over Slovakia on Sunday to set up a quarterfinal clash against Switzerland.

The Three Lions have been hyped as one of the favourites to end a 58-year wait for major tournament glory but looked set to go out with a whimper to Ivan Schranz's 25th-minute goal.

However, Bellingham's moment of inspiration five minutes into six added on in stoppage time breathed new life into 'Corrupt officials must be fired, not just transferred'

Momen says their assets should be auctioned off

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The corrupt individuals should be dismissed from their jobs, said former foreign minister AK Abdul Momen, adding that they are enemies of the people and the country.

"Transferring the officials accused of corruption cannot be an effective punishment. Rather, there should be an actual account of the assets of the person accused of corruption; the assets need to be confiscated and auctioned off and the individual promptly sacked," he wrote on Facebook yesterday

"Remember, the government job is their biggest and most powerful asset," wrote the chairman of the Parliamentary Standing Committee on the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Asked about his Facebook post, Momen said corruption had been so pervasive that it was a matter of shame for the country.

The laws are framed in a way so as to not hold government officials accountable. A section of government officials don't serve the people unless they are bribed, he said.

All government officials need to report their income and expenses every year, he said.

Pension protest brings public univs to halt

Faculty, staff strike over new pension scheme; students hold quota demo

STAR REPORT

Teachers went on an indefinite strike over pension benefits yesterday, paralysing public universities across the country.

Also, students at Dhaka and Jahangirnagar universities took to the streets, demanding quotas for government jobs be abolished.

The teachers' strike began yesterday with the academics demanding abolition of the new Prottoy Universal Pension Scheme.

No classes, exams, or admission-related activities were done, most classrooms and libraries were locked, and barely any university buses left the sheds at the 35 universities where teachers and staffers were on strike.

As yesterday was also the first day of a three-day strike by the Inter-University Officers' Federation over pensions, no administrative work was done.

"We will not return to the classrooms until the demands are met," Prof Zeenat Huda, general secretary of Dhaka University Teachers' Association, told a rally on campus.

The protests follow a government decision to implement Prottoy pension scheme for recruits joining on or after July 1 the autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory, or such organisations and their subordinate institutions.

Under the scheme, 10 percent of the monthly basic salary of an employee, up to Tk 5,000, will be deducted and given to their pension fund. The organisation will contribute the same amount to the fund, and interest will be added to it. There will be no one-time gratuity for the retiring employee.

At present, no money is deducted from the salary.

The current system includes a 5 percent annual increment in pension and allows encashment of earned leave -- provisions that are unclear or missing in the new scheme.

A finance ministry official said pension schemes like these are common across the world, adding that single-handedly paying the pension was a burden for the government.

After the government announced the scheme in May, teachers associations termed it "discriminatory" and called for its abolition.

The teachers have also been demanding a new pay scale and the inclusion of professors in the "super" grade.

There are over 16,000 teachers and 34,382 staff at 50 public universities that have nearly 300,000 lakh students.

At Dhaka University, the teacher's association shunned the institution's 103rd founding anniversary celebrations yesterday.

DU teacher Nizamul Hoque, secretary general of the Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association, said the pension scheme robbed them of their sense of jubilation.

Addressing a rally, Prof Chandra Nath Podder said the new scheme was imposed without consulting the teachers.

The situation was similar at BUET, Chittagong, Rajshahi, Jahangirnagar and other universities.

At Rajshahi University, teachers demonstrated in front of the Senate Bhaban and the staff association near the administrative building.

At a rally on an otherwise empty Jagannath University campus, Prof Shaikh Masrick Hasan said there should be no disparity between current and future teachers.

Meanwhile, some DU students marched on campus demonstrating against the reinstatement of quota in

65pc for written part, 35pc for practical

ARAFAT RAHAMAN

The National Curriculum Coordination Committee (NCCC) finalised the evaluation process in summative assessment under the new curriculum at a meeting yesterday.

Summative assessments are used to evaluate a student's learning, skill acquisition, and academic achievement at the conclusion of an academic year.

Sixty-five percent of the evaluation will now be based on the written part and 35 percent on practical activities.

The NCCC, a high-level committee responsible for the curriculum's final approval, made the decision at the meeting with officials from the secondary, madrasa, and technical education boards. Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhury was in the chair.

Confirming the development, Prof Md Moshiuzzaman, acting chairman of the National Curriculum and Textbook Board (NCTB), said, "The evaluation method has been finalised with some minor changes to our initial proposals."

PHASE-WISE IMPLEMENTATION

The phase-wise implementation of the new curriculum started on January 1, 2023. Currently, it is followed in classes one, two, three, six, seven, eight, and nine. It will be adopted in classes four,

HC directive sought for disclosure of assets

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In light of media reports about certain government officials amassing property, a Supreme Court lawyer filed a writ petition with the High Court yesterday, requesting that the government take steps to disclose the movable and immovable properties owned by public servants serving in civil capacities, as well as their family members.

Advocate Subir Nandi Das submitted the petition as a public interest litigation to the HC, also appealing to the court to direct the authorities concerned with the government to adopt guidelines or policies or to enact proper legislation to prevent the accumulation of illegal wealth (movable or immovable) through corruption by the public servants serving in civil capacities and their family members.

Sylhet, Sunamganj brace for another spell of flood

STAR REPORT

People of Sylhet and Sunamganj are facing flood for the third time this year due to heavy rainfall in the region and upstream India.

The water of the Surma, Jadukata, Kushiyara and Sari rivers are flowing above danger level at different points at the time of filing the report.

Around a hundred villages in the low-lying areas of Sylhet's Kanaighat, Zakiganj and Jaintiapur upazila; and Sunamganj's Tahirpur, Chhatak, Dowarabazar and Sadar upazila are submerged.

In the next 48 hours, heavy to very heavy rainfall is expected in the North, North-eastern and adjoining upstream parts of the country, said a bulletin of Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre yesterday.

"As a result, the water level of the rivers in North and Northeastern regions may rise rapidly in a particular time," said the bulletin released at 9:00am yesterday.

Rain and thundershowers are expected over the next five days, said another bulletin from the Bangladesh Meteorological Department yesterday.

Earlier on Sunday, the Bangladesh Water Development Board (WDB) warned of a short-term flood in Sylhet.

The Surma River was flowing 102 centimetres above the danger level in Kanaighat Upazila at 6:00 pm yesterday, while the Kushiyara River was flowing 28cm above at Zakiganj's Amolshid and 88 cm above the danger level at Fenchuganj upazila at the same time, according to the WDB in Sylhet.

5 POPULAR EATERIES
in and around DU campus

ASHIF AHMED RUDRO

On July 1, 2024, Dhaka University celebrated its 103rd anniversary. University life is an experience in itself. Besides the education and the bonds of friendship people share, a notable aspect that shines in every person's heart is campus food.

We spoke to a few students and DU graduates about their favourite campus eateries and here's what we found.

Campus Shadow

The tiny shop is well known for its lemonade, but the best item there is the luchi-daal, which is only served in the afternoon. The luchi is always served hot, straight from the fryer! If you walk by Mall Chattar in the afternoon, the aroma will certainly lure you towards this simple place.

TSC

"Praner Mela" (carnival of life) -- is the phrase used to describe TSC. If you ever had the opportunity to be here for any occasion, you would know that it's a befitting name.

One of the reasons for the popularity of TSC is the affordable food it offers. Whether it's the khichuri or the chicken with rice, students line up all the same. Besides lunch, breakfast and snacks are also served here and the place is almost always jam-packed. Taking a sip of their lemon tea while strumming a guitar is a common sight here.

Hakim Chattar

Standing beside the central library, Hakim Chattar is more popular for its location than the food. The usual khichuri, soup, and snacks such as shingara and pakora make up the menu here. And of course, there is tea.

It is hard to find a time when this place is not crowded. Many students prefer to come here from the central library for a quick bite. On other occasions, it's just a convenient place to sit for a quick meal under the shade of the trees.

Mama Hotel

It is difficult to find someone who studies at Dhaka University but has not been to Mama Hotel. Located just outside of the DU campus, the hotel is always bustling with students. The owners have formed a bond with the students and make them feel welcome. As a result, whether it's a special meal with beef, brain, shrimp, or just a regular dinner with a dash of jhal fry, bhorta, and bhaji -- students of DU rush to Mama Hotel whenever they feel like having a feast.

Charukala Gate

This particular eatery is a temporary shop that only operates in the afternoon. At the Charukala gate, one can find fried chicken. Every day, people line up to get a taste of this snack. With a little bit of sauce, it is a decent offer, given the reasonable price. However, to treat yourself to a piece of this famous fried chicken, you will have to battle through a crowd.

Honourable Mentions

Of course, there are other options in the campus. IBA and FBS Canteen are two places that offer good food, but are overlooked because many feel that the food there is somewhat overpriced. There is also Royal Tehari -- a small shop at Nilkhet, which holds a special place in the heart of DU students, much like Mama Hotel.

Madhur Canteen is a legendary eatery, but the place is usually crowded for its political importance. As a result, students turn to DUCSU Cafeteria, which perhaps offers the most affordable food option on campus. And just across from DUCSU, DU Coffee Hut offers fast food and juices.

This list is by no means comprehensive, and there are several options scattered throughout campus. Everyone has their share of fond memories about them.

ACC finds 12 heads of Brahman cattle in Sadeeq Agro Goat priced Tk 15 lakh found

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Savar

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday raided a farm of Sadeeq Agro in Savar's Bhakurta and found five Brahman cows and seven calves.

ACC Assistant Director Abul Kalam Azad, who led the drive, told reporters that they would investigate how the cattle were brought to the farm as there is a ban on importing such cattle.

He added that they found the goat worth Tk 15 lakh there, whose price is now the talk of the country.

Earlier in the day, the nine-member ACC team went to Central Cattle Breeding and Dairy Farm (CCBDF), Savar, to enquire about 18 Brahman cows that were seized and kept at the farm for rearing.

Sadeeq Agro imported them without permission three years ago.

CCBDF Director Monirul Islam told The Daily Star that three of the 18 cows died. Dairy Farmers' Association bought 15 cows from the fisheries and livestock ministry on condition of selling the meat at fair price during Ramadan.

Sadeeq Agro owner Imran Hossain is the president of the organisation.

Asked whether the cows were slaughtered, Monirul said they were not tasked with supervising it. "We handed over the cows to them as per documents."

ACC Assistant Director Azad said they would probe allegations against Imran of selling the same kind of cattle before Eid-ul-Azha. It would also be investigated whether any CCBDF official is involved in Sadeeq Agro.

Australia doubles foreign student visa fees

Australia said yesterday it had more than doubled the visa fee for international students, the latest move by the government to rein in record migration that has intensified pressure on an already tight housing market.

From July 1, the international student visa fee has risen to A$1,600 ($1,068) from A$710, while visitor visa holders and students with temporary graduate visas are banned from applying onshore for a student visa.

stations in this section operational due to a lack of manpower. Several buildings construed for the railway staffers at those stations still remain unused, leading to their decay.

The Implementation, Monitoring and Evaluation Division (IMED) under the planning ministry made these observations in its recently published Impact Assessment Report on the project.

The project was taken up to revive a 75km old line and build a 32km new track at a cost of Tk 1,101.32 crore.

The IMED report said the contractors used oversised stones on the rail track, making the line risky. It also found that a lack of maintenance and unauthorised level crossings are increasing the risks of accidents.

Transport expert Prof Hadiuzzaman said taking up a project without a feasibility study is not a good example.

"It is not possible to know the traffic demand, best locations of stations and the best possible links with roads without a proper study. Investing such a huge amount in a project without a study is questionable," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

As the BR invested money without assessing the traffic demand, they are operating only one train now which is not bringing enough returns for their investment, said Hadiuzzaman, a professor of civil engineering at Buet.

The Tungipara Express, which was launched in 2019, operates from Gobra of Tungipara to Rajshahi via Rajbari.

The BR could have invested this money in other projects if a proper study was conducted beforehand, he said.

A proper study might have suggested that the project should be taken up a few years later, the expert observed.

THE PROJECT

The rail line from Kalukhali of Rajbari to Bhatiapara Ghat of Gopalganj was constructed in 1932 but the line became inoperative in 1997.

The government in 2010 approved a project to revive the 75.5km section and build 32.35km of lines between Kashiani and Gopalganj to bring Tungipara, the birthplace of the father of the nation, under the railway network.

The project was supposed to be completed by June 2013. But it was completed in December 2018 with 330 percent time extension and 91.61 percent cost escalation, shows IMED document.

The IMED report said that the project saw time and cost overruns as it was taken up without a feasibility study.

It also said that nine project directors oversaw the scheme and the frequent changes of PDs hindered its progress to some extent.

The IMED said the rail line is not being maintained properly. Five years have passed since the opening of the rail line, but the BR is yet to deploy waymen (track maintenance workers).

According to the report, three staff quarters were built at each of the five stations but those were degrading as those were unoccupied.

Also, four stations on Kashiani-Gopalganj-Tungipara route remain inoperative due to a lack of manpower.

The stones used on the rail line is 30 to 40 percent oversised and the amount of stones were not adequate, the report mentioned.

Contacted, BR Director General Sardar Shahadat Ali yesterday said he would not comment on the project as he was not the DG when it was taken up.

He said they have shortages of manpower, locomotives and carriages and that's why they cannot make all stations operational and operate more trains on the line.

Asked about the return on investment, he said, "It's true that we are not getting enough return on the investment now. But we will have the expected return when will be able to operate more trains. However, it may take some more time."

five, and 10 in January 2025.

As per the new curriculum, students of pre-primary to grade three will not be assessed through exams. For higher classes, there will be exams along with continuous assessment.

DRAFTING AND APPROVAL

The NCTB drafted the assessment method in February. However, there were controversies and protests from guardians and teachers regarding written exams.

Following this, the education ministry formed a coordination committee for the evaluation system and curriculum.

The NCTB draft was further revised based on this committee's suggestions. The final draft was subsequently sent to the ministry for approval following the NCCC meeting, according to the NCTB.

KEY DECISIONS IN FINAL DRAFT

In National Curriculum Framework-2021, the NCTB outlined two broad forms of learning assessment: formative (continuous classroom-based assessment) and summative (at the end of an academic year).

Following a major change in the summative assessment, students will now have to sit for five-hour-long tests for each subject: four hours for "practical" activity and one for "theoretical" written test. There will be an interval in between.

According to the new assessment method, 65 percent will be on written tests while 35 on practical activity.

Meanwhile, SSC exams, which take place at the end of the 10th grade, will be conducted by the existing education boards at different exam centres, but the evaluation process will be under the new curriculum, according to the NTCB.

When publishing the report card of SSC, there will no longer use a GPA system. Instead, there will be seven scales to describe the level of competency, with "initial" at the bottom and "unique" at the top.

ADVANCEMENT FROM SSC TO HSC

From now on, SSC students will be allowed to advance to the HSC level even if they fail up to two subjects.

They will, however, receive a mark sheet showing their scores and will need to retake and pass the failed subjects in subsequent examinations to obtain full marks.

TECHNICAL, MADRASA EXAMS

On the other hand, public examinations in some specialised subjects under the Technical and Madrasa education boards will continue to use the old method for next few years, as decided in the NCCC meeting.

Prof Md Mamun Ul Haque, acting chairman of the Technical Education Board, said class nine students under this board will continue to take public exams in four specialised subjects using the old creative method due to the delay in making new textbooks for those subjects.

For the same reason, the Madrasa education board will be do the same.

Turkey arrests 67 after mob attacks Syrian properties

AFP, Istanbul

Turkish police were holding 67 people yesterday after a mob went on the rampage in a central Anatolian city after a Syrian man was accused of harassing a child.

A group of men targeted Syrian businesses and properties in Kayseri on Sunday evening, with videos on social media showing a grocery store being set on fire.

President Recep Tayyip Erdogan condemned the latest bout of violence against Turkey's large community of Syrian refugees.

"No matter who they are, setting streets and people's houses on fire is unacceptable," he said, warning that hate speech should not be used for political gains.

Interior Minister Ali Yerlikaya said the Syrian national, identified only by his initials as I.A., was caught by Turkish citizens and delivered to the police.

Customs, Excise & VAT Commissionerate, Chattogram, without hearing the two companies -- should not be declared illegal.

The respondents – the commissioner and deputy commissioners of the Chattogram commissionerate; and revenue officer of Customs, Excise & VAT, Karnaphuli Circle, Taltola Chowki, Patia, Chattogram -- were asked to come up with an explanation within 10 days

The court also asked them why the commissioner of the Chattogram commissionerate should not be asked to dispose of the matter by strictly following sections 73 and 85 of the Value Added Tax and Supplementary Duty Act, 2012.

The HC bench of Justice Zafar Ahmed and Justice Sardar Md Rashed Jahangir issued the rules after two writ petitions were filed by the two companies.

The bench also fixed July 15 to hold a hearing on the rules.

During yesterday's hearing, the companies' lawyer Ahsanul Karim told the bench that his clients on June 4 sought time from the commissionerate for their senior counsel to appear for hearings.

He said his clients were not heard before the adjudication orders were issued. The commissioner of the Chattogram commissionerate violated the principle of natural justice in passing the orders by not allowing his clients to defend themselves against allegations made in show-cause notices issued on October 4 and December 27 last year and on March 18 this year, the lawyer said.

Deputy Attorney General Nawroz MR Chowdhury representing the government told the court that the companies were given time on several occasions over the last one year to submit their statements before the commissioner to uphold the principle of natural justice.

But they had not done it. They cannot be given unlimited time under the relevant law, he said.

At one stage, Deputy Attorney General Samarebdranath Biswas told the HC that the companies' intention was not to pay the VAT.

Lawyer for the companies, Ahsanul said his clients never said that they would not pay the VAT.

According to an audit by the VAT wing of the National Board of Revenue, the companies have unpaid VAT and consequent penalties of over Tk 7,000 crore. They evaded VAT by presenting lower purchase and sales data in VAT returns and other means between 2019 and 2022.

The audit was subsequently reviewed by a five-member committee led by an additional commissioner of Chattogram VAT Commissionerate, which also arrived at the same conclusion.

The two companies denied any wrongdoing.

Total 11,450 Bangladeshis in foreign jails

Hasan Mahmud tells JS

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A total of 11,450 Bangladeshis including migrant workers are in jails in 31 countries, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud told parliament yesterday.

The foreign minister who is visiting Saudi Arabia, came up with the statistics while replying to a query from the ruling Awami League MP from reserved seats for women, Farida Yasmin.

In a scripted answer, the foreign minister said, according to information provided by different missions abroad, the highest number of incarcerated Bangladeshis are in Saudi Arabia (5,746).

Meanwhile, Portugal, Japan and Belgium have the lowest number of jailed Bangladeshis -- two each.

He said 1,579 Bangladeshis are languishing in Indian jails,

He expressed concern over recent cases where officials accused of corruption within agencies like the National Board of

Rain brings fresh dengue concerns

44 dead, 3,651 hospitalised this year; experts say situation to worsen in July

HELEMUL ALAM

So far, the country has already recorded 44 deaths and 3,651 hospitalisations from dengue this year. With ongoing intermittent rains, experts fear the situation could worsen if immediate actions are not taken.

Data from the Directorate General of Health Services reveals a worrying trend: last year, dengue cases skyrocketed from 5,956 in June to 43,854 in July.

"With the monsoon rains, dengue cases will start rising now, typically peaking this month," said Prof Kabirul Bashar, an entomologist from Jahangirnagar University.

He said rain water is accumulating on rooftops and at balconies of many buildings and also on the streets of Dhaka, creating ideal breeding grounds for Aedes mosquitoes.

"We are getting a huge number of Aedes mosquito larvae in and around houses at Goran, Khilgaon, Mugda, Manda, Rasulpur, Maniknagar, Sayedabad, Jatrabari, Jurain, Donia, and Postagola areas," he added.

Public health expert Mushtaq Hossain stressed the importance of proper solid waste management nationwide to combat Aedes mosquitoes. "Cleaning water containers alone is not enough. Garbage must be buried to prevent rainwater accumulation, which can also become mosquito breeding sites," he said.

He emphasised the need for a nationwide cleaning drive to tackle the dengue outbreak and other health issues.

Community engagement is crucial, with the government leading and providing resources, Mushtaq said.

He also called for a reformed healthcare management system to reduce dengue fatalities, proposing a three-tiered approach: primary, secondary, and hospital care.

The primary healthcare approach for dengue patients involves establishing local healthcare facilities in every city wards to provide initial diagnosis and treatment, enabling early detection and reducing the burden on hospitals, he explained.

He also pointed out the lack of manpower, medicines, and diagnostic facilities at village and upazila levels, which hampers early dengue detection and treatment.

BNP misleading people on Dhaka-Delhi deals: Arafat

UNB, Dhaka

State Minister for Information and Broadcasting, Mohammad Ali Arafat, accused the BNP of spreading misinformation regarding the recent agreement between Bangladesh and India.

"Without understanding all aspects of the agreement with India and without realising it, BNP is spreading misinformation and lies, and by distorting these facts, it is confusing people," he said while addressing reporters at a press briefing yesterday.

The recent agreement between Bangladesh and India is not a new foreign policy for either country but advantageous for both, he said.

Arafat said BNP's claims that the agreement posed a threat to Bangladesh's security due to the transit of Indian trains through the country were unfounded.

He said the agreement explicitly prohibits the transportation of "red traffic", including weapons, explosives, and other hazardous materials.

400 people get free health check-ups

Faraaz Hossain Foundation, SKF Pharmaceuticals hold medical camp in Moulvibazar

OUR CORRESPONDENT,
Moulvibazar

More than 400 people with various health complications got a chance to consult specialised doctors free of cost at a health camp in Moulvibazar yesterday.

The daylong health camp was jointly organised by Faaraz Hossain Foundation and SKF Pharmaceuticals Limited at Manumukh PT Bahumukhi High School of Moulvibazar Sadar upazila.

Mother and Child Private Hospital and Diagnostic Center in Moulvibazar has provided support in conducting the medical camp, said organisers.

Since morning, there were long queues of people at the camp where the doctors provided services.

Husain Ahmed, 49, said, "I've been suffering from high blood pressure for a long time... but due to poverty I could not afford treatment. But today, I could consult a doctor and got medicine from them free of charge.

ফ্রি মেডিকেল ক্যাম্প

Feroza Begum, 65, who has been suffering from asthma, echoed the same.

The camp was held commemorating Faraaz Ayaaz Hossain.

Faraaz has become an epitome of supreme sacrifice for the cause of humanity. His refusal to leave his friends during the militant attack at Gulshan's Holey Artisan Bakery on July 1, 2016 was not only an act of bravery that the world saluted but also set the burning example of what a pristine youthful mind can do when it comes to choosing the right path at the expense of mere mortality.

kind of permission," said Nesar Uddin Ahmed Monju, a ward councillor in North Kattali area.

Contacted, officials of Department of Agricultural Extension said the use of arable lands for commercial activities is on the rise in the region in absence of a dedicated law to protect agricultural land.

Mohammed Nasir Uddin, additional director of Chattogram regional office of DAE, said, "We do not have any legal power to prevent farmlands from being used for non-agricultural purposes. We just give permission on condition that the establishment cannot be built on cropland."

Nasir Uddin, however, claimed that they did not approve the structures built on croplands on both sides of the Outer Ring Road.

School waterlogged for six months

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jamalpur

Persistent waterlogging is disrupting academic activities of nearly 200 students at Khatua Kumri Government Primary School in Sherpur Sadar upazila.

The school's premises and playground stay inundated for nearly six months every year, almost the entirety of monsoon and every time it rains during summer.

The students cannot participate in sports due to the submerged school ground.

Meanwhile, the stagnant water, overrun by water hyacinths, has become a perfect breeding grounds for mosquitoes.

During a recent visit, this correspondent observed stagnant water on the compound. Students were wading through ankle-high water to reach their classes.

"We can't play on our school ground as it remains waterlogged for months," said Shakil, a student.

Guardians have expressed concerns that their children are falling behind in co-curricular activities compared to their peers.

Akteruzzaman, headteacher of the school, said, "We tried to dig a drain to let the water recede, but could not do so due to objections from neighbouring land owners. We made a written request to the upazila primary education officer on June 6 for necessary measures to this end."

Akram Hossain, upazila primary education officer of Sherpur Sadar, said he has received an application from the school's headteacher and necessary steps will be taken soon.

UZ chairman sent to jail in murder case

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jamalpur

A Jamalpur court yesterday sent Raihan Rahmatullah Rimu, chairman of Madarganj Upazila Parishad, to prison in the murder case of fertiliser trader Nowsher Ali in the district.

Chief Judicial Magistrate Masud Parvez passed the order.

According to the state lawyer, on the evening of April 25, 2020, fertiliser trader Nowsher Ali was injured in an attack by some miscreants at Balijuri market in Madarganj upazila.

He later died while undergoing treatment at Mymensingh Medical College and Hospital.

When Rimu's name came up in the police investigation report, he secured bail for six weeks from the High Court. Upon the expiry of his bail period, he sought bail again from the Chief Judicial Magistrate's court yesterday.

However, the judge sent him to jail after rejecting his bail plea.

Dhaka for taskforce to stop workers' harassment in KSA

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh has proposed forming a task force to ensure transparency in recruitment and stop harassment of migrant workers by vested quarters in Saudi Arabia.

The proposal was made during the second political consultation between Dhaka and Riyadh in Saudi Arabia yesterday.

Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud led the Bangladesh side, while his Saudi counterpart Prince Faisal bin Farhan Al Saud led the other side, according to a foreign ministry statement.

Hasan Mahmud requested Saudi authorities to provide special scope for Bangladeshi businessmen to register their businesses there. He also requested special privileges for importing oil from Saudi Arabia.

They discussed strengthening bilateral and political relations and intensifying bilateral and multilateral coordination on issues of common concern, alongside regional and global development.

They stressed the need for the Bangladesh-Saudi Arabia Joint Business Council to step up its activities to strengthen commercial relations between the two countries.

Bangladesh and Saudi Arabia also explored enhanced investment in economic zones and offshore banking.

At the meeting, the Saudi foreign minister assured cooperation regarding Rohingya repatriation, while both sides emphasised united efforts from the Muslim world to stop Israel's brutality in Gaza.

The upcoming visit of the Saudi crown prince to Bangladesh was also discussed at the meeting.

They decided to adopt a joint action plan for the proper celebration of the golden jubilee of Saudi-Bangladesh diplomatic relations next year and to elevate the meeting of Bangladesh-Saudi Arab Joint Commission to a ministerial level.

Transfer, dismissal

Revenue and the police were either transferred or forced into retirement.

"While administrative actions like transfer or retirement might appear promising, they do not sufficiently address the root causes of corruption," Iftekharuzzaman stated.

"In fact, such measures can perpetuate a cycle where corruption goes unchecked due to a lack of rigorous legal consequences," he said.

"The widespread acceptance of minimal punishment for corruption allegations sends a damaging message," he alleged. "It suggests that certain individuals are above the law, which undermines public trust and erodes the foundation of ethical governance," he noted.

Addressing the role of political leaders in combating corruption, Dr Iftekharuzzaman called for a holistic approach that goes beyond rhetoric.

He urged political parties to take responsibility for the systemic issues that enable corruption to flourish, including political patronage and institutional collusion.

"Institutionalised corruption cannot be tackled effectively if political leaders evade accountability," the TIB chief asserted.

"To rebuild public trust and uphold ethical standards, we need concrete actions that demonstrate a genuine commitment to transparency and accountability," he said.

TIB called upon the government to ensure that officials accused of corruption face rigorous investigation and trial, aligning with the standard legal procedures applicable to all citizens.

BNP misleading

"BNP claims that if Indian trains run through Bangladesh, it will pose a security risk to Bangladesh. This is not correct. Clause 3 of the agreement clearly states that 'red traffic,' including weapons, explosives, and dangerous items, will not be transported. Clause 4 of the agreement also states that the movement of goods and people between Bangladesh and India will be governed by the national laws, regulations, and administrative rules of the respective countries," he said.

Arafat also criticised BNP's leadership, accusing them of hindering regional connectivity initiatives and neglecting opportunities for economic progress, such as rejecting the submarine cable and obstructing the gas supply from Myanmar through India.

Arafat urged all to discern the facts and cautioned against falling prey to misinformation campaigns, stressing the importance of informed public discourse on matters of national interest.

Rain brings fresh

Secondary healthcare facilities should cater to at-risk patients, such as pregnant women, the elderly, and children, to reduce the burden on major hospitals and critical care units, he added.

Entomologist GM Saifur Rahman also warned that the current rain patterns will likely increase Aedes mosquito populations due to the abundance of breeding sites. He stressed the importance of destroying these sites.

Applying insecticides is less effective during inclement weather, so main focus should be on destroying breeding grounds," he explained.

Now govt can appoint administrator for UPs

Local govt amendment bill passed in parliament

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Local Government (Union Parishad) (Amendment) Bill, 2024 was passed in Parliament yesterday, introducing a provision for appointing administrators to union parishads after the elected representatives' five-year tenure expires.

LGRD Minister M Tazul Islam presented the bill, which was passed by voice vote. The new legislation stipulates that the government can appoint administrators for up to 120 days after the end of a Union Parishad's tenure.

With the proposed change, no Union Parishad chairman can remain in office beyond their term on any pretext. The current loophole allowing chairmen to stay in office past their term will be eliminated.

The post of UP secretary has been changed to "UP Administrative Officer" under the new law.

Under the new legislation, a competent officer or person will be appointed as an administrator to perform a Union Parishad's functions until a newly-elected council is formed.

This measure is expected to curb the practice of delaying elections through litigation.

The bill emphasises the Union Parishad's role in managing village courts and maintaining law and order, aiming to expand the effectiveness of village court activities.

475 workplace deaths in last six months

Says Safety, Rights Society data

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 475 workers died in 420 accidents at various workplaces across the country in the first six months of 2024.

Safety and Rights Society released the data yesterday after conducting a survey based on news published in 15 national and 11 local newspapers.

In the same period in 2023, around 389 workers died in 287 accidents.

SRS has found that the highest number of workers were killed in the transport sector.

Of the total number, 250 transport workers died in this period, 74 died in service establishments (such as workshops, gas, electricity supply establishments), 66 in agricultural sector, 52 in construction, and 33 died in factories and other manufacturing institutes.

SRS Executive Director Sekender Ali Mina said Bangladesh's production and employment depend on the informal sector, where labour laws are largely unenforced, making it challenging to control workplace accidents.

Supervision by relevant authorities must be increased to control workplace accidents, he added.

New roads put agriculture at stake

120 hectares of cropland being used for commercial purposes

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

Mohammed Sohel, 37, of Golichipa Para in the North Halishahar area of Chattogram city, is planning to work as a transport worker as the four-acre land he used to cultivate as a sharecropper has been turned into a truck terminal and cold storage depot.

"The land owner rented out the land for the truck terminal and coal storage depot, thereby compelling me to look for an alternative livelihood," he told this correspondent recently.

Sohel is not alone. Over a hundred farmers, whose lives solely depended on agriculture, were forced to change their profession after at least 120 hectares of arable land were turned into transport terminals, cattle farms, and factories.

These lands, located in North Kattali, North Pahartali, South Kattali, Halishahar, and Patenga areas, used to be cultivated to produce different crops, including tomato and watermelon, according to the metropolitan agriculture office in Chattogram.

After the construction of two link roads in the region to enhance connectivity, there has been a boost to business activities in the region, which in turn has made agriculture no longer attractive to landowners.

The 12.5-kilometre Port Link Road connecting Faujdarhat and Halishahar, which opened in 2007, paved the way for this transition.

Later, the 15.5km Outer Ring Road, which opened in 2021, connecting Faujdarhat and Patenga, further boosted connectivity and depleted agricultural land.

This correspondent recently visited several points of the Outer Ring Road and observed that many commercial structures have been built on the east side of the road.

"Earlier, after every seasonal harvest, the markets used to be flooded with an array of different crop varieties. But those days are no more," said Ataur Rahaman, 55, a vegetable vendor in Foillatoli Bazar under Halishahar area.

Jahangir Alam, a farmer from North Kattali, said, "Before these two roads were constructed, I used to earn my living by growing crops. Now, I am struggling to make ends meet after the agricultural lands were lost to commercial activities."

The six-acre land he used for cultivation now houses a workshop. At least 70 vehicles can be kept at the workshop at a time.

Elias Mistree, owner of the workshop, said, "After the road opened, most Chattogram Port-bound vehicles started using this road, which convinced me to set up the workshop here."

Any structure can be built on agricultural land after getting permission from the local ward councillor of Chattogram City Corporation.

"However, most of those using their arable land for commercial activities do not come to us for any

CHT PEACE ACCORD

Govt not making progress in its implementation

Says PCJSS report

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Since the Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord has not been properly implemented yet, the situation in CHT has worsened and become very sensitive, said Parbatya Chattogram Jana Samhati Samiti (PCJSS) in its half-yearly report yesterday.

Despite being in power for 16 years now, the Awami League government has not paced forward with the accord's implementation process, said the report, adding, "At present, the government has put the implementation process to a total halt."

On December 2, 1997, the then AL government and PCJSS signed the CHT peace accord to solve the CHT crisis through political and peaceful means.

On April 30 this year, in the ninth meeting of CHT Accord Implementation and Monitoring Committee, it came up with evidential proof that the government did not undertake any initiative towards the implementation of the decisions adopted in the earlier meetings, the report also said.

From January to June this year, 107 incidents of rights violations were reported in CHT, while at least 5,448 Jumma people, including 5,000 men and women from the Bawm community, fell prey to human rights violations.

In such a way, the government has been turning the committee into a mere institution of nomenclature, it added.

The report further said the CHT has been experiencing human rights violations in various forms, such as suppression and oppression by administration and security forces, activities of armed terrorists, illegal land occupation, eviction and communal attacks, sexual harassment, violence, rape and killing, and development aggression.

From January to June this year, 107 incidents of rights violations were reported in CHT, while at least 5,448 Jumma people, including 5,000 men and women from the Bawm community, fell prey to human rights violations, it said.

The report said on April 23, a Rangamati court dismissed the case regarding the abduction of Kalpana Chakma.

After 28 years, the dismissal order of Kalpana Chakma's abduction case in the lower court has effectively granted impunity to the administration from its responsibility to uncover her whereabouts and the details of her kidnappers, the report added.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

I am thankful for everything: JAYA AHSAN

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Just a day before her birthday, Jaya Ahsan returned to Dhaka after completing shooting in Kolkata for her upcoming film Dear Ma. Yesterday, the National Award-winning actress celebrated the special occasion with her family.

Jaya's busy schedule rarely allows her the chance to spend time in the country and with her close ones. In conversation with The Daily Star, the actress spoke about her special day, current projects, and more.

"As soon as I returned home, the hour of celebrations began," she said. "I usually like to stay home on my birthdays, and spend quality time with my family."

From her colleagues in showbiz, friends, and fans, the internet boasted with good wishes for Jaya. "I was overwhelmed with all the love that everyone showered upon me. I am thankful for the lovely wishes and prayers, and for everything."

Her mother likes to cook special cuisine for Jaya's birthday every year. "My mother is always excited about my birthdays," smiles Jaya, "This year she made Hilsha Polao and it was heavenly! To tell you the truth, I was craving for this for a long time (laughs)."

Marking her birthday, the teaser of another project, titled OCD starring Jaya, was revealed. It is directed by Soukarya Ghosal. Jaya earlier worked with the director in Bhootpori , which was released in February. "The name of the film says a lot about itself, and for now, I can say that it will reveal many answers."

Talking about Dear Maa, the actress shared, "The plot of Dear Maa is emotional and conveys a strong message. It is a very sweet story between a child and mother."

Directed by Aniruddha Roy Chowdhury, the film also features Chandan Roy Sanyal and Saswata Chatterjee. This film marks the second collaboration of Jaya and Aniruddha after their much-acclaimed Bollywood web-film Kadak Singh. "Aniruddha da's style of filmmaking is quite different and impressive. I have observed that while working with him in the previous project and he has put a lot of effort into this film as well. The audience will be able to witness it on the screen."

Jaya's experience of working in this film was great for her co-actors as well. "All of my co-artistes are power-packed performers, it was quite challenging to perform with them and enjoyable too."

The actress further added that she would be happier if the Bangladeshi audience could watch Dear Maa. "Whenever my film releases in Kolkata, I always feel if Bangladeshi audience could enjoy this film too, I hope we will be able to make it possible in near future," concluded the actress.

From her colleagues in showbiz, friends, and fans, the internet boasted with good wishes for Jaya. "I was overwhelmed with all the love that everyone showered upon me. I am thankful for the lovely wishes and prayers, and for everything," the actress shared.

Vicky Zahed's horror-thriller 'Ekti Khola Janala' to premiere on Binge

Director Vicky Zahed, renowned for his psycho-thrillers like Redrum, Punorjonmo series, returns with another similar instalment— this time blending horror into a short film, titled Ekti Khola Janala.

The film stars Tasnia Farin and Sallha Khanam Nadia in the lead roles, both portraying the characters of nurses.

Vicky Zahed explains, "This is an international story adapted to the Bangladeshi context. It revolves around two nurses and the strange events they encounter one night. It's an attempt to create something different."

Ekti Khola Janala will premiere on the OTT platform Binge in the first week of July.

Actress Bobby faces charges of attempted murder and theft

Renowned actress Eamin Haque Bobby is embroiled in legal controversy after Muhammad Sakib Uddoja, AGM of YN Centre, filed a case against her, accusing her of theft and assault with the intent to murder.

The case was registered at Gulshan Police Station on June 23, confirmed by Gulshan Police Officer-in-Charge Mazharul Islam. He also mentioned that Bobby and the primary accused, Mirza Abul Bashar, have filed a countersuit. The investigation, led by Sub-Inspector Anwar Hossain, is currently underway.

The complaint also noted that the YN Centre suffered damages worth Tk 1,50,000 and thefts amounting to Tk 1,00,000, which are yet to be recovered.

AMTALI UPAZILA HEALTH COMPLEX

Manpower shortage cripples health service

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Patients in Barguna's Amtali upazila are deprived of proper treatment facilities as the upazila health complex is plagued with various problems including shortage of doctors and other staff.

The upazila health complex serves as the lone government hospital for nearly 2.5 lakh residents of different unions under the upazila.

Only three doctors, including two medical officers, are currently serving at the 50-bed health complex.

At least 28 posts of doctors, out of 31 posts, are lying vacant for a long, hampering health service of thousands of people in the upazila.

Apart from the doctors, about 60 out of 90 posts of Class II staff, including statistician, cashier, store keeper, and 19 out of 33 posts of Class III employees, including ward boy, gardener, cook, security guard and cleaner are lying vacant for nearly three years, disrupting overall activities of the government hospital.

According to the hospital sources, though Dr Faizur Rahman, a resident medical officer joined the hospital on February 29 this year, he has remained absent at his workplace since the next day.

The hospital authorities served him two show-cause notices, asking him to explain the reason behind his absence, and withheld his salary, but he is yet join the health complex.

Local residents said as the upazila health and family planning officer (UHFPO) remains busy with different administrative works, it is quite difficult to manage so many outdoor, indoor and emergency patients with only two medical officers.

In case of any medical emergency, patients need to be taken to Patuakhali Medical College Hospital, about 35km away, or Barisal Sher-e-Bangla Medical College Hospital, which is about 75 km from Barguna's Amtali upazila, they added.

During a recent visit to the hospital this correspondent saw Rushia Begum from Haldia village, who came to the hospital with itching problem, was wondering what to do as there was no doctor at the hospital then.

"We are poor people and can't afford more money to go elsewhere for treatment," she said.

While talking, Amtali UHFPO Dr Chinmoy Howladar said they have informed their higher authorities on several occasions in this regard, but nothing has been done so far.

Contacted, Barguna Civil Surgeon Dr Pradeep Chandra Mandal said usually, doctors posted from distant areas do not want to stay at the remote upazila health complex for long.

adding that the first case logged under the new law was that of a motorcycle theft in the central city of Gwalior, registered 10 minutes after midnight.

"The laws were debated for three months ... It is not fair to give political colour to this big improvement happening after centuries. I ask the opposition parties to support this legislation," Shah said.

Opposition Congress party lawmaker P Chidambaram said the previous parliament session did not hold any "worthwhile debate" before passing the laws.

He said that there was only marginal improvement in the new laws, which could have been introduced as amendments to existing laws.

"The initial impact will be to throw the administration of criminal justice into disarray," he posted on X.

The Indian Express newspaper said in an editorial that criminal justice reform should not be "a one-time solution or one that just takes place in the books", and called for police reform and addressing gaps in judicial infrastructure.

was not greater, it was still a huge setback for Macron who had called the snap election after his ticket was trounced by the RN in the European Parliament election last month.

Whether the anti-immigrant, eurosceptic RN can form a government will depend now on how successfully other parties manage to thwart Le Pen by rallying round the best-placed rival candidates in hundreds of constituencies across France.

The corrupt will face music

Hasina said people should be reminded about Bangladesh opting out of the Trans-Asian Highway.

Talking about the BNP's "anti-India stance", she said it is their double standard.

When the BJP came to power in India, BNP leaders visited the Indian High Commission in Dhaka with sweets and flowers, but they are now talking against India, the PM said.

She said that former premier Khaleda Zia had forgotten to speak about the Teesta water-sharing treaty during her visit to India.

Hasina said the BNP came to power in 2001 promising that it would enter a gas deal with India although there was a shortage of gas in the country. "Why are they talking against India now?"

The PM said she will never do anything against the interest of the country.

She also questioned the source of income of BNP acting chairman Tarique Rahman who "leads a lavish life" in London.

Meanwhile, Cabinet Secretary Md Mahbub Hossain said the government will show no sympathy to the corrupt people.

"Are all the officials in an office corrupt? There are only a few of them. But all the staffers feel embarrassed because of those few people," the cabinet secretary told reporters during a briefing after the cabinet meeting yesterday.

Mahbub said the administration is neither creating any obstacles to taking actions against the corrupt people nor questioning those actions.

"All the mechanisms of the government are always cooperating [with the authorities concerned] to take action against the corrupt people," he added.

The cabinet secretary said the cabinet approved a proposal for the formation of Padma Bridge Operation and Maintenance Company (PLC), reports UNB.

The 100 percent government-owned company will look after the operation and maintenance of the Padma Bridge, he said.

It will have a 14-member board of directors with representatives from different agencies, including Bridges Division and Finance Division.

Currently, Korea Expressway and China's Major Bridge Engineering Company are responsible for toll collection and maintenance of the bridge. The two companies were appointed for five years.

Sylhet, Sunamganj

Sarighat is 35 cm above the danger level.

In Sunamganj, at 12:00 pm, the Surma River was flowing 36cm above the danger level at Chhatak and 11 cm above in Sunamganj town, while the Jadukata in Tahirpur's Shaktiarkhola was flowing 70cm above the danger level.

Some 156 mm of rainfall was recorded in Sylhet town in 12 hours from 6:00am yesterday, according to the local Met office.

The Sylhet region faced the first phase of flood on May 30 due to heavy rainfall caused by cyclone Remal.

Before the flood waters could retreat, the region was struck by flash floods on the eve of the Eid-ul-Azha.

The fresh round of flash floods in Sylhet and Sunamganj is coming at a time when more than 20,000 are still taking refuge in shelters and over a million people are reeling from the previous phases of the flood.

Over in Rangpur, Teesta river was flowing 7cm above the danger level at Kaunia point at 12:00pm yesterday, according to WDB.

The rising water levels have inundated lower lands in the Gangachara, Kaunia and Pirgachha upazilas, causing suffering to residents.

Around 300 houses have been affected by flood since Sunday morning, said Abdullah Al Hadi, chairman of Laxmitari Union Parishad in Gangachara upazila.

Local WDB officials have issued a flash flood alert.

Teesta started flowing above the danger mark at Kaunia point from Monday due to the rainfall in the Indian upstream, said Rabiul Islam, the executive engineer of WDB in Rangpur.

The situation now depends on the rainfall over the next 24 hours, he added.

Nazrul Islam Hakkani, president of the Teesta Bachao Nadi Bachao Sangram Parishad, emphasised the need for implementing the Teesta Master Plan, including dredging and conservation, as a long-term solution to the recurring problem.

The Teesta causes property losses amounting to Tk 100,000 crore every year, he said.

Last week, Teesta was flowing 52cm above the danger mark.

2022 World Cup runners-up into a last-eight tie in Hamburg on Friday as they remain on course to become European champions for the third time.

"We are so proud to once again be in the quarter-finals. We are expected to get there but we must appreciate it and not think that is something that is just normal," said France coach Didier Deschamps.

France's back line was outstanding against Romelu Lukaku and his fellow attackers, and Belgium bow out after what will go down as a disappointing tournament for them.

"It's a shame," said captain Kevin De Bruyne. "We had a plan. We knew they were strong. It's a shame to concede a goal in the way we did."

The French were widely seen as the favourites to win this tournament before arriving in Germany, but they were below par during the group phase.

The broken nose suffered by Kylian Mbappe in their opening game against Austria did not help, and the uncertain form of Antoine Griezmann has been a problem too.

The Belgians were happy to sit deep and did not test Mike Maignan in the first half other than from an awkward De Bruyne free-kick which the France goalkeeper blocked with his knee.

France had lots of the ball, yet often looked untidy, imprecise and rather flat, with Griezmann appearing lost on the right wing.

The breakthrough almost came for Belgium an hour in as William Saliba lost possession on halfway and De Bruyne released Carrasco, who was about to pull the trigger when Theo Hernandez arrived to make a brilliant saving block.

French far-right win a 'lesson' for 'progressives'

Says UK's Labour leader Starmer

AFP, London

The far-right victory in the first round of France's general election is a sign for politicians to better respond to disaffected voters, UK Labour leader Keir Starmer said yesterday.

Starmer's centre-left party is firm favourite to seize power at the UK general election on Thursday, bucking the trend of a rightwards shift in Europe and elsewhere, and making him prime minister.

"The lesson I take from (the National Rally victory) is that we need to address the everyday concerns of so many people," he said as the UK election campaign entered its final few days.

"We have to take that head on and we have to show both Thursday in the United Kingdom and across Europe and the world that only progressives have the answers to the challenges that are facing us in this country and across Europe," he said.

"We have to make that progressive cause but we have to, in making that, understand why it is... that people do feel disaffected with politics," he added.

Japanese official among 11 arrested for price gouging

REUTERS

Myanmar arrested four executives of supermarket chains, including an official of a Japanese joint venture, for selling rice at inflated prices, state media said yesterday, as the war-torn country's ruling junta struggles to stabilise its economy.

The impoverished Southeast Asian country has been in turmoil since its military deposed an elected civilian government in February 2021, sparking widespread protests that have morphed into a nationwide armed resistance.

Authorities said they arrested 11 people, including rice traders and officials of mills and retailers, accusing them of inflating prices by 31 percent to 70 percent from prescribed levels, the Global New Light of Myanmar newspaper said.

In Tokyo, Japan's chief cabinet secretary, Yoshimasa Hayashi, said police in Yangon were questioning a Japanese national. "The Japanese government intends to continue taking appropriate steps while urging local authorities for his early release," he told reporters.

US DOJ to criminally charge Boeing

Seek guilty plea, say sources

REUTERS

The US Department of Justice (DOJ) will criminally charge Boeing BA.N with fraud over two fatal crashes and ask the planemaker to plead guilty or face a trial, two people familiar with the matter said on Sunday.

The Justice Department planned to formally offer a plea agreement to Boeing later in the day, which includes a financial penalty and imposition of an independent monitor to audit the company's safety and compliance practices for three years, the sources said.

Palestinian prisoners face 'all kinds of torture'

Says Gaza hospital chief after release from Israeli detention centre

AFP, Deir El-Balah

The head of the Gaza Strip's biggest hospital said yesterday after being freed from more than seven months of detention that he had been "tortured" by Israel.

Al-Shifa hospital director Mohammed Abu Salmiya was among more than 50 Palestinians released and returned to Gaza for treatment, according to an Israeli minister and a medical source in the besieged territory.

Salmiya said he was put through "severe torture" during his detention, which left him with a broken thumb.

"Prisoners are subjected to all kinds of torture," he told a press conference. "Several inmates died in interrogation centres and were deprived of food and medicine."

"For two months no prisoner ate more than a loaf of bread a day," said Salmiya.

"Detainees were subjected to physical and psychological humiliation."

The medical chief said no charge had ever been made against him. Israeli forces detained Salmiya during one of a number of raids on Al-Shifa.

The hospital has largely been reduced to rubble by successive raids since Israel launched its assault on Gaza.

Salmiya and the other freed detainees crossed back into Gaza from Israel just east of Khan Yunis, a medical source at the Al-Aqsa hospital in Deir al-Balah told AFP.

Spain SC denies amnesty for Catalan separatist

AFP, Madrid

Spain's top court yesterday refused to grant an amnesty to Catalan separatist leader Carles Puigdemont on a charge of misusing public funds, maintaining arrest warrants over his failed 2017 secession attempt.

Spanish MPs in May passed an amnesty law aimed at drawing a line under years of efforts to prosecute those involved in the botched secession bid.

Blocking the amnesty for Puigdemont could complicate life for Spain's Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez, who relied on Catalan parties to secure a new term in November.

UKRAINE DRONE ATTACKS

Russia border regions report power cuts

AFP, Moscow

Officials in Russian regions bordering Ukraine reported power cuts and water supply issues yesterday after deadly drone attacks by Kyiv.

The attacks and shelling on the border region of Belgorod over the past day killed a four-year-old girl and wounded seven people, regional governor Vyacheslav Gladkov said.

Ukraine regularly targets Russian border regions with drones, claiming attacks on energy facilities and ammunition depots.

Why can't the NBR protect its server?

Its vulnerability to hacking has emerged as a serious security threat

The ease and frequency with which cybercriminals continue to breach the National Board of Revenue (NBR) server is disquieting. According to a report by this daily, a cybercriminal gang attempted to release a container of foreign cigarettes from Chattogram Port after breaching the NBR server with the login credentials of a customs official. Acting on a tip-off, officials seized the container loaded with 50 lakh sticks of cigarettes worth about Tk 5 crore. The breach of the server came to light on Saturday after an investigation into the incident.

Despite the successful intervention, what worries us is that the breach could have led to something far more sinister. It shows once again the vulnerability of the NBR server to hacking which is proving increasingly difficult to address. Reportedly, following previous incidents of server breach, the NBR took some steps like the use of particular login IP and sending OTP to mobile phones of officials with proper authorisations. However, the latest breach has demonstrated that these measures are not enough. Criminals somehow managed to use the login credentials of a deputy commissioner of Chattogram Customs House to register the consignment with the NBR server, and also to access the server from a different IP address, while no OTP was sent to the mobile phone of the official concerned.

Over the last few years, at least 38 imported consignments of goods were released illegally by using the IDs of at least eight revenue officials. Investigators said a cybercriminal gang was involved in those incidents; however, they failed to identify the gang. After a few such incidents in 2022, it was discovered that earlier measures taken by the NBR had been insufficient to prevent its servers from being breached. The institution itself admitted that its technological safeguards could not thwart them. Even though these concerns have been well-known, the fact that the authorities have been unable to address them since is unacceptable. Another major concern is that despite repeated breaches, the probe committees that have been formed failed to identify the perpetrators or answer many critical questions raised by the incidents.

The entire security system of the NBR seems to be way below par, and the danger that it poses to our national security is disturbing. Against this backdrop, the NBR should urgently stamp down on such breaches by strengthening the security of its servers. Customs officials and others should be more vigilant about cybercrimes. And considering the gravity of the threat posed by such crimes, the authorities should consider involving independent experts who can look into what's really happening and suggest solutions.

Protect Tengragiri forest at all costs

We can't afford to lose the 'second Sundarbans' to timber thieves

We are outraged to learn that another reserved forest is being plundered by timber thieves who are felling and stealing trees indiscriminately, with no visible steps to stop them. According to a report by Prothom Alo, an organised criminal gang has been stealing trees from the Tengragiri mangrove forest and setting the stumps on fire to destroy evidence, in the process causing damage to the trees that still remain standing. Locals complained that this has been going on for a long time, alleging that these thieves are working in cohort with forest officials.

The Tengragiri forest, situated along the coast of the Bay of Bengal, stretches from Taltali upazila of Barguna to Kuakata in Patuakhali, covering 13,644 acres of area, according to data from the Forest Department. In 1960, it was designated as a reserved forest based on a survey done in 1927. Home to an incredible biodiversity system, Tengragiri is the second largest mangrove forest in Bangladesh, and is thus known as the "second Sundarbans."

Such an invaluable gift of nature—which, much like the Sundarbans, acts as a natural barrier to calamities and protects the locals—already faces a host of threats to its survival, such as the rising sea level and increasing salinity due to global warming, erosion, etc. Its chances of survival are being further jeopardised because of the greed and recklessness of local influentials. A recent visit has revealed that 3,000 trees have been felled and stolen in the forest's Behular Char area. According to the Prothom Alo report, in March, a fire broke out there and burned as many as 10,000 trees, damaging a lot of others. What really puzzles us is that after the fire was reported, it took local forest officials 18 hours to reach the scene and bring the fire under control. Another fire incident happened in the Disirkilla area in April, but that was put out quickly enough, so the damage was minimal.

When asked about their failure to prevent tree robbery and frequent fire incidents, forest officials in Tengragiri cited lack of manpower and necessary resources. This seems to be their go-to excuse whenever there are reports of timber theft from reserved forests. We must ask: how difficult is it to ramp up the capacity of the Forest Department so that it can protect at-risk forest areas? Or is the concept of "reserved forest" lost on them? This lackadaisical attitude is totally unacceptable, especially considering Bangladesh's fast-depleting forest coverage. We urge the authorities to ensure that no further damage is done to what's left of our precious forests.

More women in construction sector should be our next goal

Bangladesh's economy has witnessed remarkable growth, solidifying it as one of the fastest growing economies worldwide. According to the Bangladesh Economic Review 2023, the construction sector significantly contributes to this growth—approximately 6.41 percent in 2023. Construction's share within the industry sector and growth is on the rise, with the growth rate increasing to 8.71 percent in FY2021-22, compared to 8.08 percent in FY2020-21.

As the construction sector expands, it demands more labour. According to the Labour Force Survey 2022, construction is the fifth largest industry in terms of employment in Bangladesh, with about 5.44 percent of the employed population working in this sector. A study conducted by Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS) projects that the construction industry is expected to require approximately 90 lakh workers by 2030. But among the top five employment-generating industries, the construction sector ranks second to last in terms of female employment. Only 0.4 percent of women are employed in this sector, compared to 8.18 percent of men. With female labour force participation in Bangladesh increasing from 36.3 percent in 2016-17 to 42.7 percent in 2022, the expanding construction sector presents a significant opportunity to accommodate more female workers.

> To increase female participation and to create a more inclusive environment in the construction industry, several essential actions should be taken to overcome the challenges.

Additionally, with the country's LDC graduation and the anticipated decline in RMG exports, exploring sectors like construction is crucial for accommodating the expected structural shift in labour dynamics. The rise of automation and Fourth Industrial Revolution (4IR) technology highlights the need to focus on technology and skills-based occupations for women.

The construction sector in Bangladesh is highly informal—78.42 percent of female workers here are employed under verbal agreements.

According to the Labour Force Survey 2016-17, females in the construction sector are primarily concentrated in lower tier jobs: 31.23 percent as civil engineering labourers, 22.15 percent as building construction workers, and 18.27 percent as bricklayers. Studies found that women also work in senior management and administrative roles, accounting for approximately 7.1 percent and 4.3 percent of total female employment in the sector, respectively. Across all occupations, most female workers are either unskilled (53 percent) or semi-skilled (17 percent). According to the findings in the Construction Industry Skills Council (CISC) Employers surveys in 2018 and 2020, female workers are considered less productive than males.

The construction sector is highly informal; 78.42 percent of female workers are employed as per verbal agreements. Only 0.3 percent of female employees have access to toilets and sanitation facilities, and 1.88 percent have maternity leave benefits. This sector is inherently hazardous due to the nature of its work, yet only one percent of female workers have access to safety gear. Additionally, just 0.78 percent receive transportation and food subsidies, and 0.66 percent benefit from daycare facilities.

Despite policies to boost women's participation in the labour force, there are no gender-specific policies in the construction sector. The Public Procurement Rule, 2008, and Occupational Health and Safety Policy, 2013 ensure workplace safety but lack gender provisions. The labour law addresses critical women's issues like hygiene, maternity leave, medical facilities, and working hours, but enforcement is challenging in informal sectors like construction.

Women are largely confined to unskilled jobs like brick-breaking and excavation due to a substantial skills gap and lack of access to training programmes. The sector's high informality—characterised by irregular recruitment, work hours, and payment methods—limits job stability. Additionally, mobility and transportation issues, coupled with inadequate on site infrastructure and security concerns, deter women from long term-roles. The work environment is often abusive, with frequent conduct violations, resistance to female leadership, and harassment. Unsafe conditions and inadequate accommodations, such as the lack of separate bathrooms and resting areas, further exacerbate these difficulties. Gender based violence, including sexual harassment and physical assault, remains a significant barrier, with limited avenues for complaint. Wage exploitation is prevalent, with female workers often paid less than their male counterparts for similar work. Societal norms and gender bias further discourage female participation, with industry stakeholders perceiving women as less productive and costlier due to additional safety and security needs. Barriers related to marriage, pregnancy, and care work, combined with a lack of role models and representation in workers' unions, further limit women's opportunities and perpetuate their marginalisation in the construction sector.

To increase female participation and to create a more inclusive environment in the construction industry, several essential actions should be taken to overcome the challenges. Firstly, establishing a comprehensive workforce database, gradually formalising the sector through structured recruitment, fair wages, standard work hours, proper implementation of well-defined health, safety, and compensation policies, and an institutional body addressing workplace abuse and harassment are crucial.

Secondly, promoting female participation through skills training incentives and creating a gender responsive ecosystem with standard wages, safety measures, maternity benefits, and flexible work hours are also extremely important. Ensuring that training programmes include 30 percent female participation as mandated by the government and declaring minimum wages for entry-level jobs should be considered.

Thirdly, streamlining the labour hiring processes for contractors and subcontractors, maintaining a worker database with national ID numbers to identify wage gaps, and adding specific clauses to labour laws addressing the construction sector-related concerns are vital. The Ministry of Women and Children's Affairs should play a significant role in this regard, with private actors and labour organisations advocating for workers' needs. Finally, state owned insurance companies should offer workers injury packages.

The construction sector has the potential to increase female workforce participation, ensuring gender parity and aligning with three Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs 1, 5, and 8). Occupations in this sector are predominantly male-centric across all tiers, underscoring gender bias and stigma, necessitating considerable attention from the government and policymakers. Implementing the above recommendations can help make the construction sector a leading example of gender parity and inclusivity, driving sustainable development and economic progress in Bangladesh.

Celebrating the legacy of Prof Yunus

This is an excerpt of a speech given by Susanna B Afan, president of the Ramon Magsaysay Award Foundation, at the opening ceremony of the 14th Social Business Day on June 27, 2024.

In 1984, forty years ago, a then 44-year-old Muhammad Yunus was elected to receive the Ramon Magsaysay Award for Community Leadership for "his pioneering efforts in enabling rural men and women to become economically self-sufficient through sound group-managed credit. His work challenged misconceptions about the capabilities of the poor to save, collaborate, and effectively utilise loans."

Since its inception, the Grameen Bank has achieved remarkable success. Grameen Bank has grown to provide collateral-free loans to 7.5 million clients, 97 percent of whom are women, in more than 82,000 villages in Bangladesh.

Yunus's model has demonstrated that even the poorest individuals can enhance their lives with dignity and contribute to their country's economic growth.

Muhammad Yunus is globally recognised as "The Father of Microfinance."

In the Philippines, the Center for Agriculture and Rural Development-Mutually Reinforcing Institutions (CARD-MRI) was established in 1986. To date, CARD-MRI has empowered millions of Filipinos. Nine million of them accessed microloans, 30 million are insured through microinsurance, and five million individuals have access to its health programmes. We are honoured to have Dr Aris Alip, the founder of CARD-MRI, in the audience with us today.

In 1994, in Indonesia, Dompet Dhuafa, a humanitarian institution, empowered millions of Indonesians through the principle and power of Zakat, a religious offering that is one of the pillars of Islam. Dompet Dhuafa's microloans have benefited 24 million people—more than the entire population of Sri Lanka.

Susanna B Afan, president of Ramon Magsaysay Award Foundation, presents a portrait to Prof Muhammad Yunus to commemorate the 40th anniversary of him receiving the Ramon Magsaysay Award.

In Pakistan, Muhammad Amjad Saqib founded Akhuwat in 2001. His pioneering interest-free microfinance model is based on Islamic values and compassion, known as Mawakhat. Akhuwat has since grown into the world's largest interest-free microfinance organisation. To date, it has disbursed over $789 million in loans and lifted the lives of over 5.4 million people in Pakistan.

These are the movements inspired directly by the work of Muhammad Yunus and, as such, they too followed his footsteps.

In 2008, CARD-MRI received the Ramon Magsaysay Award.

In 2016, Dompet Dhuafa received the Magsaysay Prize.

In 2021, Muhammad Amjad Saqib also became a Magsaysay Laureate.

To date, there are countless other microfinance institutions globally that have followed Muhammad Yunus's model.

This is the collective impact that Professor Yunus started that merited him the Magsaysay Award. He has transformed the lives not only of millions of Bangladeshis but also billions of people around the world.

This is what the Ramon Magsaysay Award stands for—celebrating transformative, courageous leadership, selfless service, and the Greatness of Spirit of ordinary individuals and organisations that bring meaningful, lasting change.

Named after the seventh president of the Philippines, the Ramon Magsaysay Award honours individuals and organisations embodying commitment to the common man, reflecting President Magsaysay's life and leadership. To date, 348 women, men and organisations working across Asia have been conferred with what is now widely regarded as Asia's premier prize and highest honour. We have captured their inspiring stories in our 65th anniversary commemorative book series, simply called GREATNESS OF SPIRIT: Stories of Love, Courage and Service.

Forty years since Muhammad Yunus received the Ramon Magsaysay Award, a precursor to many of his other international accolades including the 2006 Nobel Peace Prize, we continue to celebrate the undeniable impact of his work—billions of lives changed through the power of microfinance.

As a token of our appreciation and to commemorate the 40th anniversary of Muhammad Yunus receiving the Ramon Magsaysay Award, the Foundation would like to present Muhammad Yunus, 1984 Ramon Magsaysay Awardee for Community Leadership, with his portrait. This portrait was specially commissioned for our 65th anniversary commemorative book series. This also serves as our birthday gift for his 84th birthday on June 28.

How universal and egalitarian is the ‘universal’ pension scheme?

Dr Ala Uddin
is professor at the Department of Anthropology in Chittagong University.

ALA UDDIN

Although pension schemes are considered safe and respectable across the world, its process and significance are different in Bangladesh. Millions of government officials and their families depend on pensions to meet the expenses of the family at the end of their lives. But the process of receiving and collecting pension has never been honourable or easy. Recently, the government has taken some steps to improve this situation with its “universal pension scheme.” Although it created much enthusiasm at the beginning, the pension scheme has not proven to be universal and respectable for all. There are plenty of frustration, apprehension and discrimination in the initiative.

Firstly, the word “universal” means this pension scheme should be applicable for all citizens of Bangladesh. The artificial process of creating hierarchy between different professions is by no means universal; it is rather discriminatory. This is why the call to withdraw the notification has come from various levels, including teachers of public universities across the country.

The government has announced the universal pension scheme as an alternative to the existing system of providing post-retirement financial and social security to government employees. Whether it is people-friendly and how reasonable it is considering the financial capacity of people in this country are important questions, but what has disappointed and appalled everyone is that it is practically not universal. The scheme is not mandatory for some government bodies and sectors, especially bureaucrats. The outline of the new scheme and the notification says that those who will join the employment of self-governed, autonomous, state-owned, statutory or homogeneous organisations from July 2024 will be compulsorily added to the scheme. However, keeping certain professions out of its purview is not an indication of universality. To exclude the people of any profession from the scope of this scheme means either to deprive them, or to place them above all others.

The military, judiciary and bureaucracy have been exempted from this so-called “universal” scheme. While new employees joining the service of self-governed, autonomous and state-owned organisations after July 1 will be compulsorily covered under the “Prottoy” scheme of public pension, benefits—including pensions—will remain unchanged for military personnel, members of the judiciary, and bureaucrats. On the other hand, public university teachers will be deprived of pension benefits in the future if they do not register for public pension.

Questions arise as to why the authorities of autonomous institutions like universities were not consulted before this decision was made. During the budget proposal for FY2024-25, it was declared that the government officials will be included in a new pension scheme called “Sebak” from July 2025. Nothing has been mentioned about the benefits of this scheme, or its difference with Prottoy. The work on Sebak has not even started. But in the case of others, Prottoy is planned to be effective from July 1, 2024. Why was this discrepancy allowed? What was the basis of this dual policy?

FILE VISUAL: REHNUMA PROSHOON

The scheme has been rejected by public university teachers due to such discrimination. This disparity has greatly distressed the teaching community. The Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers Association has already demanded that the government reconsider the pension scheme. Various university teachers’ associations have made it clear in their positions that this discriminatory scheme is in no way acceptable. They argue that as a result of this, talented individuals in the future will not feel compelled to become university teachers.

Universities will suffer if this discriminatory, bureaucrat-driven and special-purpose scheme is implemented. In such a situation, teachers today are concerned with their future.

Although there was great enthusiasm in the beginning, the pension scheme has fallen into a state of collapse due to bureaucracy, ambiguity, and discrimination. Where 10 crore people were expected to come under the pension scheme, only a little over 100,000 people have registered in the first 10 months. Due to the exclusion of some sectors, it is not only the teaching community but also the public who now have doubts about this pension scheme. Moreover, when this was first presented, it was said that this scheme would not be mandatory, and that after 8-10 years when people will understand its benefits, everyone will gradually register. What is the rationale for going back on that promise making it mandatory for new employees now?

The bottom line is that any laws and facilities of the country should be made applicable to all. At the same time, these systems cannot be imposed on people, they cannot be made applicable to some and not to others. Giving special importance to one group of people engaged in running the country and giving less importance to other, equally important sectors is not right.

The government has to be proactive in implementing policies according to the needs of the nation. In order to turn public universities into knowledge-based, research-oriented educational institutions, the government should play a leading role in establishing the dignity of university teachers in society. Increasing teachers’ salaries and other benefits is related to this. The government also has to play a necessary role in ensuring that the recruitment of teachers, appointment of vice-chancellors, and promotion of teachers, etc are done in a regular manner as per regulations. At the same time, university teachers, vice-chancellors and their associates should be brought under accountability even within the autonomy.

Likewise, the policy of demeaning and demoting teachers in public universities is totally incompatible with such a noble initiative as a universal pension scheme. We welcome this public welfare initiative of the government. But the initiative should not end up causing public anguish, fear, suspicion or discrimination.

JULIAN ASSANGE’S RELEASE

Exposing the craven media stable

BINOY KAMPMARK

The WikiLeaks project was always going to put various noses out of joint in the journalistic profession. Soaked and blighted by sloth, easily bought, perennially envious, a good number of the Fourth Estate have always preferred to remain uncritical of power and sympathetic to its brutal exercise. For those reasons, the views of Thomas Carlyle, quoting the opinion of Edward Burke in his May 1840 lecture that “there were Three Estates in Parliament; but in the Reporters’ Gallery yonder, there sat a Fourth Estate more important far than they all” seem quaintly misplaced, certainly in a modern context.

The media response to the release of WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange from his scandalous captivity after pleading guilty to one count of conspiracy to obtain and disclose national defence information under the US Espionage Act of 1917 provides a fascinating insight into a ghastly, craven and sycophantic tendency all too common among the plodding hacks.

Take, for instance, any number of journalists working for the Australian Broadcasting Corporation, official national broadcaster and devotee of the safe middle line. One, a breakfast news anchor for the network’s meandering twenty-four-hour service, has a rather blotted record of glee regarding the mistreatment of Assange over the years.

Michael Rowland, torturously insipid and ponderously humourless, had expressed his inexpressible joy when the Ecuadorian government cut off Assange’s access to the Internet while confined to the country’s London embassy. “A big gold star to Ecuador,” he chirped on March 28, 2018. Andrew Fowler, another journalist and far more seasoned on the rise of WikiLeaks, reproached Rowland on Twitter, as the X platform was then called. “Why would silencing a fellow journalist be supported?” For Rowland, the matter was as clear as day. “That remains a disputed opinion, Andrew. Publisher and activist yes. But you put yourself in a small camp calling him a journalist.”

These points matter, because they go to the central libelling strategy of the US government’s prosecution so casually embraced by mainstream outlets. In such a generated smokescreen, crimes can be concealed, and the revealers shown to be those of bad faith. Labels can be used to partition truth, if not obscure it altogether: a publisher-activist is to be regarded more dimly than the establishment approved journalist.

The point was rather well made by Antony Loewenstein, himself an independent journalist keen to ferret out the grainier details of abusive power. When interviewed by none other than Rowland himself, he explained, with unflagging patience, the reasons why Assange and Wikileaks are so reviled by the orthodox scribblers of the Fourth Estate. WikiLeaks, he stated with salience, had confronted power, not succumbed to it.

WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange gestures as he arrives in Canberra, Australia, on June 26, 2024.

Rowland could only reiterate the standard line that Assange had admitted guilt for a “very serious offence”, refusing to examine the reasons for doing so, or the implications of it. Again, the vulgar line that Assange had “put US lives at risk” with the WikiLeaks disclosures was trotted out like an ill-fed nag. Again, Loewenstein had to remind Rowland that there was no evidence that any lives had been exposed to harm, a point made in several studies on the subject from the Pentagon to the Australian Defence Department.

The tendency is pestilential. While more guarded in his current iteration as a professor of journalism, Peter Greste, formerly a journalist for Al Jazeera, was previously dismissive in the Sydney Morning Herald of Assange’s contributions as he was brutally evicted from the Ecuadorian Embassy in London. “To be clear, Julian Assange is no journalist, and WikiLeaks is not a news organisation.” An organisation boasting “the libertarian idea of radical transparency” was “a separate issue altogether from press freedom.”

While approving the publishing activities centred on the release of the Collateral Murder video showing the killing of civilians including two Reuters journalists by Apache helicopters, and the release of the Afghanistan War Logs, the Iraq War Logs and “Cablegate,” Greste fell for the canard that the publisher did not redact names in documents to “protect the innocent” by dumping “them all onto his website, free for anybody to go through, regardless of their contents or their impact they might have had.”

There is no mention of the decrypting key carelessly included in WikiLeaks: Inside Julian Assange’s War on Secrecy by its bumbling authors David Leigh and Luke Harding, or the fact that the website Cryptome was the first to publish the unredacted files ahead of WikiLeaks. There is certainly no discussion of the extensive redacting efforts Assange had made, as many of his collaborators testify to, prior to the release in November 2010.

Writing on June 25 in The Conversation, Greste displays the emetic plumage of someone who has done an about face. “It is worth pausing for a moment to consider all Assange has been through, and to pop a bottle of champagne to celebrate his release,” he writes distastefully, also reflecting on his own carceral experiences in an Egyptian prison cell. He also claims that the role of WikiLeaks, in checking “the awesome power that governments wield”, should be celebrated, while stating, weakly, that he never believed that Assange should “have been charged with espionage.”

In such shifting views, we see wounded egos, cravenness, and the concerns about an estate whose walls had been breached by a usurping, industrious publisher. By all means use the spoils from Assange and his leakers, even while snorting about how they were obtained. Publish and write about them in the hope of getting a press award. Never, however, admit that Assange is himself a journalist with more journalism awards than many have had hot dinners. In this grotesque reality, we are now saddled with a terrifying precedent: the global application of a US espionage statute endangering journalists and publishers who would dare discuss and run material on Washington’s national security.

JANO JOINT ACTION FOR NUTRITION OUTCOME | The Daily Star

Bridging the nutrition gap

Integrating top-down budgeting and local nutrition plans

Joint Action for Nutrition Outcome (JANO) project, implemented by CARE Bangladesh, in association with The Daily Star organized a roundtable, titled "Assessing Public Expenditure in NPAN-2 & 8th FYP" on May 16, 2024. Here we publish a summary of the discussion.

Dr Ikhtiar Uddin Khandaker, Deputy Country Director-Program (Acting) CARE Bangladesh

This study, commissioned by CARE, provides an opportunity to examine how public expenditure is being used for nutrition. The JANO project, a consortium with Plan International and ESDO, funded by the European Union and Austrian Development Cooperation, is implemented directly in Nilphamari and Rangpur districts and indirectly in seven sub-districts. The project focuses on nutrition governance and the rollout of the second National Plan of Action for Nutrition (NPAN-2).

The modifications in the multi-sectoral approach applied through the current structure are some noteworthy changes. For example, the District Nutrition Coordination Committee and the Upazila Nutrition Coordination Committee, established by the government, ensure multi-sectoral engagement by involving different ministries at the district and sub-district levels. These committees follow the second national plan of action, guided by the Bangladesh National Nutrition Council. We aim to identify future directions, including the upcoming third national plan of action and the eighth five-year plan, through this process.

Dr Sayema Haque Bidisha, Professor, Department of Economics, University of Dhaka, and Research Director, SANEM

A group of young researchers at South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (SANEM), along with myself, worked on a report on NPAN-2 and the JANO project. Our study aims to analyse investment patterns, identify financial gaps, and pinpoint challenges in health financing and NPAN-2 implementation, focusing on the project.

The government has tried to address these challenges through planning documents, notably NPAN-2 (National Plan of Action for Nutrition 2016-2025). The JANO project, within the framework of NPAN-2, proposes a different type of planning based on local-level planning involving the Union Development Coordination Committee (UDCC), Upazila Nutrition Coordination Committee (UNCC), and District Nutrition Coordination Committee (DNCC). The aim is to enhance community involvement and supplement central budgeting and planning.

The Bangladesh National Nutrition Council (BNNC) plays a crucial role in monitoring, evaluation, and policy guidance for the 3M (multisectoral, multistakeholder, and multi-level) strategy in NPAN-2, requiring competent human resources and consistent budget support. Our study observed that the 3M approach applied in the Nilphamari and Rangpur regions saw an overall improvement in nutrition-related budgets in areas under these core ministries, UNCC, UDCC, and other aspects. Extending the 3M approach to other contexts would lead to better outcomes.

However, the allocated budget is inadequate compared to global standards, likely needing to triple to align with best practices. Data shows that only seven of the Ministry of Health and Family Welfare projects align with NPAN-2, and the nutrition budget allocation is very small. Additionally, the implementation rate is low, with 71 percent of the allocated budget utilised.

Of 21 nutrition-related projects under the Ministry of Food, 12 have been completed, one is ongoing, and eight show no progress. Out of the nine Ministry of Agriculture projects, two are completed, five are ongoing, and two show no progress. Nutritional budgetary allocation for these important ministries is only around 2.2 crore.

The Ministry of Local Government, Rural Development, and Cooperatives has 76 projects, with 31 completed, 29 showing no progress, and 16 ongoing. The Ministry of Women and Children Affairs (MOWCA) and the Ministry of Education also have nutrition-aligned projects, although their allocation is not very high. The Ministry of Fisheries and Livestock has an impressive record, but data shows less than 50 percent utilisation in some ministries, such as the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of LGRD.

Comparing Bangladesh's nutrition profile, financial allocation, budgeting, and socio-economic status with countries like India, Nepal, Lao PDR, and Indonesia is essential to understand the current situation. Lao PDR spends significantly on nutrition-related activities. India has targeted programmes, such as the malnutrition-free initiative, covering 12 ministries and 4.8 lakh joint activities, while Nepal follows a need-based approach. Stunting is a major problem for Indonesia and Bangladesh, and Indonesia's approach to stunting reduction can be instructive.

The bottom-up approach advocated by NPAN-2 starts with the Community Support Groups (CSGs) and moves upward. However, budget disbursement in Bangladesh follows a top-down approach, limiting local autonomy. In Bangladesh, 98 percent of the budget is allocated to nutrition-sensitive programmes, with only 2 percent for nutrition-specific interventions.

Monitoring the political agenda of local representatives is also important, as political economy plays a key role. The desired partnerships and coordination between NGOs and the government are missing among NGOs and different ministries. There is also a lack of data, consistency, and flexibility in the budgeting process, which needs addressing.

Dr Syed Abdul Hamid, Professor, Institute of Health Economics, University of Dhaka

Bangladesh's nutrition policies, including NPAN and NPAN-2, outline necessary actions and budget allocations. However, implementation suffers from a lack of necessary financing and dedicated human resources. Coordination, overseen by the Deputy Commissioner (DC) at the district level and the union chairman, is hampered by their existing workload and the need for constant reminders. While infrastructure development is prioritised, human and social development—such as nutrition, health, and education—remains underfunded and overlooked. Addressing these issues requires increased offices, human resources, and a focus on the cultural and social importance of education, health, and nutrition.

Dr Shyamal Kumar Roy, Division Chief (Lab.), IPHN

In 1974, Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman emphasised improving nutrition by establishing the "Pushti Parishad Council." Effective implementation of the 3M approach through increased personnel at district, upazila, and union levels can drive significant progress. DCs cannot manage all tasks alone; dividing responsibilities and scheduling meetings efficiently is crucial. Currently, per capita expenditure in the health sector is low, and it is even lower in the nutrition sector. This needs to change. Adequate human resources and clear role definitions are essential. We need a proper budget to hire and assign people effectively.

Md Abdul Mozid, UP Chairman, Kursha Union Parishad, Kaunia, Rangpur

In Rangpur, traditional dishes like 'sholka' and 'shajne pata bharta' have gained recognition for their nutritional and medicinal benefits, thanks to JANO's initiatives. However, human resource constraints hinder the realization of our aspirations across all 21 villages under my purview despite our best efforts.

I urge policymakers to expand JANO's initiatives nationwide and consider additional support through dedicated departments or NGOs to address nutritional deficiencies effectively.

Dr Nusrat Zahan Mithen, Deputy Director, Bangladesh National Nutrition Council (BNNC)

A 2019 study with BNNC reviewed today confirms that recommendations from 2019 to 2024 remain consistent, indicating we are on track. To achieve our objectives efficiently, we must address issues such as data deficiencies and incorrect portals, and accelerate our efforts.

In Nilphamari and Rangpur, local income-generating activities related to nutrition have led to self-sufficiency, a model worth replicating nationwide. We must develop NPAN-3 through learning from NPAN-2.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- Nutrition should be a top priority for the government to achieve SDG, FYP, and NPAN-2 goals.
- Budgetary allocations for the nutrition sector should be increased, properly utilized, and aligned with local-level nutrition plans.
- Dedicated human resources should be employed, particularly at the local level, for the effective implementation of nutrition programmes.
- Engaging community members, from local pharmacists to religious leaders, to raise awareness about nutrition is crucial.
- Conducting nutrition expenditure tracking and promoting transparency among stakeholders are vital.
- Continuous monitoring and reliable data collection are vital for effective planning and resource allocation.
- Decision-making power must be decentralised to understand the needs at the grassroots level.
- New media should be explored to raise awareness.

Masuma Chowdhury, Nutrition & Gender Specialist, FAO

Despite our focus on nutrition, we have not put any emphasis on the health and well-being of farmers, who are the key figures when it comes to ensuring nutrition for the entire country. During my time at FAO, I observed a lack of budget allocation for farmers' well-being. This should have more focus in our planning and discussions. Previously, NGOs like UNICEF funded projects to measure children's well-being, but such funding has dwindled.

Dr Mohammad Mahmudul Hasan, Programme Manager, BRAC

Implementing a digital system that integrates nutrition and agriculture into a telecommunication toll-free hub would enable people to call with any queries related to these topics. Additionally, promoting lifestyle modification through awareness-building campaigns can effectively address nutrition-related issues.

Amit Dey, Manager Food Security, Action Aid Bangladesh

Instead of focusing on importing fertilisers, we should employ more resources to develop local sources, such as vermicompost. Subsidies primarily benefit fertiliser consumption, favouring wealthier farmers, despite the greater contribution of small farmers to nutrition-related fields.

Ineffective implementation due to capacity limitations within departments and ministries prioritises project completion over quality. Nutrition garden funds disproportionately benefit men despite our women's significant nutritional contributions. Shifting this mindset is crucial for enhancing our nation's nutritional landscape.

Syed Md. Nuruddin, Advisor, CSE – PLAN International Bangladesh

The loss in the nutritional sector in our country is substantial, amounting to almost BDT 2 Billion, according to WFPO. The well-being of individuals in society is more closely related to social dynamics and available resources than to institutional setups. We need to shift our investment towards social mobilisation, an area currently receiving minimal budget allocation. Knowledge dissemination fosters sustainability, and investing in this area now can maximise the benefits of our demographic dividend.

Professor Dr. AQM Shafiul Azam, Director of Planning and Development, Directorate of Secondary & Higher Education (DSHE)

The introduction of "health and well-being" in our curriculum aligns with the issue of nutrition and the prime minister's directive to create smart citizens for the future. It covers the issues of nutrition, health and soft life skills to lead a better life. "Better health, better education," is the motto we believe in. However, coordination among the nine ministries dedicated to this issue is lacking, leading to sporadic initiatives with incomplete follow-through. Currently, almost half of the budgetary allocation remains unutilised, despite the government's best intentions. We need to figure out a way to coordinate and create a chain effect with our work.

Md Shahidul Alam, ndc, Director General (Additional Secretary), FPMU

People from all walks of life must internalize the notion of good food and good health. On this, people with influence can be the examples of their healthy lifestyles for ordinary people to follow their footsteps besides creating awareness among them.

Our honourable prime minister has emphasised the need to increase investment in the food sector, build food banks, and raise awareness, especially youth engagement, to combat this crisis. The State is already working on 'Nutritious food for all'.

Quality over quantity in budget allocation is crucial, supplemented by private investments. Despite challenges, we have progressed significantly, ranking 81st in the 2023 hunger index, whereas our neighbouring India and Pakistan stand at 111th and 102nd respectively. Individual awareness of consumption and social event food protocols are essential. The government's food-based dietary guidelines could be a great source of information on consuming nutritious food. Cohesion among bodies and aligned goals, coupled with mindset shifts, are paramount for holistic progress.

Dr Hasan Shahriar Kabir, Former Director General and Deputy Director of Bangladesh National Nutrition Council (BNNC)

Our goal for NPAN-3 is to learn from NPAN-2's shortcomings and enhance those areas. Planning at the local level is crucial. Nutrition should be integrated into lifestyles at the union level, with a gender-sensitive approach to empower women, who are crucial to food security and nutrition. We can get a lot of people to volunteer for this issue owing to our culture of community-dependency.

We aim to implement a real-time tracking system for local budget allocation and spending, improving coordination among NGOs with a bottom-up approach. If we streamline the projects and operations of multiple NGOs with a bottom-up approach, we will get better outcomes. NPAN-3 will be people-oriented, focusing on community needs and past lessons to shape a better future.

Margherita Capalbi, Programme Manager – Agriculture and Rural Development, Food and Nutrition Security, Delegation of the European Union to Bangladesh

Having been in the country for three years, I believe there should be more collaboration among different governmental departments. This increased collaboration can enhance nutrition sensitivity, thanks to the efforts of all stakeholders involved. The Joint Action for Nutrition Outcome (JANO) has made significant contributions in this regard.

The nutrition community in the country is vibrant and growing. Implementing a mandatory reporting system for nutrition budgeting could be beneficial. Such a system would align with the recommendation for a public expenditure review, promoting transparency across departments and organisations.

Aamanur Rahman, Chief of Party, Thrive Activity, CARE Bangladesh

NPAN2 will expire in 2025, and we need to identify the key takeaways from this plan for NPAN3. The Country Investment Plan 3 will also expire in 2025, and we have emphasized the importance of a resilient, nutrition-sensitive food system in that plan as well. There are some key focus areas for NPAN3 and CRP that we can consider. Battling anemia and child obesity are two of the fifteen health indicators where Bangladesh is lagging, so we should prioritize these issues in the next plan.

There are inconsistencies in the costing of NPAN2, and we need to address those and determine the costing for NPAN3. Some food and nutrition-related work can be decentralized to the union level, with the central government providing policy-related support. In addition to projects, revenue channels, awareness building, and relevant human resources can be strengthened to achieve better outcomes. The budgetary allocation must reflect local-led demands. Lastly, mobilizing efforts to halve per capita out-of-pocket health expenditure from $64 to $30 by 2030 is imperative for goal attainment.

Tanjim Ferdous, In-charge of NGO and Foreign Missions, Business Development Team, The Daily Star

Over the past two decades, media has significantly shaped health communication, notably in preventing diarrhoeal deaths through campaigns promoting oral saline use. We were successful in bringing social behavioural changes and raising awareness through media intervention and campaigns. However, over time, similar initiatives have decreased, necessitating renewed funding to revive them.

Mahbubur Rahman, Research Director (Production & Early Warning) at FPMU; Aniruddha Roy, Assistant Director at WAVE Foundation, Right to Food; Salahuddin A. Bablu, Business Editor at SA TV and Vice President of Economic Reporters' Forum (ERF); Dr. Sharmind Neelopal, Professor at the Department of Pharmacy, BRAC University; Saiqa Siraj, Country Director at Nutrition International; and Sekender Ali Mina, Joint Secretary Democratic at Budget Movement, also spoke at the event.

Will BCB's World Cup 'discussions' make any difference?

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) is set to sit down for a board meeting today to discuss the just-concluded T20 World Cup performances. Such meetings, however, have barely contributed to an improved show in global events.

Apart from World Cup performances, which are routine discussions following ICC or other major events, BCB will also discuss the appointment of an international contractor for a new stadium alongside other matters.

"There is also a standard procedure that after the Bangladesh team returns from playing any major ICC or ACC event, the performances are discussed," BCB CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury told reporters yesterday regarding the meeting.

"It's a routine matter and there are also financial matters to discuss regarding the structure of Game Development and Ground and Facilities. Mainly those are the areas that are to be prioritized," he added.

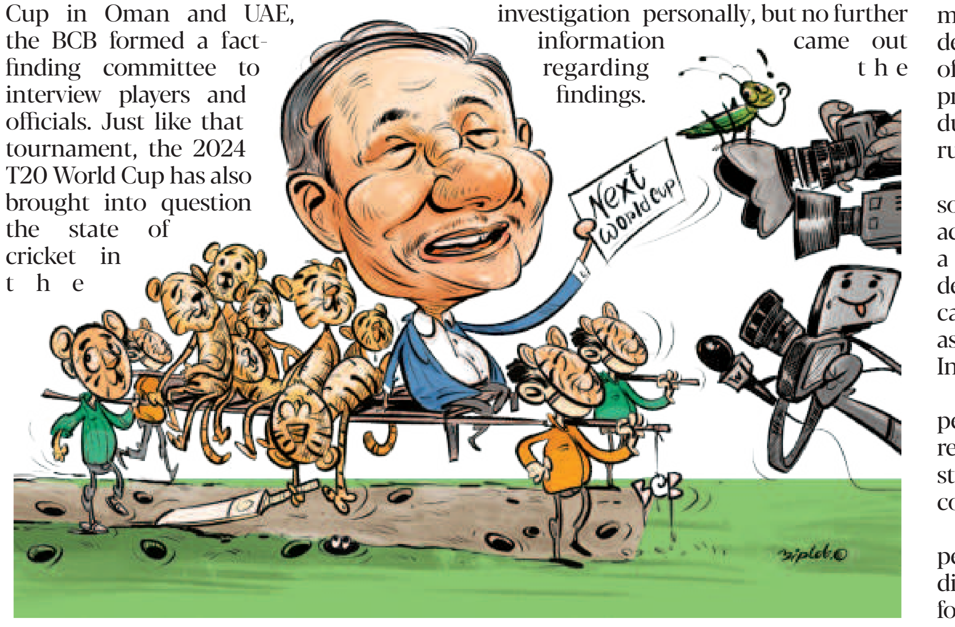
The board remains content that the Tigers were able to make it to the second round of the tournament, the Super Eight stage, beating Sri Lanka, Nepal, and the Netherlands to secure their berth from a tough group. However, the Super Eights revealed the gap in quality the team has with the big sides in mega events.

Bangladesh did not show the approach required to take the attack to the stronger teams at the tournament, failing miserably against Australia and India before falling to Afghanistan in their final game, with the fragile batting sticking out like a sore thumb.

Such performances may be scrutinized and discussed internally. BCB, however, has not been able to ensure those investigations bore fruit. In 2021, after the debacle in the T20 World Cup in Oman and UAE, the BCB formed a fact-finding committee to interview players and officials. Just like that tournament, the 2024 T20 World Cup has also brought into question the state of cricket in the country.

Back then, BCB president Nazmul Hassan had said that the committee found nothing significant. He, in fact, had remarked, "What can you do if the players say there's nothing wrong with the coach?"

It showed that there is a need to find scapegoats because perhaps the then coach Russell Domingo was not to their liking. Nazmul had then curiously suggested that he would conduct an investigation personally, but no further information came out regarding the findings.



The 2023 ODI World Cup debacle will be remembered not only for poor performances but also because another investigation committee was formed, which interviewed many players and officials, but the findings were once again not made public. The result was null. In fact, BCB directors had also told this newspaper that they have not seen the investigation report.

There is a general notion that BCB may not get to the bottom of the batting debacle, or what caused the charges of coach Chandika Hathurusingha to prematurely give up on semifinals dream during the Afghanistan match for it might ruffle a few feathers of its own.

First and foremost, BCB must initiate some soul-searching to reflect and accept its own wrongdoings in forming a necessary pipeline, as evidence by the dearth of options in the Tigers' squad -- carrying an off-form batter in Afif Hossain as a travelling reserve -- in USA and West Indies around the past month.

As another discussion follows on performances, will BCB this time be relieved with having made the second stage, or will they form another probe committee just for the sake of it?

If the matters at hand related to performance are not discussed freely by the directors, ultimately, the seeds of success for the next world event will not be sown.

U19 coach Naveed looks beyond World Cup success

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) reappointed Naveed Nawaz -- the ICC Under-19 World Cup winning coach with Bangladesh -- last month for a second stint, hoping to develop new talents and form another successful batch.

In his first stint, Naveed nurtured a team that won the world title in South Africa in 2020 and youngsters like Towhid Hridoy and Shoriful Islam from that side have already made their mark in international cricket.

Given Bangladesh national team's current difficulty in producing results in ICC events, perhaps following the template that served the U19 team so well could be an option.

Naveed's U19 team played several matches in foreign conditions leading up to the World Cup and their preparation served them well in the tournament.

Thus, when Naveed, who arrived in Mirpur yesterday to officially take over, was asked whether the U19 template can be followed in the national team, he felt there was a case for it.

"I am sure [template can serve BCB]. All the planning that's going on, there is room for that," the Sri Lankan told The Daily Star following his press conference.

However, Naveed sees difficulty in devising a programme just like the U19s due to the ICC FTP calendar and sees value in the team touring abroad and allowing players to play franchise cricket in other countries.

"That's something [playing abroad or taking part in franchise cricket] that people have improvised with and thought about on what they want to do and which areas they want to develop," said Naveed, who rejoined the Bangladesh U19 team following his stint as Sri Lanka national team's assistant coach.

The U19 team's success in South Africa is arguably Bangladesh's greatest achievement in cricket. However, Naveed did not want to get buried under expectation.

"Me coming back after having won a World Cup in 2020, of course there is expectation. I think I have to focus on other things rather than something that passed four years ago. Tournaments are not won just because you have won it in the past," said Naveed at yesterday's press conference.

But above all, he spoke about the need to nurture talent, using leg-spinner Rishad Hossain as an example who couldn't make the cut in the U19 World Cup winning squad in 2020 but made a great impression in the recent ICC T20 World Cup.

"You got to work on technical and mental issues, you can't hold onto them [problems] for long. That's something BCB will be looking to do at in their HP and age-group programmes.

"Look at him [Rishad] now. It's important that U19 is running well but it's also important that we look after the bigger group of our players as well."

Ecuador braced for 'another final' against Argentina

REUTERS

Ecuador are preparing for "another final" at the Copa America after advancing to a quarterfinal match-up against defending champions Argentina, head coach Felix Sanchez said on Sunday.

Ecuador finished level with Mexico on four points after the teams drew 0-0 in Group B but Sanchez's side secured a place in the knockout stages thanks to their superior goal difference.

Venezuela advanced as group winners while Mexico and Jamaica were eliminated.

Argentina had a solid start to their title defence, with their forwards Lautaro Martinez and Julian Alvarez scoring all five of their goals in the group stage. With skipper Lionel Messi out injured in their final group game against Peru, Argentina faced no problem as Martinez's brace paved way for smooth sailing and showed the reigning world champions are productive even without their magician Messi.

"We know it is an unmatched opponent, and we know how tough it's going to be," Ecuador coach Sanchez was under illusions about the scale of the take they face in the last eight against Group A winners Argentina at the NRG Stadium in Houston, Texas on Friday.

"It is yet another final for us, and we will try to compete against the world's champion and the world's best team ... I believe that our team is going to be extremely motivated to play a good match."

Brazil await 'great test' in Colombia clash

REUTERS

Five-time World Cup champions Brazil and in-form Colombia meet in North California on Tuesday in a highly-anticipated Copa America clash with more than just the Group D lead on the line.

Colombia are arguably the hottest team in the Americas with an impressive streak of 10 consecutive wins and undefeated in their last 25 matches.

Their last defeat was over two years ago, a 1-0 loss to Argentina which effectively ended their 2022 World Cup qualification hopes.

Colombia fired manager Reinaldo Rueda and brought back Nestor Lorenzo, a former Argentine player who worked for several years as Jose Pekerman's assistant when he was in charge.

Lorenzo injected a new energy to a talented but ageing group, managing to bring out the best version of experienced players like James Rodriguez, Jhon Cordoba, and Johan Mojica who most thought were passed their prime.

The rise of Richard Rios, Jhon Arias, and Jefferson Lerma gave Colombia the balance they needed, their run including wins over Spain, and Germany and a dramatic fightback against Brazil when winger Luis Diaz scored a late brace to secure a shock win days after Colombian guerrillas freed his kidnapped father.

Playing an attractive style of attacking football with a relentless pace and physicality, Colombia started the Copa America by beating Paraguay and Costa Rica and topped the group with a draw against Brazil.

Beating the five-time world champions would send a statement that South America has a new force to be reckoned with.

"I know our fans are excited and who am I to give advices to people's emotions. We are also excited, so let's enjoy it," Lorenzo said after his team beat Costa Rica 3-0 on Friday.

Brazil are struggling after a heartbreaking penalty defeat by Croatia in the 2022 World Cup quarterfinals.

Under the guidance of new manager Dorival Junior, Brazil's Copa America debut was disappointing -- a goalless draw against Costa Rica that was their fifth straight competitive game without a win, their worst run in 23 years.

They bounced back with a 4-1 win over Paraguay thanks to a stellar performance by forward Vinicius Jr., who showed why he is a strong contender to win the Ballon d'Or after guiding Real Madrid to a LaLiga-Champions League double.

"Colombia are a stone in our shoe which we're going to try to get it out of our way in the next game," Brazil midfielder Bruno Guimaraes told a press conference on Sunday.

"They have a lot of players who can decide things individually, they're a very physical team, good to play against. This is the Brazilian national team shirt we are talking about.

"It's going to be a great test for us, a great game that we want to win to finish first (in the group). That's what is required when you wear Brazil's shirt."

Wary Dutch look to recalibrate

REUTERS, Hamburg

The Netherlands might have emerged from a disappointing performance in the group phase of the European Championship with a favourable pairing but they will be wary of Romania when they meet on Tuesday in Munich in the round of 16.

The Dutch finished third in their group after losing to Austria in Berlin, but it could have turned out a lot worse after they avoided a potential meeting with England and got Romania in the first knockout round.

Romania are 40 spots below seventh-placed Netherlands in the FIFA rankings and have won only two of 19 games played in six Euros finals appearances.

Romania have also only won once in 14 past meetings against the Dutch, losing 10. Their sole success was a Euro 2008 qualifier, won 1-0 in Constanta.

There will be no inferiority complex, however, from Romania, who have little to lose and face a struggling Dutch side trying to find some sort of rhythm after tepid showings in Germany.

There has been much soul-searching from the Netherlands after their three games, with captain Virgil van Dijk making an astonishing admission that perhaps they had over-estimated their own ability.

Romania, who topped Group E with four points, made an impressive start with a 3-0 win over Ukraine but lost 2-0 to Belgium and topped the group despite drawing against Slovakia.

Defensive discipline is the cornerstone of coach Edward Iordanescu's on-field approach, and he has worked hard off-field, too, in order to create a positive team spirit and instil self-belief among his players.

The Dutch, whose defence were sloppy against Austria, will be wary of the quick counter-attack, with Denis Dragus the lone target man.

Romania are without left back Nicusor Bancu who is suspended after collecting two yellow cards.

Dutch coach Ronald Koeman's own concerns will be about his midfield where Joey Veerman was unceremoniously replaced after 35 minutes in the last game.

A return to the line-up for the speedy Jeremie Frimpong is likely but calls for a switch to a back five, as employed under Louis van Gaal at the World Cup in Qatar where they got to the last eight, were rejected by Van Dijk.

Forward Cody Gakpo has scored twice and Memphis Depay once in the tournament and substitute attacker Wout Weghorst has often proved to be the man for the big occasion when needed.

Playing in the back of Dutch minds, however, will be what happened three years ago at the last Euros when they were similarly fancied to beat the Czech Republic in the last 16 in Budapest but suffered an ignominious exit.

Winner of this tie will be facing either of Turkey or Austria, who will face off in the other round of 16 game today.

Imranur to sprint in Paris

SPORTS REPORTER

Sprinter Imranur Rahman has become the country's third athlete to participate in the upcoming Paris Olympic Games, slated to run from July 26 to August 11.

World Athletics, the international governing body, confirmed Rahman's participation through a wild card entry to the Bangladesh Olympic Association (BOA) on Monday.

England-born Imranur, the country's record-holder fastest sprinter, will be embracing the world's highest competition -- the Olympics -- for the first time.

The International Olympic Committee (IOC) first provided a wild card to rifle shooter Robiul Islam while recurve archer Sagor Islam secured a direct entry by reaching the semifinals during the Final Olympic Qualification tournament in Turkey.

Bangladesh Swimming Federation has requested a wild card for swimmer Samiul Islam Rafi.

If the IOC confirms the participation of Rafi, Bangladesh will have a four-member athlete team for the Paris Olympic.

Third seed Carlos Alcaraz endured an early test in his Wimbledon title defence yesterday but the Spaniard quelled the challenge of Estonian qualifier Mark Lajal in straight sets, 7-6 (7/3), 7-5, 6-2, moving into the second round.

The corrupt will face music

Says PM; cabinet okays proposal to form company to run Padma Bridge

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has said corrupt people will have to shoulder the responsibilities of their deeds.

The Anti-Corruption Commission is an independent body and it will investigate into allegations of corruptions following its own process, she said.

Speaking to her cabinet colleagues during an unscheduled discussion after a cabinet meeting yesterday, Hasina said action would be taken against the corrupt people regardless of their identities, a cabinet member told The Daily Star quoting the PM.

The meeting was held at the Prime Minister's Office in the capital's Tejgaon.

Hasina directed the cabinet members to bring forward the wrongdoings of the previous BNP-led alliance government.

She said that people have forgotten those wrongdoings, including the 10-truck arms haul, the huge hauls of ammo and explosives in Bogura's Kahalu and Dupchanchia upazilas, and the recovery of arms in Cox's Bazar's Pekua.

The premier said it is time now to bring those incidents before the people.

Power supply from Adani plant resumes

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Electricity supply from a unit of the Adani power plant in India's Jharkhand resumed yesterday after 60 hours of disruption, according to the Bangladesh Power Development Board (PDB).

Technical glitches halted power supply from the 1,496-megawatt coal-fired Adani plant on Friday morning.

PDB spokesperson Shameem Hasan told The Daily Star that the unit resumed its production around 7:45am.

"Now it is producing more than 500 megawatts of electricity," he said around 11:15am.

Earlier, the PDB officials said the Adani authorities found a leak in a valve of the circulating water pump of the plant, which is why they forcibly shut down the unit of the plant.

Another unit of the plant went into routine maintenance during the Eid holidays, which is supposed to resume this week.

Trump has immunity for official acts

US top court rules

REUTERS, Washington

The US Supreme Court yesterday found that Donald Trump cannot be prosecuted for official actions taken as president, but can for private acts, in a landmark ruling recognising for the first time any form of presidential immunity from prosecution.

The justices, in a 6-3 ruling written by Chief Justice John Roberts, threw out a lower court's decision rejecting Trump's claim of immunity from criminal charges involving his efforts to undo his 2020 election loss to Joe Biden.

The court's six conservative justices were in the majority and its three liberal justices dissented.

"We conclude that under our constitutional structure of separated powers, the nature of presidential power requires that former president have some immunity from criminal prosecution for official acts during his tenure in office," Roberts wrote.

"At least with respect to the president's exercise of his core constitutional powers, this immunity must be absolute. As for his remaining official actions, he is also entitled to immunity," Roberts added.

Roberts said Trump's case will be sent back to the lower courts for further review.

AG office says firms don't want to pay VAT

The High Court yesterday questioned the legality of government's demand for unpaid VAT and the consequent fines of over Tk 7,000 crore from S Alam Vegetable Oil Ltd and S Alam Super Edible Oil Ltd.

On June 9, the Customs, VAT & Excise Commissionerate, Chattogram in its adjudication orders asked the two companies to pay Tk 3,538 crore in "evaded VAT", Tk 3,531 crore in fines, and interest on the amounts, to the state coffers within 15 work days. Customs said the value added tax was evaded in fiscal years 2019-20 and 2021-22.

Hamas ally fires rockets into Israel

Most launches intercepted; Israeli tanks advance in north, south of Gaza

REUTERS, Gaza

The Palestinian Islamic Jihad group fired a barrage of rockets into Israel yesterday, in an apparent show of force as Israeli tanks pressed their advance deeper into Gaza amid fierce fighting, residents and officials said.

The armed wing of Islamic Jihad, an Iranian-backed ally of Hamas, said its fighters fired rockets towards several Israeli settlements near the fence with Gaza in response to "the crimes of the Zionist enemy against our Palestinian people".

The volley of around 20 rockets caused no casualties, according to the Israeli military. Most launches were intercepted. But it showed the group still possess rocket capabilities almost nine months into Israel's offensive it says is aimed at neutralising threats against it.

» Israel conducts operation in Tulkarm in West Bank

In some parts of Gaza, Hamas fighters continue to stage attacks on Israeli forces in areas that the army had left months ago.

Yesterday, Israeli tanks deepened their incursions into the Shejaia suburb in eastern Gaza City for a fifth day, and tanks advanced further in western and central Rafah, in southern Gaza near the border with Egypt, residents said.

The Israeli military said it had killed a number of fighters in combat in Shejaia yesterday and found large amounts of weapons there.

Hamas said that, in Rafah, its fighters lured an Israeli force into a booby-trapped house in the east of the city and then blew it up, causing casualties.

Also in Rafah, the Israeli military said that an airstrike killed a Hamas fighter who fired an anti-tank missile at its troops.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 37,900 people have been killed during nearly nine months of offensive. The toll includes at least 23 deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

India replaces colonial-era criminal laws

Critics say new laws could create confusion

REUTERS, New Delhi

India replaced colonial-era criminal laws with new legislation yesterday, which Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government said would make the country more just, but the opposition said risked throwing the criminal justice system into disarray.

The new laws were approved by parliament in December in Modi's previous term with the government saying they aim to "give justice, not punishment". It says they were needed as colonial laws had been at the core of the criminal justice system for more than a century.

Among the key changes is replacement of the sedition law frequently used as a tool of suppression, after its enactment under British colonial rule to jail Indian freedom fighters.

Under the new laws - which replace the Indian Penal Code, the Indian Evidence Act, and Code of Criminal Procedure - sedition is replaced with a section on acts seen as "endangering the sovereignty, unity, and integrity of India".

"About 77 years after independence, our criminal justice system is becoming completely indigenous and will run on Indian ethos," India's Home (interior) Minister Amit Shah told reporters. "Instead of punishment, there will now be justice."

Criminal cases registered under the repealed laws before yesterday will continue to follow them, Shah said,

Govt may let its employees trade in shares

Says draft amendment to government servants rules

BAHARAM KHAN

The public administration ministry is likely to allow government employees to trade in the share market, a reversal of a decades-old rule.

The ministry sent a draft amendment to the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1979, to the law ministry, which vetted and returned it, sources said.

Upon approval from relevant authorities, government employees will be able to buy or sell primary shares or bonds of any company registered with the share market. They, however, cannot indulge in such activities during office hours, according to the draft this correspondent has seen.

Under the existing rules, government officials are not allowed to engage in trading of stocks.

The government has been trying to amend the existing Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1979, for six years, but could not finish the job.

Recently, the move has gained momentum. It comes at a time when some government officials' alleged corruption was reported by the media.

Although government employees are not allowed to trade in the share market, many of them are doing so, claimed sources in the ministry.

NBR official Matiur Rahman, who has recently come under the scanner amid controversy over his huge amount of wealth, has allegedly made a fortune investing in the stock market.

Sources in the Cabinet Division and the public administration ministry said Matiur's case shows how people with influence over public institutions can become a money-making machine.

MPs blast govt for sorry state of banking sector

Three lawmakers in parliament yesterday blasted the government for the sorry state of the banking and financial sector.

Jatiya Party MP Hafiz Uddin Ahmed and independent lawmakers Pankaj Nath and Hamidul Haque Khandker said large companies were getting interest waivers on lame excuses. Bangladesh Bank cannot exercise its power to this end.

The lawmakers made the comments joining the discussion during passage of the "Payment and Settlement Bill-2024".

Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali did not respond to the criticism.

Pankaj Nath highlighted the report of a national daily on the interest waiver of four companies.

He said, "Tk 6,497 crore interest was waived for four institutions ... Special approval of Bangladesh Bank was required. I will not go into details; I will not say the organisations' names."

Retirement age will be raised in 'Prottoy' scheme

Says National Pension Authority

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government will amend the retirement age-related provision of the new pension scheme Prottoy, said the National Pension Authority.

The retirement age of teachers is 65 but the scheme's provision stipulates that beneficiaries will start receiving pension from the age of 60. So, the government will bring necessary changes to the provision of the scheme, the authority said in a press release yesterday.

The press release was issued to clarify several issues related to the Prottoy scheme that was launched in March for the employees of autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory and similar organisations.

"Employees get a fund against lamp grant and PRL [post-retirement leave] on the basis of their earned leave and they will get it as usual," it said.

A subscriber to Prottoy will get pension throughout his lifetime. If the person dies, a nominee will get the pension for up to 15 years after starting to receive pension.

A subscriber to Prottoy will get pension throughout his lifetime. If the person dies, a nominee will get the pension for up to 15 years after starting to receive pension.

For instance, if a pensioner dies after receiving pension for five years, the nominee will get pension for 10 years, the press release added.

All the provisions of the new pension scheme will apply to those who joined work after July 1, 2024.

The non-contributory pension system is increasing the expenditures of the government day by day and that is why this system is not sustainable. Neighbouring India also started a contributory pension system in 2004, the National Pension Authority said.

Halving food waste can reduce hunger for 153m people

Say OECD, UN's food agency in a joint report

AFP, Paris

Halving food waste could cut climate-warming emissions and end undernourishment for 153 million people globally, the OECD and the UN's food agency said in a joint report yesterday.

Around a third of food produced for human consumption gets lost or wasted globally, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) -- resulting in useless emissions and less available food for those who need it.

By 2033, the number of calories lost and wasted between produce leaving farms and reaching shops and households could be more than twice the number of calories currently consumed in low-income countries in a year, the report warned.

Cutting in two the amount of food lost and wasted along the journey from farm to fork "has the potential to reduce global agricultural greenhouse gas emissions by four percent and the number of undernourished people by 153 million by the year 2030," according to the report.

"This target is a highly ambitious upper bound and would require substantial changes by both consumers and producer side," they added.

Agriculture, forestry and other land use account for around one-fifth of global human-induced greenhouse gas emissions.

UN nations have committed to cutting per capita food waste by 50 percent by 2030 as part of sustainable development goals but there is no global target for reducing food loss along the production supply chain.

Between 2021 and 2023, fruit and vegetables accounted for more than half of the lost and wasted food given their extremely perishable nature and relatively short shelf life, according to the report.

Cereals followed, accounting for over a quarter of lost and wasted food.

The FAO estimates that approximately 600 million people will be facing hunger in 2030.

"Measures to reduce food loss and waste could significantly increase food intake worldwide as more food becomes available and prices fall, ensuring greater access to food for low-income populations," the report said.

Cabinet secy to sit with secretaries tomorrow

BAHARAM KHAN

The cabinet division yesterday called a meeting with all government secretaries at 4:30pm tomorrow and allegations of corruption against government officials is likely to be one of the topics of discussion.

The meeting agenda encompasses five issues, including integrity and good governance, implementation of the electoral manifesto and the national budget.

An additional secretary, preferring anonymity, told The Daily Star, "The cabinet secretary wants strict measures against corruption and irregularities in the ministries and divisions. There are some examples of pardoning officials even after the allegations of corruption against them were proven. He may give specific directives on these issues."

The meeting is taking place at a time when corruption allegations against government officials are widely discussed inside and outside the parliament.

Sources said the corruption issue is likely to dominate the meeting, which will be chaired by Cabinet Secretary Mahbub Hossain. They added that the Government Servant Conduct Rules-1979 is likely to be discussed.

Bogura jailer removed from post

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bogura

The jailer at Bogura District Jail, from which four death row convicts escaped briefly on June 26, has been removed from his post.

Jailer Faridur Rahman Rubel has been closed and attached to the DIG prison office in Rajshahi following an order of the Directorate of Prisons on Monday night, Anower Hossain, jail super of Bogura prison, told the Daily Star.

In Rubel's place, Syed Shah Sharif of Rajbari District Jail has been transferred to Bogura, said Anower.

Earlier, four prison guards, including Deputy Jailer Hosenuzzaman, were suspended for negligence in duty over the escape of four prisoners. A departmental case was also filed against three other prison guards.

Early on June 26, four death row convicts escaped by making a hole in the roof of a condemned cell. They were caught after one and a half hours by the police.

Two separate probe bodies are investigating the matter.

Govt may let its employees trade in shares

His case is simple yet intriguing. He entered the share market with insider information, an unlawful practice as per the capital market regulations, to mint money, they said.

"If the government employees are allowed to buy and sell in the stock market, corruption will increase manifold. There are both profits and losses in the speculative market. If an employee incurs losses, that employee may tilt towards corruption. Such an opportunity should not be given at all," former bureaucrat Firoz Mia told The Daily Star yesterday.

Government servants cannot lobby lawmakers, high officials, and political or non-political personalities, who have relationships with the government, to get direct or indirect benefits.

The draft now includes a provision that they cannot even send any electronic message to get any favours.

Officials said the use of electronic messages was mentioned in the draft to block a way of lobbying.

The draft said government servants can be candidates, if the rules allow and upon approval from the appropriate authorities, for posts in non-political organisations.

It also said they cannot join any protest programme violating rules, and they cannot make any statement to the media on behalf of any organisation without any approval.

Officials said if the draft is finally approved with this provision, government employees would require permissions for holding any press conference.

The draft forbids government servants from directly or indirectly visiting any foreign mission or aid agency to get invitation for travelling abroad or to avail training abroad.

As per the existing rules, government employees are not barred from becoming members of any recreational clubs.

Citing the "Boat Club", a high official said the incident involving actress Pori Moni embarrassed the government as a high-ranking official was the president of the club.

A provision has been included in the draft so that government employees cannot be members of clubs where people indulge in "unethical activities".

Sources said the existing rules do not specify what government employees can or cannot do on social media.

However, the draft said the government can take action against its employees if they violate the "Government Employee Discipline and Appeal Rules-2018".

Public Administration Minister Farhad Hossain said the draft was at the final stage, but there would be some changes.

"... I can say that a modern and time-befitting code of conduct will be formulated," he said.

Load shedding despite lower demand

At least 10,000MW of generation capacity is sitting idle due to fuel shortage or short- and long-term maintenance: 5,132MW is lost for maintenance and 4,971MW for fuel shortage.

Of the 4,971MW sitting idle, 3,152MW is for want of gas, according to data from PDB.

If the PDB wants to run all the installed gas-fired power plants, it will require at least 1,959 million cubic feet of gas per day (mmcfd).

But for the past month or so, it has been getting about 950 mmcfd after Cyclone Remal damaged one of the two floating storage and regasification units (FSRU), according to data from Petrobangla. The FSRU would not be operational before July 15.

Subsequently, 36 of the 70 gas-fired power plants are now out of service.

Before Cyclone Remal, PDB was getting about 1,300 mmcfd, according to Petrobangla.

In the absence of an adequate gas supply for the power plants, the PDB was relying on coal-fired power plants. But those are generating below their capacity.

Of the three main coal-fired power plants, Rampal and SS Power are operating at half capacity at best, with only Payra in full run.

Then on June 25, the 1,496MW Adani coal-fired power plant in Jharkhand, India abruptly shut down for a technical glitch. The plant came back into operation only yesterday.

Subsequently, the PDB has to run the costly furnace oil-run power plants, which has been impacting the power generation cost, according to officials informed with the proceedings.

"We have enough power generation capacity and there should not be any more load shedding across the country. But we couldn't let that happen," said Ijaz Hossain, a former professor at the Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology's department of chemical engineering.

There was about 1,000MW of load shedding in different parts of Bangladesh, according to data from the Bangladesh Rural Electrification Board, which supplies electricity to more than 70 percent of the subscribers, mainly in rural areas.

However, the PDB officials maintain the situation is stable.

"The weather is favourable [as the demand has dropped] -- we hope the situation will not further deteriorate," said Khandaker Mokammel Hossain, member (generation) of PDB.

The government always tries to cover up the actual situation, said M Shamsul Alam, energy advisor to Consumers Association of Bangladesh.

"Rather, they should admit the crisis and act accordingly," he said.

The gas supply situation is as bad as ever and unexpected situations have arisen too, said Hossain, the former BUET professor.

"We have to use high-cost furnace oil or diesel to keep the power supply normal and this is increasing the generation cost amid the dollar crunch. We had enough time to replace the high-cost fuel with renewables, but that did not happen. We need to rethink the whole situation more intensively," he added.

The government was never able to import as much fuel required to the power plants to meet the country's demand, said Alam, also the dean of Daffodil International University's faculty of engineering.

"They have just raised the power generation capacity without proper planning or demand analysis, which was highly required. We didn't follow any standard practice -- we have no policy either," he said.

For instance, sending so many power plants into maintenance at once is unusual, he said, adding that there were times when overloaded plants were put into operation and scheduled maintenance was postponed to meet the demand.

All the maintenance works should have been pre-scheduled and in rotation.

"It should not be done when power demand is high... this is just an excuse. We couldn't pay the fuel bills. We couldn't pay the plants' bills due to the dollar crunch. We have only taken loans from the donors and cleared dues with bonds. In the upcoming years, the loans will be paid. What will be the situation then, I can't imagine."

Public universities slip into turmoil

FBUTA Secretary General Nizamul Hoque said that they would request the prime minister to listen to their demands.

"The finance ministry has issued the circular [on the new pension scheme] and they might not amend it. So, we are requesting the prime minister to meet our demands," he told The Daily Star.

Prof Zeenat Huda, general secretary of Dhaka University Teachers Association, said, "Why such a discriminatory pension scheme was imposed on the teachers suddenly? The teachers will never accept this."

Staffers of the 35 universities under the banner of Inter University Officers Federation also continued work abstention yesterday demanding reinstatement of the previous pension system. This led to a halt in all administrative activities at those higher educational institutions.

Teachers have been demonstrating since May 26 protesting the government decision to include all officers and employees, joining the service of autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory, or similar organisations and their subordinate institutions on or after July 1, 2024, under the Prottoy scheme.

University teachers said that under the current system, no money is deducted from their basic salary for pensions, whereas the new scheme mandates a 10 percent deduction from the basic salary or Tk 5,000.

Teachers currently receive a one-time gratuity after going into retirement, but there is no mention of this facility in the new scheme. These two changes will eventually reduce the financial benefits of the university teachers who would join service on or after July 1, 2024.

Terming the new pension scheme discriminatory, teachers said that many people will not take up teaching at universities if the new scheme is implemented.

They also demanded a separate pay scale for university teachers and inclusion of professors in the pay grade equivalent to that of a senior secretary.

DEMO AT DU

All classrooms and libraries were closed at Dhaka University yesterday. Skipping classes and exams, teachers held a sit-in in front of the arts faculty building for about an hour.

Speaking at the sit-in, DUTA leaders said the teachers of 35 public universities have rejected the Prottoy scheme. They alleged that some vested quarters were spreading propaganda over the teacher's movement.

Addressing the demonstration, Nizamul rejected the explanation of the pension authority.

"We have logic behind our demands and the government will have to pay heed to it. We will accept our inclusion in the Sebok scheme [to be launched next year for government employees] if it is made universal [for teachers and government employees]," he said.

The National Pension Authority issued a statement yesterday and said that the government will amend the retirement age-related provision of the Prottoy scheme.

Boycotting administrative activities, staffers under the banner of Dhaka University Karmakarta Karmachari Oikya Parishad took out processions on the campus yesterday. They also staged sit-ins in front of the administrative building and the central library.

In Barishal, at least 10 people were injured after two officers' organisations of Barishal University brawled over taking part in a human chain protesting the introduction of the Prottoy pension scheme.

Witnesses said officers under the banners of Direct Officers Association and Barishal University Officers Association exchanged heated words over standing in the human chain. At one stage, they scuffled and threw plastic chairs at each other.

No classes and exams were held at the DU, BUET, Rajshahi, Jahangirnagar, Chittagong, Jagannath and other universities. The university authorities either kept the transport service suspended or significantly reduced trips to and from campuses.

MPs blast govt for sorry state of banking sector

The lawmaker said the state-owned bank Janata Bank was dying and that the status of private bank NBL was poor.

Criticising the interest waiver, he said natural calamities, death of borrowers could be the reason for waiving interest. But nothing happened, not even a disaster. Interest has been waived on dubious and lame excuses.

Without mentioning the name of former NBR official Matiur Rahman, Pankaj said the name of a controversial person is being discussed every day for his alleged corruption. One person holds three to four important positions. The controversy over his political identity started 15 years ago.

He enquired who recommended his name for these important positions.

While discussing the bill, JP MP Hafiz Uddin Ahmed said PK Halder had left for India with money. Many companies are bankrupt today. It is not clear whether those who deposited in the leasing company he was in will get their money back, he said.

Hafiz Uddin said Bangladesh Bank cannot exercise its power. The bank has become like a frog's umbrella. The condition of 10-20 banks is fragile.

Lawmaker Hamidul Haque Khandker said when it comes to our financial institutions and banks, everyone panics.

Ex-additional IGP, wife own Tk 30cr

Shamsuddoha has been named in the two charge sheets, while Ferdowsi has been included in a charge sheet.

On November 21, 2019, ACC Deputy Director Shahin Momtaj lodged a case against Shamsuddoha and another one against Ferdowsi, bringing allegations of hiding wealth information and amassing illegal wealth.

One of the two charge sheets said Shamsuddoha illegally acquired wealth worth Tk 2.87 crore and concealed wealth information worth 8.44 crore.

"Ferdowsi amassed wealth worth Tk 27.48 crore beyond known sources of income, while she concealed information of wealth worth 28.47 crore," investigator Khorshed said in another charge sheet.

Shamsuddoha abetted his wife in her acquiring the illegal wealth, the investigator added.

He started his career as assistant superintendent of police on August 28, 1986. Shamsuddoha became an additional IGP in 2011 and worked as BIWTA chairman from September 1, 2011, to February 28, 2015, according to the probe report.

"During his service, the former IGP misused power and accumulated a huge amount of assets beyond known sources of income. His wife Ferdowsi has a huge amount of wealth though she is a homemaker," it also said.

"Shamsuddoha claimed that he earned Tk 2.5 crore as salary, various allowances and from farming. He made a profit of Tk 1.5 crore after investing Tk 2.5 crore. He also got Tk 70 lakh from land sale. But he did not provide the ACC with any documents in favour of his claim," the investigator mentioned in the probe report.

In one case, the investigator appealed to the court to issue an arrest warrant for Shamsuddoha.

His wife Ferdowsi is on bail.

The charge sheets are likely to be placed before the judge of the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka today, a court staffer told The Daily Star yesterday.

Protests against quota intensify

STAR REPORT

Students from various universities in Bangladesh intensified their protests against the recent High Court decision reinstating the quota system in government jobs.

As part of the protests, hundreds of Dhaka University students blocked the Shahbagh intersection for an hour yesterday afternoon.

Beginning around 3:45pm, slogans filled the air as protesters blocked traffic from Bangla Motor to Shahbagh, causing significant congestion in Bangla Motor, Shahbagh, Science Lab, and Kakrail areas.

They left the intersection around 4:45pm.

Nahid Islam, one of the organisers of the "Boishommo Birodhi Chattrra Andolon", said, "We have resumed protests as our ultimatum ended on June 30."

Asif Mahmud, one of the organisers, demanded reinstatement of a 2018 circular that initially abolished the quota system.

"After that, if the government wants, they can reform quotas gradually in a logical way rather than a blanket reinstatement," he added.

Earlier, the students assembled at the Central Library

Haor dwellers bearing the brunt of Sylhet flood

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

The houses are barely standing on bamboo poles with fences broken, other parts dilapidated, and foundation submerged under water.

Some residents have found the most elevated space within their houses to stay put, while many have taken refuge in shelters or in their relatives' houses.

This was witnessed by this correspondent when he visited Murshibadakura, Baramaidan, Durgai, Paschim Gagra, Purba Gagra, Srirampur, Hakaluki Haor areas of Talimpur union under Barlekha upazila of Moulvibazar yesterday.

Many people in these areas chose to remain in their homes despite immense sufferings due to the ongoing flood which began on June 15.

Vast stretches of land have been inundated by floodwaters, especially in Hakaluki

Flood damages 39 schools in Rangpur

KONGKON KARMAKER, Dinajpur

At least 39 government primary schools across Rangpur division have either sustained damages to their infrastructure or washed away due to recent flash floods and river erosion.

Of those, 11 schools were in Gaibandha, 20 in Kurigram, two in Rangpur, and six in Lalmonirhat.

The damages were caused by the rising waters of Brahmaputra, Teesta, Dudhkumar, and Dharla rivers in Rangpur, Nilphamari, Kurigram, Lalmonirhat, and Gaibandha districts since mid-June, following torrential rainfall upstream in India.

According to locals and teachers, this has been a recurring issue that results in massive financial losses to the government and disrupts the education of hundreds of children.

Officials said these schools often cannot protect their lands and infrastructure from erosion and flash floods due to close proximity with the rivers.

As such, these schools are often built with corrugated tin sheets and bamboo for easier relocation.

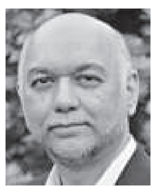
Javed Muneer re-elected NSU trustee board chair

CITY DESK



Javed Muneer Ahmad has been re-elected as the chairman of the board of trustees of North South University Trust for 2024-2025.

This announcement was made during the 13th annual general meeting of the NSU Trust on June 30, said a press release.

This marks Ahmad's second term as chairman.

A founding member of NSU, Ahmad's first tenure as chairman was for 2023-24.

Ahmad, the founding managing director of Aprosoft Consulting and Training Corp Ltd, has over 35 years of experience in the IT industry.

He also served on the boards of federally regulated non-profit organisations in the US for over 25 years, the press release added.

the killing.

Amanullah promised substantial financial support and arranged their passports, visas, and tickets to Kolkata, said the probe report.

Foysal and Mostafiz, both truck drivers by profession, did not have passports.

Siam, Aktaruzzaman's associate, confirmed payment for their passports and coordinated the entire process.

According to Mostafiz, they traveled from Khulna to Dhaka on April 15 to obtain Indian visas urgently.

After securing medical visas, they travelled to Khulna on April 25 and then to Kolkata on May 2, staying at a residential hotel.

On May 10, Mostafiz went to the New Town flat in Kolkata. He, alongside Jihad, Foysal, Mostafiz, and other members killed the lawmaker in the flat afterwards, according to the report.

Mostafiz and Foysal returned to Bangladesh on May 19 and visited Aktaruzzaman's flat.

They went into hiding after the victim's family filed a case with Sher-E-Bangla Nagar police, and Amanullah was arrested.

On June 26 evening, the two suspects were arrested from a temple in Chattogram's Sitakunda. They are on a six-day remand in DB custody.

DB chief Harun Or Rashid, also an additional commissioner of the DMP, said to dodge the eyes of law enforcers, they started working as cooks at the temple.

"Foysal and Mostafiz are the followers of Amanullah, a leader of outlawed Purbo Banglar Communist Party. They worked as two main associates for Amanullah in the murder of the MP," he said, adding that the two were involved in different criminal activities on Amanullah's instructions.

During interrogation, they said the passports were kept at Aktaruzzaman's Bashundhara residence. Cops recovered the passports from under a mattress during a raid at the flat on June 29, as detailed in the investigation report.

Five individuals have confessed to the murder so far.

They are: Amanullah, his nephew Tanvir Bhuiyan, Aktaruzzaman's friend Celesty Rahman, and Kazi Kamal Babu, Jhenaidah AL's relief secretary.

Foysal remains in custody, while Saidul Karim Mintu, Jhenaidah AL's general secretary, is in jail.

Maasranga Television, and his wife Meherun Runi, a senior reporter at ATN Bangla, were killed in the early hours of February 11, 2012, at their rented flat in the capital's West Rajabazar.

"The investigation into the Sagar-Runi murder case has not yet been completed even after 12 years, as such, its trial has not seen the light of day yet. Unfortunately, this case has been continuously ridiculing our criminal justice system and damaging it to an irreparable stage, which was remedied to some extent by the Bangabandhu murder case and the cases before the International Crime Tribunals," the HC bench of Justice Sheikh Hassan Arif and Justice Md Bazlur Rahman said in the 65-page verdict released yesterday.

On May 13 this year, the HC bench delivered the verdict following a petition filed by three death-row convicts on August 31, 2021, challenging the legality of confining them to death cells before attaining the finality of their sentence.

In the full text of the verdict released yesterday, the HC directed the authorities concerned to start immediate arrangements for shifting the prisoners from death cells to ordinary prisons and complete the process within two years.

around 2:30pm and marched from Nilkhet to Katabon intersection, before reaching Shahbagh.

Police were stationed in anticipation of their arrival. During the protest, students made a four-point demand, including reinstatement of the 2018 notification and merit-based recruitment.

Similarly, students from Jahangirnagar University, Barisal University, Jagannath University, Chittagong University, and Islamic University, Kushtia brought out processions and held rallies in and around their campuses.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh Muktijoddha Sontan Sangsad also made their stance clear, advocating for the preservation of the 30 percent quota for children of freedom fighters.

They made a seven-point demand in front of the Raju Sculpture around 10:30am.

"Since university students are unhappy with the 30 percent quota for the children of freedom fighters, the government can consider how it can be decreased to a more acceptable level," said Solaiman Mia, chairman of the platform.

Haor and adjoining areas, with villages appearing as a vast water body when this correspondent was on his way to Murshibadkura village by boat.

To make things worse, waves from the haor are hitting the waterlogged houses, washing away soil from the bases and weakening the foundations further.

Residents were trying to protect their houses from the waves with bamboo, pieces of corrugated iron sheets, and water hyacinths.

The fear of snakes looms large at night.

"I have two daughters, and 5-6 cattle. It is difficult to navigate the waterlogged surroundings to reach the shelters. So I remained home, even though we are essentially trapped inside for three weeks. The flood situation keeps worsening," said Husna Begum, a resident of Murshibadkura village.

"No help has reached us yet. We are struggling to survive," she added.

Kamrul Islam, a fisherman from the same area, said the flood this year has been a big blow.

"We have not recovered yet from the damage caused by the 2022 flood. This year, the storm caused a lot of damage to the house. Then the flood has left us reeling. We are spending sleepless nights in fear of waves and snakes.

Somehow, I am putting food on the plate for the family by catching fish. No one can understand the difficulty poor people like us are going through," he said.

Fokhor Uddin of Baramaidan village said, "Our house got significantly damaged in the flood. It will take a lot of money to fix the house once the flood recedes."

Najratun Naeem, UNO of Barlekha upazila, said, "We have sufficient stock of food grains. Instructions have been given to ensure that no flood-affected person is left out of relief supplies."

ATU surrounded the building, evacuated its residents, and cut power lines in the surrounding area. ATU officials assumed the recovered IEDs were made in the flat.

ATU's Bomb Disposal Unit defused one IED inside the flat, while two others were defused in an open space next to the building. Two machetes and some knives were also found inside the flat.

A case will be filed, said OC Deepak Chandra Saha of Rupganj Police Station.

Daughter killed her to conceal affair

Her brother filed a case with Savar Model Police Station the following day.

CID investigated for over four years, arresting three suspects but ultimately sought their exemption in a final report.

The case was then assigned to the PBI.

PBI's investigation into the murder revealed crucial evidence: a broken switchboard and a bloodstain hand mark on the wall.

"During investigation, we found out the victim was stabbed before electrocution," said Kudrat-e Khuda, PBI Dhaka district special superintendent.

The accused, Shubol, confessed to his involvement, citing affair with Selima's elder daughter, Poppy, as motive, he added.

Elora Khan Majlish, younger daughter of the victim, said, "My sister even accompanied us to the Prime Minister's Office seeking justice. We never imagined she could kill our mother."

work. She emphasised completing preliminary paperwork now to ensure full-scale project implementation after September."

Senior Secretary of the Planning Division, Satyajit Karmakar, echoed the PM's concerns, noting an expected rise in rainfall and river water levels, suggesting a heightened risk of flooding in August nationwide.

Karmakar said the PM directed civil and field administrations to prepare adequately to mitigate flood impacts and protect citizens.

During the meeting, 11 projects were approved, with a combined estimated cost of Tk 5,459.87 crore.

Of this amount, Tk 5,214.34 crore will be funded by the Bangladeshi government, Tk 140.44 crore from project assistance, and Tk 105.09 crore from organisational funds.

Among the approved projects, seven are new initiatives, while four involve revisions.

"Patilbari Primary School had to be relocated three times in the past year due to erosion," said Mahbubur Rahman, headteacher of the school in Saghata upazila of Gaibandha.

Abdul Malek, headteacher of the school in Gaibandha's Sundarganj upazila, said, "Bhati Borail Govt Praimary School has been vulnerable to Teesta's erosion over the past one and half years. We have continuously contacted the LGED department for relocation. Recently, the school has been relocated."

Authorities of Gujimari and Khamar Damarhat government primary schools in Kurigram's Ulipur did the same.

"Kurigram saw the most schools damaged in floods and erosion in the division, affecting at least 1,300 students," said Md Amir Hossain, primary education officer in Ulipur upazila.

Contacted, Muzahidul Islam, deputy director of Primary Education Department in Rangpur, said they are working on alternative measures to compensate for the academic losses.

‘2 killers went to Kolkata on medical visa’

Says DB in report to court

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and CHAITANYA CHANDRA HALDER

Foysal Ali Sahazi and Mostafizur Rahman Fakir travelled to Kolkata on a medical visa to murder Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar.

Aktaruzzaman, mastermind of the killing mission, arranged their bank statements, medical documents, and other papers required for visa application through Siam Hossain, another suspect.

The two stayed at Aktaruzzaman’s flat in Bashundhara, Dhaka, from April 15 to 24, to submit their visa applications at Jamuna Future Park’s Indian Visa Centre, according to a report submitted to the court by the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Mahfuzur Rahman, the investigation officer, disclosed this information after investigating Mostafizur.

Mostafiz said in late March, he and Foysal contacted Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan, for money needed for ‘Waste of time, money to place such a bill’

MPs criticise placement of trade, tariff commission bill

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Trade and Tariff Commission (Amendment) Bill, 2024 was passed in Parliament yesterday to further amend Bangladesh Trade and Tariff Commission Act, 1992.

The amendment bill was placed to change the name of the “secretary” post of Bangladesh Trade and Tariff Commission to “director”.

State Minister for Commerce Ahasanul Islam Titu moved the bill, and it was passed by voice vote, however, multiple lawmakers criticised it.

Jatiyo Party MP Hafiz Uddin Ahmed said the work of the commerce ministry is to control commodity prices.

If the ministry brought any law to control the market, or if they had brought any law to break syndicates, then it could be said the commerce ministry is doing a good job, said Hafiz. “It [commerce ministry] tries to control the market at times, and things become fine then. But things return to how they were after the ministry leaves.”

Independent MP Pankaj Nath said the bill is not in the interest of the people. People’s interests would be served if the Tariff Commission was tasked with determining the prices of consumer goods, daily commodities, availability in the market, coordination of imports and production and making it easy for the people, he said.

He criticised bringing the bill to parliament just to change a word, saying, “It is a waste of time and money to call 350 MPs of parliament to change the name of the position from secretary to director.”

Several people were injured after two separate officers’ organisations of Barisal University clashed over taking part in a human chain against the Universal Pension Scheme yesterday afternoon. The incident took place near the administrative building. New curriculum, same old craze for guidebooks

Despite government efforts to promote a new curriculum focusing on critical thinking, guide books aligned with the old memorisation-based approach continue to dominate book markets.

As subject-based six-month assessments for grades six to nine are scheduled to start today, the sales of these supplementary materials have surged in recent months.

According to the National Curriculum and Textbook Board Act, only books published or approved by the board can be prescribed as textbooks in schools.

Additionally, the Book Prohibition Act of 1980 completely bans the printing and marketing of unauthorised notes or guidebooks.

While visiting several book markets in the capital, guidebooks aligned with the new curriculum were found to be displayed and openly sold.

Rashed Mia, owner of a bookstore in Farmgate, said, “Despite the introduction of the new curriculum, the demand for guidebooks remains steadfast. Parents and students regularly seek these materials.”

Another shop owner in Nilkhet said Mathematics guides for class 9 published by Panjeree Publications are being sold at Tk 430, English at Tk 360, and History and Social Science at Tk 320, among others.

Guidebooks are similarly prevalent in book markets across Rajshahi, Kushtia, Jhenidah, Khulna, and several other districts, as found by our local correspondents.

Jahurul Islam, a parent in Jhenidah, said, “My children find it challenging to grasp the curriculum, and often teachers are not supportive. So, we purchase guidebooks.”

A teacher from Rajdhani High School in the capital said the new curriculum has the potential to reduce students’ reliance on guidebooks, but it would take time.

“Until then, parents will continue seeking such resources, as the guidebooks offer additional chapters and exercises for their children,” the teacher added.

Even different online platforms are selling guidebooks of major publishers like Panjeree, Lecture Publications, and Royal Publications.

This newspaper reviewed an English guidebook for class nine, spanning 558 pages.

Upon analysing several chapters, it was observed that each chapter begins with instructions for students, teachers, and guardians.

The guidebook provides step-by-step guidance on how students should approach activities after studying a topic in the original textbook.

It also includes additional examples, questions, and answers relevant to each subject.

WHAT AUTHORITIES SAY

Prof Moshiuzzaman, acting chairman of NCTB, said, “Regulations alone cannot eliminate guidebooks from the market. What we need is a systematic change, which is exactly what the new curriculum aims to achieve.”

“When parents realise that guidebooks offer limited support unless students engage in class activities or assignments, their demand will naturally decline,” he added.

MURDER OF EX-MP’S WIFE

Daughter killed her to conceal affair: PBI

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Shubal Kumar Roy, an electrician by profession, was a frequent visitor to former MP Shamsuddoha Khan Majlish’s house.

He engaged in an affair with the lawmaker’s daughter, Shamima Khan Majlish alias Poppy.

When MP’s wife Selima Khan Majlish came to know about it, she restricted Shubal’s entry to the house.

In response, Poppy allegedly stabbed her mother to death to conceal the affair, then attempted to stage the murder as an accident by electrocuting Selina with Shubal’s assistance.

Banaj Kumar Majumder, the chief of Police Bureau of Investigation, yesterday confirmed the arrests of Shubal, Poppy, and house help Aarti Sarkar in connection with the murder, which took place 13 years ago.

On June 14, 2011, Selima was found injured at her home in Savar. She died at Combined Military Hospital on June 18.

3 IEDs from Rupganj flat recovered

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narayanganj

Anti-Terrorism Unit, a specialised unit of Police, yesterday recovered three improvised explosive devices (IED) from a flat of a four-storey residential building at Narayanganj’s Rupganj upazila and defused them later through explosion.

ATU started the drive at 10:30am, which lasted six hours.

Mohammad Sanowar Hossain, SP (Operation) of ATU, said, “The flat was rented by militants as a hideout. Two men and one woman, along with two children, were living in this flat for a few months. Those three adults have connections with Ansar-Al-Islam.”

However, ATU didn’t reveal their names.

Md Shahnewaz, a tenant of the building, said, “The building’s owner is a Saudi expatriate. The flat was rented out to a couple a few months ago.”

Sanowar said a female Ansar-Al-Islam member

Didn't think a director could ruin his own creation: Bobby

ZAHID AKBAR

This Eid-ul-Azha, Eamin Haque Bobby starrer film Moyurakkhi was released nationwide. Shortly after, the actress expressed disappointment in her portrayal, claiming it did not match what was promised. She also accused the film's director, Rashid Polash, of not paying her full remuneration.

In addition to her acting career, Bobby has ventured into the restaurant business, opening Bobstar Dining in Gulshan, Dhaka. However, the business has faced financial losses.

Recently, a case was filed against Bobby at Gulshan Police Station, accusing her of attempted murder, theft, assault, and intimidation related to her restaurant business. Bobby discussed these issues with The Daily Star.

In addition to her acting career, Bobby has ventured into the restaurant business, opening Bobstar Dining in Gulshan, Dhaka. However, the business has faced financial losses.

Could you share with us the issue between 'Moyurakkhi's' director Rashid Polash and you?

The story of the movie is beautiful, and those who have seen it can attest to this. It could have been even better, but the director [Rashid Polash] failed to portray my character properly. Many beautiful sequences were not included in the released version. I never imagined a director could treat his creation in such a way. As a result, the movie seemed disorganised.

There have been allegations against you that you physically assaulted the director regarding this film.

The production company handed over all payments to the director, but he did not properly pay the remunerations of all the artistes. He also told the producer he needed money to shoot specific scenes but never filmed them.

Just a day before Eid, we were told the film would be released in 15 theatres, but it ended up in only two. When we confronted him, we argued, and something happened that I should not detail.

The director claimed that he paid your remuneration completely and also said you were not on time on set.

They scheduled me for about 17 days, but I only shot for six. Many of the scenes I shot were not included in the film. Despite taking money from the producers in my name, I did not receive my full payment as per the agreement. The director should provide evidence for his claims.

You have been accused of attempted murder, theft, physical assault, and intimidation. What do you have to say about these allegations?

These are all false. I am an artiste, and these actions are intended to damage my image. Those behind this thought I would remain silent, out of fear of losing my reputation. However, I have always believed in standing up against injustice. In my decade-long career, no one has ever made negative remarks against me. I am now addressing this legally. Since false cases have been filed against me, I have also filed a case stating the truth and everything that has happened.

For the past three months, I have tried to resolve this matter but couldn't find a solution. After the attack at the restaurant, I had no choice but to speak out. These incidents have caused me extreme mental and financial distress. I have lost around Tk 75 lakh. Additionally, Muhammad Sakib Uddoja, AGM of YN Centre, has filed a false case against me and my business partner, Mirza Abul Bashar.

What are your expectations from this case now?

I believe the real truth will come out soon. Circumstances are not always favourable for everyone, but I have never encouraged anyone to fabricate something to gain attention in any legal case. All the recognition I have received so far is through my work. I believe that justice will be served.

Kareena Kapoor starrer 'The Buckingham Murders' drops premiere date

Kareena Kapoor starrer The Buckingham Murders has finally locked the release date. The Hansal Mehta directorial film will be released in theatres this September 13.

Kareena Kapoor's character in the film, inspired by Kate Winslet in Mare of Easttown, is a mother and detective solving a murder in Buckinghamshire.

The filmmakers shared the film's poster alongside the film's release date via Instagram.

The Buckingham Murders also stars Ash Tandon, Ranveer Brar, and Keith Allen. It is written by Aseem Arrora, Kashyap Kapoor, and Raghav Raj Kakker.

The film had its world premiere at the 67th BFI London Film Festival in October 2023.

'John Wick' producers to remake Hindi film

THIS JOURNEY IS ONE-WAY

The production companies behind the popular John Wick franchise, Lionsgate and 87Eleven Entertainment, have announced their plans to create an English-language remake of the upcoming Indian action thriller Kill.

The Hindi-language original, directed by Nikhil Nagesh Bhat and produced by Karan Johar, is set to release in India on July 5.

Kill, which premiered at TIFF's Midnight Madness and was featured at Tribeca, follows Indian Army commando Amrit (Lakshya) as he races against time and armed foes on a New Delhi-bound train to save Tulika (Tanya Maniktala).

Road damaged before handing over

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Carpeting of a four-kilometre-long newly renovated road in Barguna's Patharghata upazila is getting damage at different points even before handing over the road resurfacing work.

Local people, however, blamed use of sub-standard materials in the construction work and lack of supervision by the authorities concerned as well.

During a recent visit this correspondent found the newly constructed road, stretching from in front of Patharghata Upazila Health Complex to Haringhata Eco Park, has developed numerous cracks at different spots withing three months of the road resurfacing work.

According to Patharghata Local Government Engineering Department (LGED), a tender was called to construct the four-kilometre road, under Road Widening and Strengthening Project, in 2022-23 fiscal year.

Abul Kalam Azad, a contractor from Patuakhali, got the Tk 6.72 crore work order that started in June 2023 and was scheduled to the completed by June this year.

However, two local contractors from Barguna -- Mohammad Shahin and Shahidul Islam Mridha -- took the sub-contract of the work and implemented it.

Local resident Mojibur Rahman said they were happy to see the road work done, but soon got disappointed after seeing the newly resurfaced road collapsing at many points within three months of its construction.

Patharghata Sadar Union Parishad (UP) Chairman Alamgir Hossain said the situation arises due to lack of proper supervision and carelessness by the authorities concerned.

Although LGED has been informed about the irregularities on several occasions, but to no avail, he added.

Despite repeated attempts this correspondent could not contact one of the sub-contractors Shahin for his comment in this regard as he did not receive the mobile phone.

While talking, another sub-contractor Shahidul said construction of the road has been done as per the work schedule.

Patharghata LGED Upazila Engineer Chandan Chakraborty said the contractor concern is yet to hand over the project officially and it is his responsibility to repair the damaged portion of the road.

Contacted, Sultana Nadira, lawmaker from Barguna-2 constituency, said the upazila LGED engineer has been asked not to pay the final bill until the road repair work is done.

the National Board of Revenue; governor of Bangladesh Bank; and head of Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit have been made respondents to the rule.

The court said corruption and money laundering must be stopped as they are obstacles to good governance and development.

"People of all classes and professions, including judges, lawyers and journalists should join hands and build a movement against corruption in order to turn Bangladesh into the 'Sonar Bangla' that Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman dreamed of," the bench said during the hearing of a writ petition.

The order and rule were issued following the petition filed by Supreme Court lawyer Subir Nandi Das seeking the HC's directive on the government to disclose the movable and immovable properties held by government servants serving in civil capacity, and by their family members.

He submitted the petition as a public interest litigation to the court on Monday, also appealing to the it to direct authorities concerned of the government to adopt guidelines or policies or to enact proper legislation in this regard.

According to section 13(1) of the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules-1979, "Every government servant shall, at the time of entering government service, make a declaration to the government through the usual channel, of all immovable and movable properties, including shares, certificates, securities, insurance policy, and jewellery having a total value of Tk 10,000 [Tk 50,000 under amended provision] or more belonging to, or held by him or a member of his family and such declaration shall state the district within which the property is situated, show separately individual items of jewellery exceeding Tk 10,000 [Tk 50,000 under amended provision] in value, and give such further information as the government may, by general or special order, require. Every government servant shall submit to the government, through usual channel an annual return of assets in the month of December showing any increase or decrease of property as shown in the declaration under sub-rule [1] or, as the case may be, the last annual return."

The bench scheduled October 22 for the hearing of the rule.

Subir Nandi Das himself moved the petition while Deputy Attorney General AKM Amin Uddin Manik and AKM Fazlul Hoque appeared for the state and the ACC respectively during the hearing.

shelters that the local administrations have reopened.

Sitara Begum, 60, of Jamura village in Sunamganj's Chhatak upazila, returned home from the shelter centre barely a week ago; now her house has been submerged once more.

"Before I could repair the house, another flood hit my village, forcing me to move back to the shelter centre," she said in a frustration-filled voice.

Meanwhile, road communication with Sylhet's Companiganj and Gowainghat, and Sunamganj's Dowarabazar, Tahirpur, and Bishwambharpur has been snapped.

In Moulvibazar, sections of a road that serves as a dyke for the Kushiyara River got breached at Hamorkona village in Sadar upazila, inundating vast areas.

The latest round of flash floods hit in the early hours of yesterday, and the situation is rapidly deteriorating due to the relentless rain.

In 24 hours till yesterday morning, Sunamganj town recorded 300mm of rainfall, Sylhet recorded 294mm, Sunamganj's Chhatak recorded 233mm, Sunamganj's Tahirpur recorded 211mm, and Moulvibazar's Sherpur recorded 183mm.

At the same time, Meghalaya's Mawsynram recorded 207mm of rainfall, while Cherrapunji recorded 141mm in the 24 hours till last morning, according to the Indian Meteorological Department.

In the next two days, there is a possibility of light to moderate rainfall over all the country along with heavy to very heavy rainfall in some areas, according to the Bangladesh Meteorological Department.

The IMD also predicts very heavy rainfall in Assam and the neighbouring state of Meghalaya until Friday.

Owing to the constant rain, the Surma, Kushiyara, Sari, Gowain, Juri, and Manu rivers are all flowing above the danger level and rapidly rising, the Water Development Board reported yesterday.

Aftab Ahmed, chairman of Tahirpur upazila, said, "The upazila has been severely affected, with residents of Tanguar Haor, Shanir Haor, and Matian Haor losing their homes to the recent flood."

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has urged all concerned, including civil administration, to prepare for potential floods across the country in order to protect citizens from the consequences and devastation.

Contacted, Sylhet Divisional Commissioner Abu Ahmed Siddique, said, "The region is experiencing a third wave of flooding due to heavy rainfall here as well as in neighbouring India's Meghalaya and Assam states. The coming days could be critical, depending on the rains.

"Since the first round of flooding, we have been continuing our relief distribution efforts, which will continue until the flood-affected people's hardships are alleviated."

"We currently have an allocation of 4,500 tonnes of rice, Tk 1.5 crore cash, and Tk 45 lakh worth of baby food, in addition to cattle fodder and packaged dry foods."

"This is sufficient for now but with this new round of flooding, we have requested for more allocation."

to issue asset declaration notices to them under section 26(1) of the Anti-Corruption Commission Act, 2004. Accordingly, the notices were issued yesterday.

In another development, the anti-graft body yesterday served notices to former member of National Board of Revenue Matiur Rahman, his two wives, and children, asking their wealth information, ACC Secretary Khorsheda told the media.

She said the ACC has sought wealth statements of Matiur, first wife Laila Kaniz, her children Ahmed Taufiqur Rahman Arnab, Farzana Rahman Ipsita, and second wife Shammi Akhtar Shivli.

During the inquiry, the ACC has come to know that Matiur owns a large amount of wealth in his name and the names of others beyond known sources of income, said the notices.

Statements of all movable and immovable assets, liabilities, sources of income, and the details of their land acquisition shall be submitted to the commission.

The victory put the Oranje on course for a quarter-final clash with Turkey or Austria, who beat the Netherlands in 3-2 in the group stage.

"We played a good game. I'm very pleased. Especially after the last game we needed a reaction and today was a good step in the right direction," Gakpo said.

"We talked a lot about the aggression, the intensity and defending like a team. It was a good step.

ADANI SHORT BET

Hindenburg denies SEBI's allegations

REUTERS

Hindenburg Research has denied allegations by India's securities regulator that it colluded with a US asset manager to use non-public information to set up a short bet against Adani Group last year, which if proven would breach the country's rules.

Hindenburg posted a copy of a 46-page "show cause" notice from the Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI) outlining the allegations on its website on Monday, in the latest twist to a saga that began last year when the US-based short-seller alleged improper business dealings by Adani.

The notice said that six entities including Hindenburg, Kingdon Capital Management and a Mauritius-based trading fund set up by Kotak Mahindra Bank violated certain rules under the Prevention of Fraud and Unfair Trade Practices regulation. It was dismissed in a statement by Hindenburg as "nonsense".

Kingdon did not respond to an emailed request for comment yesterday.

FRANCE ELECTION

Candidates exit runoff to block far right from power

AFP, Paris

French candidates faced a deadline yesterday to stay in or quit the weekend's runoff election, with over 160 withdrawing so far in an effort to block the far right from winning an absolute majority.

France votes Sunday in the decisive final round of the snap legislative polls President Emmanuel Macron called after his camp received a drubbing in European polls last month.

His gamble appears to have backfired, with the far-right National Rally (RN) of Marine Le Pen scoring a victory in the June 30 first round with more than 10.6 million votes.

Faced with the prospect of the far right taking power in France for the first time since the country's occupation by Nazi Germany during WWII, Macron's camp and the left have urged a broad "Republican Front" to stop the anti-immigration and eurosceptic party of Le Pen.

The rivals are hoping that putting their differences aside ahead of runoff with withdrawals will prevent the RN winning an absolute majority of 289 seats in the 577-seat National Assembly.

Former Pak PM Imran Khan arbitrarily detained

Says UN panel

AFP, Geneva

A panel of UN experts has determined that the detention of former Pakistani prime minister Imran Khan was arbitrary and a violation of international law, calling for him to be released "immediately".

In an opinion published Monday, the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention raised concerns about multiple cases brought against Khan since he was ousted in April 2022.

It found that his depravation of liberty was "arbitrary" and violated several international laws and norms.

Khan's "detention had no legal basis and appears to have been intended to disqualify him from running for political office", the working group said.

"Thus, from the outset, that prosecution was not grounded in law and was reportedly instrumentalised for a political purpose," it said in the opinion, which was dated March 25 and made public Monday.

The working group, made up of five independent experts whose opinions are not binding but carry reputational weight, called on Pakistan's government to "take the steps necessary to remedy the situation".

"The appropriate remedy would be to release Mr. Khan immediately and accord him an enforceable right to compensation and other reparations, in accordance with international law," it added.

The experts also called on Pakistan's government to ensure "a full and independent investigation of the circumstances surrounding the arbitrary deprivation of liberty of Mr. Khan, and to take appropriate measures against those responsible for the violation of his rights".

It's a 'dangerous precedent'

Biden blasts top court ruling on Trump immunity

AFP, Washington

President Joe Biden warned later on Monday that the US Supreme Court's landmark ruling on presidential immunity sets a "dangerous precedent" that Donald Trump would exploit if elected in November.

The conservative-dominated High Court ruled that Trump -- and all presidents -- enjoy "absolute immunity" from criminal prosecution for "official acts" taken while in office, but can still face criminal penalties for "unofficial acts."

"For all practical purposes today's decision almost certainly means there are no limits to what a president can do. This is a fundamentally new principle, and it's a dangerous precedent," Biden said in a speech at the White House.

Trump is facing criminal charges over his attempts to overturn his 2020 election loss to Biden, but that trial had been put on hold while the Supreme Court considered his immunity claims.

The 6-3 ruling on Monday, split along ideological lines, is set to further delay proceedings in that case, almost certainly to sometime after voters head to the polls in November.

"The American people must decide if they want to entrust... once again, the presidency to Donald Trump, now knowing he'll be more emboldened to do whatever he pleases, whenever he wants to do it," Biden said.

Conservative Chief Justice John Roberts, in his majority opinion, said a president is "not above the law" but does have "absolute immunity" from criminal prosecution for official acts taken while in office.

"The president therefore may not be prosecuted for exercising his core constitutional powers," Roberts said.

"As for a President's unofficial acts, there is no immunity," the chief justice added, sending the case back to a lower court to determine which of the charges facing Trump involve official or unofficial conduct.

Trump is charged with conspiracy to defraud the United States as well as obstruction of an official proceeding -- when a violent mob of his supporters tried to prevent the January 6, 2021, joint session of Congress held to certify Biden's victory.

The 78-year-old former president is also charged with conspiracy to deny Americans the right to vote and to have their votes counted.

"The public has a right to know the answer about what happened on January 6, before they're asked to vote again this year," Biden said.

"Now because of today's decision, that is highly, highly unlikely. It's a terrible disservice to the people of this nation," he said.

The three liberal justices dissented from Monday's ruling with Justice Sonia Sotomayor saying she was doing so "with fear for our democracy."

"...the presidency to Donald Trump, now knowing he'll be more emboldened to do whatever he pleases, whenever he wants to do it."

Manila, Beijing agree to 'de-escalate'

AFP, Manila

The Philippines and China yesterday agreed to "de-escalate tensions" over the South China Sea, Manila said, following a violent clash in the disputed waters.

"The two sides discussed their respective positions on Ayungin Shoal and affirmed their commitment to de-escalate tensions without prejudice to their respective positions," the Philippine foreign ministry said in a statement, using the country's name for Second Thomas Shoal in the Spratly Islands.

Chinese coast guard personnel wielding knives, sticks and an axe surrounded and boarded three Philippine navy boats near the shoal last month, the latest and most serious in a number of escalating confrontations.

A Filipino soldier lost a finger in the June 17 clash, with Manila also accusing the Chinese coast guard of looting guns and damaging three boats as well as navigational and communication equipment.

Beijing insisted its coast guard behaved in a "professional and restrained" way and blamed Manila for the clash.

UK election gives hope to first time immigrant voters

REUTERS, London

Voting for the first time in a British election, Prathesh Panjak and other immigrant voters are excited to take part in the July 4 ballot, hoping they can influence change in the country that they have chosen to call home.

The opposition Labour Party is widely expected to win by a landslide, replacing Prime Minister Rishi Sunak's Conservative Party which has been in power for 14 years. Refugees and immigrants from Commonwealth countries, mainly former territories of the British Empire such as Nigeria, India, and Malaysia, are eligible to vote in British elections.

"In my country, they don't allow people from other countries to vote ... I came here on a student visa, but they are giving us an opportunity, like British citizens," said Panjak who works part-time as an ambassador at his university in Manchester, northwest England.

Pension worries must be resolved

Teachers' strike shows the importance of dialogue and clarity

In a concerning development, Bangladesh's public universities have come to a grinding halt. Classrooms are locked, exams are postponed, and administrative work has stalled, as teachers of 35 public universities have gone on an indefinite strike demanding their exemption from the new Prottoy Universal Pension Scheme. Teachers argue that the new scheme—which will be applicable for recruits joining on or after July 1 in any autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory, or such organisations and their subordinate institutions—is discriminatory, offering significantly lower benefits compared to the existing system for government employees. The government, on the other hand, defends Prottoy as a step towards a uniform and sustainable pension system for all public sector employees. They claim the scheme, in the long run, will offer higher monthly payouts than the existing plan.

While currently no money is deducted from teachers' salary, under Prottoy, 10 percent of the monthly basic salary of an employee, up to Tk 5,000, will be deducted for the pension fund, and the organisation will contribute a matching amount to the fund. Meanwhile, there will be no one-time gratuity for the retiring employee, but instead a significantly higher monthly installment will be payable to the retired individual for their lifetime. In case of death, however, dependents can claim the pension for 15 years from when the installment starts, rather than for a lifetime as per the current scheme. And there will no longer be a five percent annual increment on the pension amount.

While there can be no denying the budgetary burden of pension payments, and the need for a modernised, universal and sustainable pension system, the question raised by the academics remains—if the system is so good, why have bureaucrats, judiciary and military personnel been exempted from it? While the government says they will institute a similar scheme for bureaucrats, there are anxieties among teachers—not without reason—about possible discrimination in benefits in the absence of any clarity on the matter. Why not make the details of the upcoming scheme for bureaucrats, Shebok, public as well? Why institute such a top-down approach to implementation without, at the very least, engaging academics and other Prottoy pensioners in a meaningful dialogue?

The Bangladesh University Teachers Samity Federation has been organising various programmes since the new scheme's announcement on March 13, including half-day work abstention on June 4, and work abstention for three consecutive days last week. We are at a loss to understand why, during this time, no attempt was made to engage the aggrieved parties in a consultation. Whatever the merits or demerits of Prottoy may be, it is obvious that a consensus cannot be reached without constructive and transparent discussions among the relevant stakeholders as well as an impartial assessment of the benefits of such a scheme.

Having said that, we cannot condone an indefinite strike on education. For the sake of the students, we need to find a solution fast, which requires open dialogue and compromise, not egoistic tussles. The government needs to address the concerns of discrimination and provide a transparent review of the scheme's calculations. Moving forward, we also need to initiate a broader discussion about how "universal" the scheme really is, including for those outside the purview of public institutions.

Feasibility studies a must for BR projects

Bangladesh Railway needs to stop wasting public money

That Bangladesh Railway (BR) has been a loss-incurring entity for almost a decade is not news. Yet, it is difficult not to get flabbergasted by BR projects that not only squandered public money during the implementation phase, but continues to be a burden for taxpayers. The lone passenger train operating on the Rajshahi-Rajbari-Gopalganj route, which railway authorities extended to bring Tungipara, the birthplace of the father of the nation, under the railway network is one such example.

According to a report in this daily, the government approved this project in 2010 to revive a 75-kilometre old, inoperative line from Kalukhali of Rajbari to Bhatiapara Ghat of Gopalganj and build a 32-kilometre line from Kashiani to Gopalganj to connect Tungipara. The project was completed in 2018, five years behind schedule and with a huge cost overrun. Till date, it has failed to generate enough return on investment because only one train runs on the Tk-2,011-crore line.

Additionally, there was no monitoring or quality checks of the material used by the contractors, essentially making the line risky. Now four stations and several staff quarters built along the route remain unused and are falling into decay. A top railway official attributed the underutilisation to the shortage of manpower, locomotives and carriages, but failed to acknowledge the issue of low traffic demand on that route.

We have repeatedly called attention to irregularities, inefficiency and poor performance of the railway authorities in implementing viable and profitable projects, and ensuring proper maintenance of its physical assets and infrastructure. But no one has ever been held accountable for BR's continuous wastage of public funds. Around the world, railway, a mode of transport with a low carbon footprint, is witnessing a comeback. If we want to follow on that track, we must ensure pragmatic and judicious leadership at the BR.

Unbridled corruption and a minister's reckless comment

A CLOSER LOOK

Tasneem Tayeb
is a columnist for The Daily Star. Her X handle is @tasneem_tayeb.

TASNEEM TAYEB

As one of the fastest growing economies in Asia, Bangladesh is currently the 35th largest economy in the world (as of 2022) and aspires to clinch the 25th spot by 2035—earning the apt label of "the emerging Asian Tiger." Grand ambitions, grander dreams and the grandest rhetoric by our politicians and policymakers make the country look all set to conquer the future.

Unfortunately, the reality is, Bangladesh is mired in multiple economic and sociopolitical challenges that would make achieving these ambitious targets considerably difficult. With a persistent high inflation (9.89 percent in May 2024), rising poverty and people's shrinking purchasing power, uncontrollable foreign exchange volatility that we are having to cushion with foreign loans, non-performing loans (NPLs) reaching an all-time high of Tk 182,295 crore, and the economy struggling to grow with the IMF repeatedly slashing growth projections, our economic hurdles ahead look overwhelming.

However, the single biggest factor that creates the major roadblock to our growth aspirations is the unbridled corruption that has permeated every layer of every organ of the governance system, crippling the nation and creating a hollow at the heart of our economy. A study titled, "The state of the business environment in Bangladesh," conducted by the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) and World Economic Forum (WEF), identified corruption as the most problematic factor in doing business in Bangladesh in 2023, with 67.6 percent of respondents pointing to high levels of corruption. In the Corruption Perceptions Index (CPI) 2023 by Transparency International, Bangladesh secured the 10th lowest score at 24 out of 100. In South Asia, Bangladesh holds the second lowest position, just above Afghanistan. This is the lowest score for the country since 2012.

Recent reports on former law enforcement officials and revenue collectors being nose deep in various forms of corruption and criminal activities, including land grabbing and insider trading, as well as a sitting MP being involved in smuggling, which got him killed in a foreign country, are disturbing and portrays a picture of a society that is rotting from the inside.

But what is more alarming is the specious—almost defensive—narratives by the powers that be that have emerged following these revelations. The Bangladesh Police Service Association (BPSA), for instance, has come down heavily on the media in the aftermath of the investigative reports into the misdeeds and corruption of former and current police high-ups, terming these reports as "partial," "ill-motivated," and "exaggerated"—a smear campaign—and warning them to refrain from publishing such reports going forward. Meanwhile, a high-profile minister of the current regime has also made a bizarre comment about the latest wave of corruption revelations.

While the BPSA statement is reckless and paints a picture of a public institution that is trying to cover up the criminal activities of its members, rather than taking a rectification approach, the comment by the minister comes off as blatantly apologetic for the corrupt and corruption as a practice.

The minister's comment demands in-depth scrutiny for understanding. There are three main points to the comment: the universality of corruption and acceptance of corruption in his own ministry, as well as among politicians; asking for introspection for those who are asking for accountability of the corrupt officials; and reiteration of the government's zero tolerance policy against corruption.

To start with, saying that corruption is universal is tantamount to normalising it, which is undesirable and contrary to a lawmaker's oath of office, "I will faithfully discharge the duties of my office according to law: That I will bear true faith and allegiance to Bangladesh: That I will preserve, protect and defend the Constitution and the laws of Bangladesh: And that I will do right to all manner of people according to law, without fear of favour, affection or ill-will." While it is a positive sign that the minister has accepted that corruption is pervasive among his own political network and within his own ministry, one cannot help but ask: what has he done so far to prevent the spread of corruption among those he knows are corrupt, and how many have been held accountable for their actions?

The second point was perhaps a jab at the opposition parties who are blaming the disintegration of the integrity of the governance apparatus, resulting in rampant corruption among bureaucrats. However, just because previous governments have been engaged in corruption does not give the current regime the scope to take it as a normal practice, or allow it to evolve in new dimensions. So, there is no reason for anyone to look into the mirror before calling a spade a spade.

Finally, while it is nice to hear repeatedly that the government remains committed to its zero tolerance policy against corruption, it has unfortunately remained lip service only, and we are yet to see any meaningful actions being taken to walk the talk.

To put it short, the minister's comments are not only provocative, offensive and irresponsible, but at times a violation of his own oath as a member of parliament. There is no way we expect a responsible public representative to make such careless remarks that would put into question not only their own morals, but also the moral authority of the government. No wonder we have reached a point where bureaucrats and politicians alike are engaged in heavy corruption, plundering the hard-earned money of the people, with almost no consequences.

The minister owes the people an explanation of his remarks and an apology at the very least. And the ruling regime should focus less on talking and more on actions, to create a conducive environment that truly eliminates corruption from our governance system and supports our growth aspirations.

Ensure equity for girls in education

EDUCATING EDUCATION

Dr Rubaiya Murshed
is lecturer (on study leave), Department of Economics, University of Dhaka, and recent PhD from the University of Cambridge.

RUBAIYA MURSHED

The movie An Education is the story of a young ordinary girl who goes through life with her parents' aspirations becoming her own. Her parents expect her to attend the University of Oxford and she is groomed accordingly. Along the way she meets a man who soon becomes, to her parents, a prospective husband for their daughter. Surprised by her parents' shift in focus from Oxford to marriage, she asks, "Why go through all those years of studying, all those years paying for an education, when she could have just dressed up and attended parties, and dances, in her efforts to land a marriage." Many women in real life too deserve the answer to this question.

In many countries around the world, girls are not given access to the same educational opportunities as boys. So, activists and researchers call for increased investments in girls' education. Bangladesh has been no exception to this—we've achieved some milestones, mostly in terms of statistics. We've done well, but the question remains whether we've done enough.

We've battled against the problem of early marriage and perhaps eliminated dowry to some extent. But has there been any change in our collective mentality towards girls' education and their aspirations? No, not really—at least not inclusively. Yes, there was a time when girls hardly got to finish their HSC exams, but now many girls "get to" go to universities. The "get to" part remains the problem, since girls' education still, in many cases, remains dependent on the family's decision, and not the girls' own. It may be difficult to agree with this if one only considers women from middle-income and higher-income families. There are many inspiring and empowered women in Dhaka and among these trailblazing women, it's rare and difficult to find a woman from a lower socio-economic background or a woman who lives in a remote village of Bangladesh. There is a huge divide here, which becomes visible when we open our eyes to the whole picture and not only to selective parts of it.

To this day, it's not surprising to hear of a girl suddenly having to drop out of college or university because it's time to "marry her off." It comes down to two things really—marriage as a substitute to education and, of course, the deeply entrenched patriarchy in our society. This is why objectifying women is still somewhat of a norm around us, and why women are always the ones mostly judged by their looks.

The marriage market in Bangladesh is a breeding ground for objectification of women. How a woman looks, how she walks—these are often given the same importance, sometimes even more, as how educated a woman is. Sadly, this is more of a norm than an exception and so, existing narratives are not devoid of such objectification.

> It's not surprising to hear of a girl suddenly having to drop out of college or university because it's time to "marry her off." It comes down to two things really—marriage as a substitute to education and, of course, the deeply entrenched patriarchy in our society.

These problematic narratives spill over to the lives of girls everywhere and how a girl sees herself growing up. Women needing make-up, women wearing high-heels, the expensive jewellery women wear—are these by choice? Maybe so, but can it be denied that these practices have patriarchal roots too? Does it matter? Arguably, yes.

You see, these societal "norms" shape the image of women in the society both in the eyes of men and women, and influence the education women are "allowed" to have. If it were the case that most of these girls who are married off get to continue their education after marriage, then that would have been a better consequence than them having to give up their education. But we don't know whether this is mostly the case, and even if it is, the lack of the freedom of choice for women remains.

Then there's the fact that it's often forgotten that women are humans, not superwomen. Having to juggle all the responsibilities just because they're women is, undoubtedly, unfair. In reality, there will always be some things women do better than men, and vice versa. The point is that the attitude towards what constitutes women's responsibilities needs to change. This is where education has a strong role to play in breaking the stereotypes born from patriarchy.

To fight patriarchy, we need to educate our boys as much as we need to educate our girls. First, we need to fight for equity in choice. If a woman chooses to not have a career, that is her success and society should see it that way too because success lies in the happiness that comes from choosing one's own path.

A good education matters. Only with a proper education does an educated human-being, girl or boy, become an asset to the society. I don't have to be a feminist to argue for girls' right to education. I just have to be a human who believes education to be a right. When we view education as not just a means to earning a living but having a wider purpose, as Rabindranath says, of awakening the mind and soul—it's easier to understand why everyone, every girl and boy, has a right to the magic of awakening their souls.

The Bangladesh-India friendship dilemma

Anu Muhammad
is a former professor of economics of Jahangirnagar University.

ANU MUHAMMAD

India is Bangladesh's biggest neighbour. We are connected through our shared border, history, cultural traits, and language, among other things. Various threads bind us, including Bangladesh's Liberation War in 1971. Considering all this, having a friendly, healthy relationship with India is as important for us as it is for them.

However, India's current leaders along with big business oligarchy have been pursuing a one-sided foreign policy. Their dominant mindset to extend their influence in the neighbourhood has created an unbalanced relationship in South Asia. This has raised questions and created reservations among the people in other countries. Therefore, it is not surprising that, except for Bangladesh, India is not on the best terms with the South Asian governments.

There is a common perception that the bilateral relationship benefits India much more than it does Bangladesh. FILE PHOTO: AFP

As our current government has said on a number of occasions, the relationship between Bangladesh and India has reached new heights since it came to power. That is true for the government, but not for the people. And there is a common perception that this relationship benefits India much more than it does Bangladesh. Our prime minister recently went on a formal visit to India, and all the memorandums of understandings and agreements made there seem to re-establish that notion. Bangladesh's interests seem to have been downplayed considerably, and objective critical questions of our citizens have once again been ignored.

Consider the fact that Bangladesh shares the border with India on three sides, and India is putting up a barbed wire fence on this entire border. This is not an example of friendship. Surrounding an entire country is akin to holding it captive. While the Bangladesh government has not spoken against this issue, our citizens are concerned. India's reasoning behind putting up the barbed wire fence is to prevent criminals from Bangladesh from entering India. If India's understanding is that criminals are going to enter its territory from Bangladesh, how can it ask for a transit through Bangladesh? If they believe ours is a country filled with criminals who must be contained with a barbed wire fence around our entire border, how can they ensure the security of their goods while using our roads and rivers for transit? Last month, the countries agreed on railway transit through Bangladesh as well.

We have been hearing about transit benefits even before our current government came to power, with promises of billions of dollars in earnings for Bangladesh. But in reality, now that the transit is being formalised during this government's time, we are not seeing the financial benefits for us—not even one percent of what was promised. On the contrary, Dr Mashiur Rahman, the economic affairs adviser to the prime minister, once regarded demanding any such financial benefits or gains as "uncivilised." This means India will get transit benefits through Bangladesh, which gives them economic gains, while Bangladesh gains nothing. Moreover, the additional pressure on our roads, bridges, and rivers and the resulting damage to our environment, economy, and businesses will be significant.

While India will be able to transit through Bangladesh, the latter still cannot have the same access for a mere 30-40 kilometres to establish business ties with Nepal or Bhutan. Our government says that ties with Nepal and Bhutan will be established, but nothing has been formalised yet. There are many direct and indirect barriers to this, caused by India.

Also, in terms of business, thousands of Indian products find a place in Bangladesh's markets. But when it comes to exporting goods from Bangladesh to India, there are many barriers, tariffs, and non-tariffs, so we don't get the same business benefits in India as it does in Bangladesh. India is also gaining access to our seas. I can't help but ask: how can we ensure our country's national security in this state of affairs?

Then there is the water-sharing issue. Many of Bangladesh's rivers originate in India. Being upstream, India has constructed dams and other structures to control the water flow in the rivers, preventing us from getting the water we need. Instead of giving us the water, India now wants management responsibilities of the Teesta River.

The border killings have still not stopped. Even after our prime minister returned from her India tour last month, there have been reports of border killings.

Is India truly interested in the multilateral development of South Asia? To unlock the power in this region, we need to have multilateral cooperation among all the countries. Bilateral relationships can only take us so far. To justify the new bilateral agreements that happened during her recent visit to India, our prime minister mentioned the European Union as an example. But in reality, our bilateral relationship with India and the transit deal do not compare with the agreements in the EU in any way. The EU is a comprehensive economic and political system, where every country has rights over every other country, and they give the same rights to each other. Economic and communication benefits are ensured for all the countries in the EU. There is the European Central Bank, the euro currency, and an institutional structure.

While India will be able to transit through Bangladesh, the latter still cannot have the same access for a mere 30-40 kilometres to establish business ties with Nepal or Bhutan. Our government says that ties with Nepal and Bhutan will be established, but nothing has been formalised yet. There are many direct and indirect barriers to this, caused by India.

A union of South Asia is truly important for our future, and that is something in which I firmly believe. But it is probably not going to be possible with India's current mindset of extending influence and the one-sided relationship-building approach. If we have a South Asian Union, we can utilise the massive amount of wealth and opportunities that lies here. Doing so can put a stop to communalism, corruption and the massive waste of wealth. It can create a multi-language, multinational, multi-ethnic community. This is only possible if the rights, wants, and needs of all the nations are ensured, and one country is not given priority over another. It should be a political demand of all the South Asian countries: a South Asian solidarity. It is for the sake of the citizens of South Asia that this should be prioritised.

The current leaders in India, and the business stakeholders, are not doing this to the rest of South Asian nations only. In truth, they are doing it to the majority of the Indian citizens as well, prioritising their own interests. So it is also for the sake of Indian citizens that a multilateral, multicultural union needs to be planned, finalised, and brought to reality. It should be clear to everyone that subordination and friendship are not the same. We want friendship, and that can only be achieved when we are treated as equals.

FIRST 2024 US PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE

Biden needs to go, but he won't

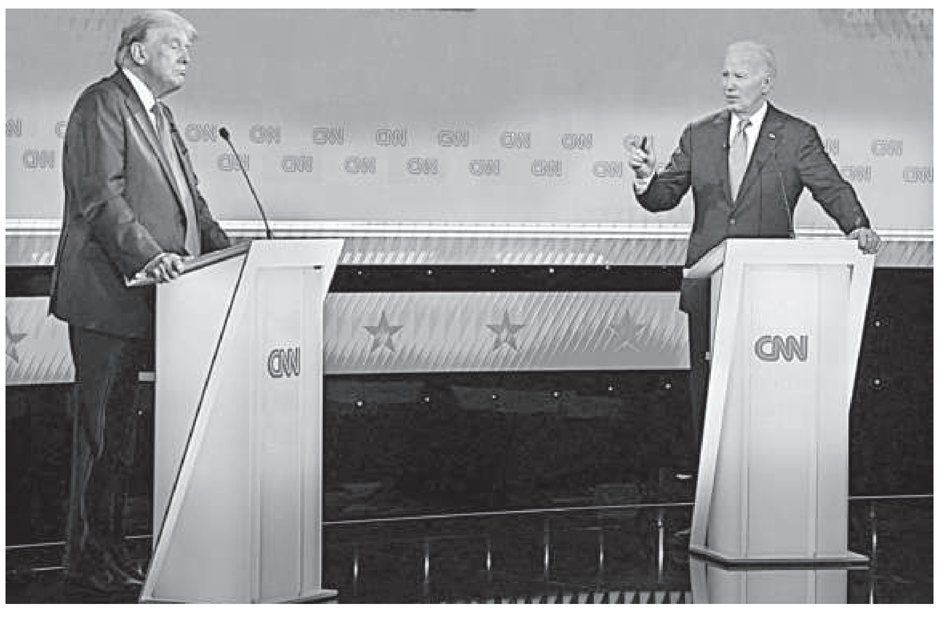
Watching the first US presidential debate between Donald Trump, a convicted felon and fascist, and incumbent President Joe Biden for 90 minutes felt as painful as getting through a wisdom tooth removal. The debate, rather a debacle, has led the nation to a panic stream about its future leadership and the future in general. We have been familiar with the fears about Donald Trump throughout, that he is not a legitimate choice; he spews conspiracy theories and lies like a machine gun. The debate was the earliest in electoral history—both are presumed party nominees—and in fact, the Biden campaign pushed for it to remind the public of the former president's chaotic nature. The Biden campaign prepared for weeks in Camp David, but the result of that was a disoriented, alarmingly incoherent Joe Biden who, more than once, could not complete a sentence.

The media coverage since has been rampant with discussions about Biden's embarrassing underperformance that has crystallised fears about his age—though he's only four years older than Trump—and raised questions about his cognitive fitness to run the most powerful country in the world. It takes a lot to overshadow Donald Trump in a negative way. For an hour and a half, Biden stood on the stage, unable to answer questions, and unable to remember things he's done himself. Expected to make a strong case for why he should be re-elected, Biden did exactly the opposite. He could not respond to Trump's jabs, and just spewed a few insults, calling him "a loser and a sucker." Biden was so incredibly sluggish that it makes one wonder whether this man even makes the decisions that come out of the White House, or whether he just sits there with a group of others in the Oval Office, while his secretary of state or vice-president gives him papers to sign with his executive pen.

The New York Times' editorial board has already called for Biden to step aside; his supporters are saying that as a patriot, he should put the country before himself. The US media is already analysing what would happen if Democrats open up the convention on August 19 in Chicago, and considering potential candidates like California Governor Gavin Newsom and Michigan Governor Gretchen Whitmer, among others. But the question is: where were these candidates during the primaries? Why did none of them run rigorous presidential campaigns? Does Joe Biden run such a formidable lobby within the Democratic Party that no sane person could tell him that his time is up? While the media and reportedly some Democrats have "quietly" considered some replacement options, support from the members of the Democratic Party for Biden remains steady even after the disastrous debate.

The mental fogginess that Biden displayed on that debate stage in Atlanta surely didn't happen overnight. One can say he is not like this every day, that he had a bad night, but he must be this out of it some days, and that itself is a huge issue for a commander-in-chief at such a critical time for the US—and the world.

Biden won the primaries essentially unchallenged. California Governor Gavin Newsom was seen as a front-runner for the 2024 presidential race, but he put that to bed quickly last September, saying he had "great respect and reverence for Joe Biden as a person." After Biden's underperformance, media outlets continue to name Newsom as a potential replacement, while he himself told MSNBC, "You don't turn your back because of one performance. What kind of party does that?"



If Joe Biden continues this way—in debates, on live television—the attention on his weakness might cost him and his party the election in November. PHOTO: REUTERS

The mental fogginess that Biden displayed on that debate stage in Atlanta surely didn't happen overnight. One can say he is not like this every day, that he had a bad night, but he must be this out of it some days, and that itself is a huge issue for a commander-in-chief at such a critical time for the US—and the world. CNN's Anderson Cooper asked Vice-President Kamala Harris, "Is this the Biden you work with every day?" She responded rather defensively, reiterating the president's superior performance in contrast to Trump, which the former failed to communicate at a worrying level during the debate.

The huge game changer that the media is pushing for would realistically require Joe Biden to say, "I can't do this job," and release all the delegates he has accumulated, which would open the field for dozens of candidates. It would be chaotic and tough; a new candidate would lack Biden's established branding as a universal household name and need heavy advertising in a short span of time. The move could reveal factionalism and cracks in the Democratic Party, but all that chaos would serve the US better than four years of Donald Trump, who has vowed to be a "dictator" from day one.

By the looks of it, however, Biden has not indicated a desire to gracefully step down. After the debate, he appeared in North Carolina, and did what he does best: honestly address his own shortcomings, seem relatable, and say, "I know how to do this job." He started by stating, loudly, squinching his forehead, "Folks, I know I'm not a young man... I don't walk as smoothly as I used to. I don't debate as well as I used to." But he made it clear that the "stakes are too high," and invoked familiar tactics, saying like millions of Americans, "when you get knocked down, you get back up."

What's clear for now is that the Biden campaign is rushing behind the scenes to control the spiralling speculations of "the beginning of the end." But that is a short-term solution. If Biden is this rusty today, how will he be after four years, if re-elected? There are many, many questions to ask and consider for the Democratic Party. Reportedly, influential donors have pressured Biden to step aside. The hope among Democrats that this round of panic can fizzle out is not impossible, and it is unclear how much this will affect voter decision. But the possibility that this could get worse, and Biden could lose to Trump, is just as real too.

The main factor favouring the sitting president is the sentiment that a vote for Biden is a vote against Trump. When Biden says the stakes are too high, it is because he, along with many members of the Democratic Party, genuinely believe that only Joe Biden can defeat Donald Trump, because he did it in 2020. But things have changed since then; Biden is not the same person anymore. Though the US economy has done well under his administration, Biden isn't currently assertive enough to reap a winning electoral strategy out of it. His foreign policy missteps, especially in regard to the genocide perpetrated by Israel in Gaza, will likely sway some young voters, as well as Arab voters in swing states like Michigan.

Donald Trump used "Palestinian" as a slur and said Israel should "finish the job," and spouted nonsense theories about Putin's invasion of Ukraine. He said ridiculous things about abortions, and Roe v Wade, but all of that has blended into the background. Instead, pro-Dem media outlets are remembering and even agreeing with Trump's words, "I don't know what he said at the end of that sentence and I don't think he knows either." If Biden continues this way—in debates, on live television—the attention on his weakness can cost him and his party the election. There is still time to introduce a new face and a charged, exciting voice, but it's hard to imagine Biden and the Democrats doing that. It hasn't happened since 1884, and the idea that he will step down after just one debate is a dream that won't come true. After all, the course of US politics recently has dwelled much more on illogical party loyalty and lust for power, than the right thing to do.

ONLINE
THE FUTURE IS HYBRID

THE EDTECH DILEMMA

Understanding the pivot towards "offline" models

A hybrid model, offering both online and offline learning experiences, seems to be the answer. Online platforms provide interactive content and self-paced learning, while offline methods such as workshops, peer group discussions, and practical sessions foster hands-on learning and critical thinking.

MAISHA ISLAM MONAMEE

Just two years ago, online learning was set to revolutionise education in Bangladesh, with companies like Shikho and 10 Minute School leading the charge. These platforms promised to democratise access to quality education. However, there is now a noticeable shift towards incorporating offline centres alongside online models. Why are these pioneers of online learning embracing offline methodologies?

The edtech market in Bangladesh is projected to reach several billion dollars by 2030, driven by increased internet and smartphone penetration, government initiatives, and changing perceptions about online learning. During the Covid-19 pandemic, the use of edtech accelerated significantly, highlighting the importance of digital learning. However, challenges remained. A 2023 study shows that only 18.7% of children participate in remote learning due to device and internet access issues. Additionally, the offline education market, including coaching centres and private tutoring, remains significant, worth an estimated BDT 25,000 crore.

A hybrid model, offering both online and offline learning experiences, seems to be the answer. Online platforms provide interactive content and self-paced learning, while offline methods such as workshops, peer group discussions, and practical sessions foster hands-on learning and critical thinking. A notable success story from India is PhysicsWallah, which achieved unicorn status within two years of its launch. They began with a purely online platform but quickly recognised the potential of a hybrid model. By integrating offline centres, they have managed to cater to a wider audience, providing personalised guidance and practical experiences alongside their digital content. Their success has prompted other edtech companies, including India's Byju's and Brazil's Descomplica, to adopt similar hybrid strategies.

The majority of users in Bangladesh are still accustomed to the offline experience. Students from classes 1-8 often lack the self-discipline to study online independently, and their parents prefer in-person, supervised learning. Concerns about young children using smartphones and the affordability of decent smartphones further emphasise the preference for offline education. Additionally, exams remain a significant part of the education system, and giving tests offline is a practice that online experiences do not fully replicate. Consequently, online education is often viewed as a secondary option.

"The hybrid model will serve as a bridge to connect the unconnected, gradually transitioning offline users to fully online learning. It will also help create locally trained teachers to support their communities," explained Mirza Salman Hossain Beg, an entrepreneur with experience in edtech.

Traditional coaching centres in Bangladesh have long been a staple of supplementary education. However, they often suffer from overcrowded classrooms, lack of personalised attention, and outdated teaching methods. The hybrid approach leverages technology to deliver personalised learning while maintaining the benefits of face-to-face interaction. Building on this idea, Shikho has recently started incorporating offline experience centres to complement its online courses. These centres offer students physical exam hall experiences and personalised guidance, crucial for subjects requiring hands-on practice. By making the platform accessible in a tangible setting, they aim to demonstrate the effectiveness of online learning.

"Our decision to establish offline exam centres was driven by the unique educational needs and opportunities in Bangladesh. These centres complement our digital offerings, allowing students to engage with online resources while benefiting from the discipline of a physical exam environment," shared Shahir Chowdhury, founder of Shikho. These centres primarily serve as places where students can sit for exams and acclimate to the physical exam environment. They also offer combo courses that provide access to both offline exams and online class materials, such as live classes by top mentors, timed MCQ and CQ exams, and animated videos that explain topics further.

Similarly, 10 Minute School has initiated offline learning centres, enhancing peer-to-peer learning and community building. "Our core vision is to find synergy between what our learners want, what they need, and what we can provide. Recognising that certain learning experiences can only be offered offline, we see the strategic move to offline offerings as a complement to our existing value proposition, ensuring a more effective learning outcome for our students," explained Abdullah Abyad Raied, co-founder and CTO of the company.

"Technology enables both online and offline learning. In Southeast Asia and MENA, hybrid models are now the norm. Going forward, we will see continued synergy between these approaches," Abdullah concluded.

The shift towards a hybrid model in edtech is not merely a trend but a strategic move towards inclusive and quality education. By combining the strengths of both online and offline methods, edtech companies are paving the way for a more robust educational system. This approach addresses immediate challenges while aligning with global educational advancements, ensuring that Bangladeshi students are well-prepared for the future.

Capitalising on market trends

The secret sauce to success

SHAMS RASHID TONMOY

Just two weeks ago, Nvidia dethroned tech titan Microsoft to become the world's most valuable company, reaching a staggering market capitalisation of $3.335 trillion. At the time of writing, Nvidia currently sits comfortably in third place at $3.038 trillion, only behind Microsoft and Apple. Despite that, the company's meteoric rise proves a compelling example of the power of capitalising on current market trends. Let's take a look at how capitalising on market trends can be the secret sauce to your startup's success.

Finding a common thread

Let's extend the example beyond Nvidia. Just last week, Amazon joined the exclusive $2 trillion market value club, solidifying itself as the fifth US company to reach this massive landmark. The common thread? The recent boom in artificial intelligence (AI). Because of how prominent the use of generative AI has become, consumers are driving the demand for AI-powered products. Likewise, investors are pouring money into companies positioned to benefit from this technological revolution.

This is a prime example of how companies can achieve tremendous success by strategically aligning themselves with current market trends. Nvidia, a company synonymous with high-performance graphics cards for gamers, provides a particularly compelling case study. Recognising the potential of AI, Nvidia adapted its powerful GPUs for use in data centres, specifically those running cutting-edge AI models similar to OpenAI's ChatGPT and Microsoft's Gemini. The result? The level of success you see now.

ILLUSTRATION: ZARIF FAIAZ

Dive deep - and stay informed!

So, what can you do to make sure your startup achieves success as well? As Nvidia and Amazon have shown us, banking on current demands is the way to go. Before steering your company's ship in a new direction, it's crucial to become educated about the current industry landscape. Immerse yourself in what the general public thinks about your industry and the type of product/service you offer. A good way to stay updated with current needs and demands is to read up on social media discussions and look for themes and consumer behaviour shifts.

For example, the growing interest in sustainable living is a trend that Tesla leveraged with its electric vehicles. As per a 2022 research paper on Tesla's sustainability factor, the company had taken note of the green economy movement - which became a trend a few years ago - and since then has become a popular name in the world of EVs. Even though Tesla stocks have had their recent ups and downs, the brand is still known for electric cars that many international users have switched to owing to the clean fuel hype.

Be open to diversifying

To stay ahead of your competitors, you should keep your company open to continuously innovate, and, when needed, diversify your product or service offerings. Do this by identifying complementary areas where you can leverage existing capabilities to meet new market demands. A strong example of this is, once again, Amazon, which started as an online bookstore and has now become a multinational tech and e-commerce juggernaut.

This level of success was possible because Amazon recognised the potential of e-commerce, and quickly expanded its product categories to meet a variety of needs. Of particular note here is Amazon Web Services (AWS), which allowed the company to brand from e-commerce to cloud computing, thus branching out to numerous new nodes of revenues - specifically data commercialisation, which further boosted the e-commerce's business value through user-based data and insights.

Embrace technological advancements

While market trends are important, neglecting research and development (R&D) can hinder long-term success. In the age of generative AI, where tech giants are constantly unveiling new models, companies need to embrace all available tools to expand sales and market reach. Once again, Nvidia serves as a prime example. The company not only capitalised on the surge in demand for graphics processing units (GPUs) but also actively invested in AI technology, generating significant industry buzz in the process.

In a similar vein, consider data analytics. It will offer valuable insights into customer behaviour and operational efficiency, ultimately streamlining your business. Remember, technology's purpose is to simplify processes. Companies that fail to leverage the latest advancements risk falling behind competitors. As such, use companies like Nvidia, Amazon, Tesla, etc. as examples of how to capitalise on demands and stay ahead of current market trends.

BCB clueless about Tigers' insipid show against Afghans

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) president Nazmul Hassan Papon had no explanation for the national team's lack of intent in the crunch match against Afghanistan in the ICC T20 World Cup after a board of directors meeting yesterday in Mirpur where the biggest agenda for discussion was the team's performance at the event.

Chase down 116 inside 12.1 overs and play a semifinal of a World Cup for the first time, this was the equation for Bangladesh in their final Super Eight match against Afghanistan.

The Tigers, quizzically, abandoned that dream midway in their chase, and have essentially became the laughing stock in world cricket.

The BCB, however, were looking at the World Cup performances positively and quite comically, they chose to discuss World Cup performance in a board meeting before even speaking with the coaches, captain and the players and are yet to receive head coach Chandika Hathurusingha's report.

When asked about the team's approach in the Afghanistan game, Papon had no answers, saying, "What can I say about that?"

"When they needed to defend, they attacked and when they needed to attack, they defended," he added.

Papon, however, did not accept captain Najmul Hossain Shanto's explanation that the team stopped trying to win in 12.1 overs after fall of early wickets.

"I heard that the captain said that after three wickets went down, they didn't try. I think that's not acceptable. But when I saw the game, I didn't feel like that," he added.

All in all, it was a bizarre press conference yesterday at the Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium and curiously, this time no investigation committee was formed.

Problem-plagued Arambagh return after three years

SPORTS REPORTER

Once giant-killers, Arambagh Krira Sangha returned to football yesterday after overcoming numerous challenges in the last three years, securing a comprehensive 4-0 victory against Swadhinata KS in a Senior Division Football League fixture at Birshreshtha Shaheed Mostafa Kamal Stadium in Dhaka.

"We formed a strong squad with an estimated budget of Tk 45 lakh after getting hope for financial help from Bashundhara Group," Arambagh general secretary Md Yaqub Ali told The Daily Star yesterday, adding that they want to play in the second-tier Bangladesh Championship League (BCL) for a few seasons before acquiring the capability to form a squad for the top-tier Bangladesh Premier League.

The traditional outfit, established in 1958, had faced demotion to the third-tier competition from the top-tier following their involvement in live betting, spot-fixing, match manipulation, and online betting in 2021.

Previously, they had struggled to form their squad due to involvement in a casino scandal in late 2019.

FIFA also banned the club from registering local players due to their inability to clear the wages of Brazilian coach Douglas Silva Dos Santos.

Rishad's emergence not yet a watershed for leg-spin

SAMSUL AREFIN KHAN

Rishad Hossain grabbing the attention of the cricket world through his wrist-spin was perhaps the biggest positive takeaway for Bangladesh from an otherwise underwhelming campaign in the recently concluded ICC T20 World Cup.

The leggie grabbed 14 wickets in seven matches in competition, finishing as Bangladesh's most successful bowler in the competition, and joint third overall in the tournament.

Rishad's performance in the T20 World Cup vindicated the management's years of investment on the 21-year-old.

The Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB), which often finds itself at the receiving end of criticism – mostly for the off-the-field issues while on-field performances also don't help them much – had singled out the leggie years ago and had been preparing him for the national side.

Rishad first got into the scenes in 2017 through 'Robi Khoj: The Number 1 Spinner', a talent hunt where he was awarded the title of the 'Most Accurate Bowler'. Since then, Rishad has featured in many developmental teams of the BCB, even when he was hardly getting a game at the domestic level.

The officials at the board must now be heaving a sigh of great relief as their blueprint of nurturing Rishad for the national team has clicked, that too on the big stage, and they are now getting the applause from the country's cricketing fraternity for their long-term planning.

Although the emergence of Rishad Hossain is a huge positive for Bangladesh cricket, it would be unwise for the management to get complacent about their leg-spin reserves just now.

Rishad has started his career with a lot of promise, but there is no telling whether he would go strength to strength from here or end up as a one-tournament wonder.

Experts suggested that the process of nurturing wrist-spinners from a young age needs to continue and feel that Rishad can become a role model for the aspiring leggies in Bangladesh.

> You need to have examples in cricket. When Rashid Khan started bowling leg-spin in Afghanistan, he set an example there. Many Afghan boys got interested through Rashid's bowling and started bowling like him. As Rishad does well in international cricket, the number of leg-spinners in the country will also increase.
> Sohel Islam
> Bangladesh Tigers head coach

"I think the leg-spinners in different age-level teams now can be inspired by Rishad," said Sohel Islam, the Bangladesh Tigers head coach, who closely worked with Rishad, told The Daily Star yesterday.

"You need to have examples in cricket. When Rashid Khan started bowling leg-spin in Afghanistan, he set an example there. Many Afghan boys got interested through Rashid's bowling and started bowling like him. As Rishad does well in international cricket, the number of leg-spinners in the country will also increase," he added.

The BCB's game development committee is currently running a camp for wrist-spinners and Sohel expects to find a few promising leggies from there.

"The spinners in the camp are from different age groups. The board is thinking of sending them to different age-level teams to get match practice," said Sohel.

Veteran coach Wahidul Gani, who is currently looking after the Under-14 and Under-15 setups, feels a collective approach from the BCB and domestic teams is required to ensure continued success in the wrist-spin department.

"This year in U14, U15 age-level tournaments, we made it mandatory to play a leg-spinner in every team and to give him five overs. This is how we are trying to give leggies playing opportunities. But I don't think it's the correct way to make a leg-spinner. The player needs to have talent and earn the trust of their coaches," Gani told The Daily Star.

"There is a saying in sports that winning is a poor teacher. We play to win, but we can get a good player while losing a match. We need to have faith in him and also need people who understand right-arm wrist-spin," he said, adding that Mushtaq Ahmed's inclusion as Tiger's bowling coach can play a big role in Rishad's development. "I think having Mushtaq will also help Rishad a lot because he has played at the top level. He knows the quality of batsmen at the top level and their footwork very well. I think Mushtaq's experience will help him a lot."

SHORT CORNER

Taskin apologised for arriving late before India match, says Shakib

The unexpected reason behind Bangladesh pacer Taskin Ahmed not featuring against India in the recent T20 World Cup has recently garnered attention. Reports disclosed that Taskin overslept on the match day and missed the team bus, a fact later confirmed by former captain Shakib Al Hasan. "So, when Taskin actually had reached the field, it was probably five to ten minutes before the toss. Naturally, it was difficult for the team management to include him in the team at that time," said Shakib.

Swimmers Rafi, Sonia receive wild cards for Paris Olympics

Swimmers Samiul Islam Rafi and Sonia Akhter are the latest athletes from Bangladesh to receive wild cards for the upcoming Paris Olympic Games after World Aquatics, international swimming governing body, confirmed their participation to the Bangladesh Olympic Association and Bangladesh Swimming Federation today.
Rafi, who has been training in Thailand, will participate in the 100m freestyle while Sonia will take part in the 50m freestyle, informed BOA member and BSF general secretary BM Saif.

'We want to be champions, but also need to be realistic'

"Actually, if we look at the performance of our women's team, the performance graph is not that bad. It's true that we couldn't do well in our recent two series. But our performances before those two series were quite promising. Hopefully, we will have a good Asia Cup in Sri Lanka. We had won the Asia Cup in the T20 format once before. We have also won against Pakistan, India and Sri Lanka. With the ability this team possesses, I'm optimistic that they will do well in the tournament," said Bangladesh Cricket Board's women's wing chairman Shafiul Alam Chowdhury Nadel during a conversation with The Daily Star's Samsul Arefin Khan.

Ronaldo battling with Father Time

REUTERS

"Time beat him. Time takes everybody out. It's undefeated," said Rocky Balboa in the film "Creed" and those words could easily be applied to Portugal's Cristiano Ronaldo who struggled to impose himself on their Euro 2024 last-16 game with Slovenia on Monday.

A tearful Ronaldo being embraced and comforted by team mates after missing a penalty in extra time that could have helped Portugal secure a spot in the quarter-finals before a shootout win is a cathartic image that stunned fans around the world.

Portugal won 3-0 on penalties minutes later, with Ronaldo converting the first spot kick and apologising to fans in the stands immediately after scoring before breaking down in tears following the game and being unable to finish an interview.

His tears showed more than just the sorrow or guilt of a player feeling the weight of responsibility from almost letting his country down. They were the tears of a frustrated player who expects greatness but was not the difference maker he once was.

During the 2022 World Cup Ronaldo said: "The best timing is my timing" as he arrived in Qatar with his career in turmoil, about to leave Manchester United to play in Saudi Arabia.

Ronaldo, a five-times Ballon D'Or winner, had arrived with a mission to prove he could still make a difference on the world stage. But he ended the tournament on the bench and had no impact as a substitute in the 1-0 quarter-final loss to Morocco.

After that defeat, the shocking image of Ronaldo running to the tunnel in tears as desolate as the football world had ever seen him was something Portugal fans were not used to.

But with long-time Portugal manager Fernando Santos gone and newcomer Roberto Martinez trusting him with the captaincy and a leadership role in a young and talented squad, Ronaldo was given another shot at glory in Euro 2024.

Despite being a model of longevity for more than two decades in an outstanding career, breaking numerous records and playing for some of the biggest clubs in the world, Ronaldo has been a shadow of his old self over the last two weeks in Germany.

Lacking the speed, explosion and agility that were his trademarks while pouncing on balls like a tiger to plunder goals in various ways that only he was able to, the 2024 version of Ronaldo has yet to score at this Euros after four games.

Against Slovenia, just as in the previous three games, his shooting was off kilter and his headers failed to trouble keeper Jan Oblak while his team mates seemed to be forcing the ball to him, disrupting Portugal's tempo and slowing them down.

At 39, Ronaldo would have become the oldest player to score in a European Championship if he had netted his extra-time penalty but he failed to beat the excellent Oblak and instead of relief came desperation.

Martinez still trusted him to take the first penalty in the shootout and Ronaldo duly delivered to help Portugal stay alive at the Euros, with several records that he is still seeking.

They will face France in the quarter-finals with the world questioning whether Ronaldo's brilliant international career is nearing an end. There could still be a happy ending for one of the world's greatest ever players - only time will tell.

Ensure govt staffers comply with provision for asset disclosure

HC orders authorities

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday directed the authorities concerned to strictly ensure compliance with the relevant provisions of the law for time-to-time monitoring of the disclosures of movable and immoveable properties of government officials serving in civil capacity.

It also directed them to submit progress reports to this effect before the court in three months.

The HC bench of Justice Md Nazrul Islam Talukder and Justice Kazi Ebadot Hossain also issued a rule asking the respondents to explain why their failure and inaction to adopt guidelines or policies or to enact proper legislation to prevent accumulation of illegal wealth (movable or immovable) through corruption by the public/government servants serving in civil capacity, and their family members, should not be declared illegal.

116 killed in stampede at India religious event

Most of the dead are women, children; many others injured; death toll may rise

REUTERS, New Delhi

At least 116 people, many of them women and children, were killed in a stampede at a Hindu religious gathering in north India yesterday, authorities said, in one of the country's worst such tragedies in years.

The stampede happened in a village in Hathras district, about 200 km (125 miles) southeast of the national capital New Delhi, where authorities said thousands had gathered in sweltering late afternoon temperatures.

"The incident happened due to overcrowding at the time when people were trying to leave the venue," Ashish Kumar, administrator of the Hathras district of Uttar Pradesh, India's most populous state, told reporters.

Chaitra V, another senior state official, told broadcaster India Today that people may have lost their footing as they sought water in the heat.

"There was wet mud at one place where people may have slipped. Also because of the heat, people may have made their way to the spot where water was kept and that could have caused the incident as well," she said.

Video clips recorded by news agency ANI showed bodies piled into the back of trucks and laid out in vehicles.

Purses and bags covered in dust, were heaped up at the venue, with people sitting on their haunches sifting through them to identify their belongings.

Mobile phones were similarly piled together, waiting to be claimed by their owners.

A video on social media showed a large crowd packed into a tented area, standing and listening to devotional tunes as they waved their hands in the direction of the religious leader who sat on a stage.

It also showed some women hanging on to the bamboo poles holding up the canopy to get a better view above the heads of the large crowd.

"There must have been about 50,000 people...at the gate on the highway, some people were going left and some people were going right, the stampede was caused in that confusion," Suresh Chandra, a witness who was at the gathering, told local media.

Seema, a woman who travelled from a town almost 60 km away to attend the event, said she was leaving the venue when the stampede occurred. She was accompanied by three relatives, two of whom were killed.

FLOOD IN SYLHET

Thousands marooned in three districts

STAR REPORT

At a time when Sylhet is still reeling from the devastation caused by last month's deluge, the region is now experiencing a fresh round of flooding triggered by the nonstop rain over the last few days, plunging thousands deeper into despair.

Low-lying areas of eight upazilas in Sylhet, including parts of the city, five upazilas in Sunamganj, including parts of the municipality, and two upazilas in Moulvibazar have been newly inundated.

Sylhet witnesses large-scale destruction to life and property every monsoon due to flooding in its vast network of rivers.

Last month, flash floods displaced more than 22 lakh people during two rounds of flooding in the region, affecting hundreds of areas and causing untold suffering to the dwellers.

The flood waters left behind a trail of destruction, submerging villages, destroying crops and wrecking homes.

This time, the ongoing flood situation is expected to worsen, with more rainfall predicted in the coming days, according to the weather department and the Flood Forecasting Warning Centre.

Already hundreds of flood-affected people, the majority of whom have only recently returned home from shelters, are being forced to return to the

Israel pounds Gaza after evacuation order

Thousands flee their homes in Khan Yunis; 25 more Palestinians killed

AGENCIES

Israeli forces bombarded several areas of the southern Gaza Strip yesterday and thousands of Palestinians fled their homes in what could be part of a final push of Israel's intensive military operations in nine months of offensive.

Eight Palestinians were killed and dozens wounded in Khan Yunis, health officials said. Israel's military said that two soldiers had been killed in battle a day earlier.

Israel's leaders have said they were winding down the phase of intense fighting against Hamas, and would soon shift into more targeted operations.

Later yesterday, 17 Palestinians were killed in Israeli tank shelling of a street in the densely populated Zeitoun neighbourhood in Gaza City in the north of the Strip, medics said. Footage on some Palestinian social media showed the scene at a local market, with bread scattered on a floor stained with blood.

- » A quarter of a million hit by evacuation order: UN
- » Troops would soon start targeted operations: Israel
- » Gaza death toll rises to 37,925

The Israeli army had ordered residents of several towns and villages in eastern Khan Younis to evacuate their homes on Monday evening, prior to tanks re-entering the area the military had left several weeks ago.

Thousands who had not heeded the call were forced to flee their homes in the dark overnight, as Israeli tanks and planes bombed Karara, Abassan and other areas that had been named in the evacuation orders, residents and Hamas media said.

"Where will we go?" said Tamer, a 55-year-old businessman, who has been displaced six times since October 7.

"Every time people go back to their homes and begin to rebuild some of their lives even on the rubble of their houses, the occupation sends the tanks back to destroy what is left," he told Reuters via a chat app.

ACC primary probe finds corruption evidence

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission has obtained preliminary information indicating that former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed, his wife and daughters acquired assets beyond their known sources of income.

The commission has also found evidence of more immovable and movable properties at home and abroad in their names or fake names.

ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmin shared this information with reporters at a press conference at its headquarters yesterday.

She stated that they got preliminary information about illegal wealth in the names of Benazir, his wife Jisaan Mirza, and their two daughters -- Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir and Tahseen Raisa Binte Benazir.

She mentioned that the commission has decided

Malen hits brace as Netherlands reach Euro quarters

AFP, Munich

The Netherlands swept into their first European Championship quarterfinal since 2008 as Donyell Malen scored twice in a 3-0 win over Romania in the last 16 on Tuesday.

Cody Gakpo gave the Dutch an early lead but they were unable to convert pressure into a crucial second goal until the Liverpool forward set up Malen with seven minutes remaining in Munich.

Romania were gritty but out-classed, lacking the quality to punish their opponents' profligacy before Malen added his second on the

PM'S VISIT TO CHINA

Dhaka to seek $20b fresh loans from Beijing

PORIMOL PALMA, REJAUL KARIM BYRON and JAGARAN CHAKMA

Bangladesh will seek fresh loans amounting to $20 billion during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's upcoming visit to China, which Beijing hopes would be a "game changer" in the bilateral relationship.

Of the sum, $15 billion would be for infrastructure projects and $5 billion -- which would be disbursed in yuan -- would be to facilitate payments for imports from China, according to the officials involved in preparing the proposals.

"We have reached consensus on several aspects but are yet to finalise it -- we will finalise it by July 7," one of the officials told The Daily Star yesterday.

The foreign ministry yesterday held an inter-ministerial meeting for finalising the joint statement that will be adopted by Bangladesh and China during the PM's visit from July 8 to July 11.

The visit comes just two weeks after Hasina's first state visit to India after she was sworn in as the PM for a fourth straight term.

The trip to China, Bangladesh's largest trading partner, is viewed as a balancing act by Hasina, who hopes to be in the good books of two competing regional powers.

Bangladesh will seek Chinese support for the Southern Integrated Development Initiative (SIDI) centring the Payra Port in Patuakhali, say finance ministry officials.

Bangladesh will seek Chinese support for the Southern Integrated Development Initiative (SIDI) centring the Payra Port in Patuakhali, according to finance ministry officials.

This will be an integrated development plan for the southern region involving projects on transport and communication, ICT, power and energy, logistics and a special economic zone.

SIDI will see the establishment of an electric vehicle plant, a hi-tech park and a logistic hub at a strategic location, said a finance ministry official.Japan is supporting the Moheshkhali-Matarbari Integrated Infrastructure Development Initiative (MIDI) and the BIG-B Initiative (The Bay of Bengal Industrial Growth Belt).

"Similarly, Dhaka wants Beijing to support SIDI," said a foreign ministry official.

Bangladesh earlier sought a loan in Yuan worth $5 billion to facilitate importers to make payments for goods and services procured from China amid Bangladesh's strained dollar stockpile.

Bilateral trade between Bangladesh and China stands at $23 billion,

Ensure same pension scheme for all

Say experts about equal-contribution plan; 'thrusting it on certain section discriminatory'

AHSAN HABIB

A pension scheme in which the employee and employer make equal contributions is welcome in this economy, but it has to apply to all, be they public university teachers, bureaucrats or other government employees, economists say.

But imposing this scheme on certain types of entities is discriminatory, they add.

Faculty and staff at 35 public universities have been on strike since Monday, protesting a pension scheme which will require those joining on or after July 1 to make contributions to the pension funds.

Experts say public university teachers and government officials should all be under the same pension scheme.

What's the harm if India given transit?

Asks PM in JS

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said Bangladesh cannot keep its doors shut in this era of globalisation and she wondered what the loss would be if India is given transit facilities.

"There are objections about why we gave transit facility to India. We have already given this facility. What is the harm in this? Rather, we are getting tolls for the use of roads. The people of our country are having benefits. We are earning some money," she said in her concluding speech of the budget session in parliament.

Blasting those who criticised her recent visit to India, Hasina said the opposition parties continue saying many things about her tour.

She said Bangladesh needs to join Trans-Asian Highway. "We have also secured transit facilities from India for [carrying goods to and from] Nepal and Bhutan."

The government is likely to hold a meeting today with the representatives of the public university teachers over pension benefits amid their strike.

Teachers, however, said they will continue their indefinite work abstention and negotiate simultaneously until their demands are met.

They criticised Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali for terming their protest "unreasonable". They also challenged the minister to sit down for talks.

Labour predicted to eject Tories as UK goes to polls

AFP, London

Britain's political leaders made a final push for votes yesterday on the last day of an election campaign expected to return a Labour government after 14 years of Conservative rule.

Ex-premier Boris Johnson staged an 11th-hour rallying call for the flagging Tories but an ally of Prime Minister Rishi Sunak conceded their party was staring at an "extraordinary landslide" defeat.

Voters will cast ballots from 7:00am (0600 GMT) today, with polls predicting that Labour will win its first general election since 2005 -- making its leader Keir Starmer prime minister.

That outcome would see Britain swing leftwards back to the centre ground after almost a decade and a half of right-wing Conservative governments.

Starmer was crisscrossing the UK on Wednesday with visits in England, Scotland and Wales in a bid to shore up Labour support and warn against complacency in the campaign's final hours.

"If you want change, you have to vote for it," the 61-year-old told reporters, adding that he was "not taking anything for granted".

- Labour majority expected after 14 years of Conservative rule
- A party needs 326 seats of the 650-seat parliament to secure a majority
- Economy, healthcare, immigration are among the most important issues
- Final results are expected in the early hours of Friday

The Tories have been going all out to play upon people's fears, warning of tax rises and weaker national security if they are voted out, in what Labour sees as a desperate last stand to cling on to power.

They have also increasingly urged voters in recent weeks to stop the prospect of Labour winning a "supermajority" -- a claim Labour fears is intended to hit turnout.

Work and Pensions Secretary Mel Stride, one of Sunak's closest allies, said Wednesday the electorate would "regret" handing Labour "untrammelled" power without an effective Tory opposition.

"If you look at the polls, it is pretty clear that Labour at this stage are heading for an extraordinary landslide on a scale that has probably never, ever been seen in this country before," he told right-wing broadcaster GB News.

Labour has enjoyed a consistent 20-point lead in the polls over the past two years with many voters dissatisfied with the Conservatives' handling of a range of issues including the cost of living, public services, immigration and the economy.

ACC sues Rajuk official, his wife over illegal assets

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday filed two cases against Rajuk Director Mobarok Hossain on charges of acquiring assets through illegal means.

Mobarok Hossain

In one case, filed under section 109 of the penal code, his wife Shahana Parveen is the main accused and he is the second accused. The other case, under the Anti-Corruption Commission Act-2004, was filed only against Mobarok.

Asif Al Mahmud, the commission's assistant director at the Dhaka Integrated District Office-1, filed the cases, ACC Public Relations Officer Aktarul Islam told The Daily Star.

In the wealth statements submitted by Mobarok, the ACC found evidence of acquisition of assets inconsistent with his income of Tk 41.46 lakh, according to a case statement.

It said Mobarak declared that he has movable and immovable assets worth Tk 1.86 crore in the wealth statement he submitted to the ACC. By reviewing the records obtained during the verification, the ACC found authenticity in the wealth statement submitted.

Clashes break out near military regional command

AFP, Yangon

Clashes broke out near a regional military command in northern Myanmar yesterday, residents and local media said, in what appeared to be a widening offensive against junta troops.

Gunfire has rocked the northern Shan state town of Lashio, home to the military's northeastern command, since late Tuesday, one resident told AFP.

"Since last night we have been hearing shooting targeting the regional military command... we dare not to go outside," they said, requesting anonymity.

Fighting was happening outside the town, another resident told an AFP correspondent, who heard one explosion down the phone.

She said the military had closed all roads into Lashio but that some shops in the town were still open.

Videos uploaded to social media showed a wooden building destroyed and partly in flames, and local media reported six civilians had been killed in shelling.

Landslides kill two in Ukhiya refugee camps

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

Two people, including a child, died in separate incidents of landslides at two Rohingya camps in Cox's Bazar's Ukhiya upazila early yesterday.

The incidents occurred at camps 8 and 11, said Shamim Hossain, officer-in-charge (OC) of Ukhiya Police Station.

The deceased were identified as Sifat Ullah, 13, belonging to the host community living in the eastern zone of Camp 8 at Balukhali's Jumerchhara, and Rohingya refugee Anwar Hossain of Block A in Camp 11, added the OC, quoting locals.

Meanwhile, a hill slide temporarily disrupted traffic movement on Marine Drive in Himchari Point since early morning. However, the road was cleared by a team of the Bangladesh Army before noon.

On June 19, ten people, including eight Rohingyas, were killed in separate landslides at the refugee camps in Ukhiya.

Incessant rains since last week have exacerbated landslide risks for Cox's Bazar residents, especially for people who are living in hilly areas.

About 1.2 million Rohingya, most of whom fled for their lives in 2017 facing atrocities by Myanmar's junta forces, live in 33 camps in Ukhiya and Teknaf in Cox's Bazar. Many of them live in hilly areas prone to landslides.

Noting that Bangladesh brings fuel from India's Assam to the Parbatipur depot through a pipeline, the leader of the House said this enabled Bangladesh to purchase fuel at a cheap rate.

Hasina, also the Awami League president, said the government has a plan to bring fuel to Natore through a pipeline.

She described how the interest of the country was neglected during the rules of military dictators Ziaur Rahman and HM Ershad, and also during the tenure of Khaleda Zia's government.

The PM said Zia had opened Bangladeshi market for Indian goods. She said Zia and Ershad did nothing to resolve the enclave and Tin Bigha Corridor issues with India.

She said Khaleda forgot to raise the Ganges water-sharing issue during her visit to India in 1990s.

Hasina said she objected to selling gas to India ahead of the 2001 general election, but Khaleda agreed to it.

"As a result, my party Awami League could not win a large number of seats despite securing larger percentage of votes.

"We couldn't form the government because of my unwillingness to sell gas. So, who sells the country? Khaleda Zia, HM Ershad and Ziaur Rahman did it. Awami League doesn't do it."

The premier sought cooperation from the MPs so the national budget for 2024-25 fiscal and the Annual Development Programme are properly implemented.

Talking about the Ashrayan project, she said a total of 8.68 lakh landless and homeless families have been rehabilitated. The total number of beneficiaries is more than 43.39 lakh, she added.

This year, the budget session of the 12th parliament began on June 5. The session was prorogued yesterday evening after 19 sittings.

Finance Minister AH Mahmood Ali placed the Tk 7.97 lakh crore proposed national budget for 2024-25 fiscal in parliament on June 6. The Finance Bill-2024 was passed on June 29 and the national budget on June 30.

A total of 228 MPs took part in the discussion on the proposed budget.

"In this case, he could not show any legitimate and acceptable sources of income for the additional Tk 41.46 lakh," it said.

On the other hand, although Shahana is a homemaker, there is evidence of non-income assets of Tk 1.58 crore in her name.

According to the statement of the case in which she was accused, "In the wealth statement submitted to the ACC, Shahana showed her movable and immovable properties are worth Tk 1.99 crore. However, the total legal and acceptable income, including net savings and other legal receipts, and excluding family and other expenses from the income mentioned in the name of Shahana Parvin, is Tk 41.2 lakh.

"It was found that the accused Shahana Parvin possessed movable and immovable assets worth Tk 1.58 crore inconsistent with her known sources of income."

The ACC said Shahana bought her properties with her husband's ill-gotten money, which is why she is the main accused in the case filed over abetting the acquiring of illegal wealth.

THE REJOINDER

1. It has come to our notice that a renowned newspaper namely The Daily Star has published a news report in its online version on 30.06.2024 at 4:25 PM and subsequently published in its print version on 01.07.2024 with the headline "Two S Alam firms evaded Tk 3,500 crore in VAT, says NBR". In the said News Report, it has been falsely stated that S. Alam Vegetable Oil Limited and S. Alam Edible Oil Limited have unpaid Value Added Tax, and consequent penalty worth over Tk. 7,000 crore which they allegedly evaded through various means in three years between 2019-20 to 2021- 2022. The said news report made further false allegation that during the period from 2019 to 2022, these two companies evaded Tk. 3,538 crore in VAT for which these two companies have been imposed penalty of Tk. 3,531 Crore. In the said news report, it has falsely been alleged that these two companies evaded revenue by showing lower value of raw material purchase in VAT Return than that reported in their annual reports during the three financial years. In the said news report, further false allegation has been made that the said two companies evaded VAT by deducting less amount of VAT at source. It is further falsely alleged that despite selling edible oil to different purchasers, the said two companies did not pay VAT on those sale transactions. In the said news report it is further falsely alleged that in order to evade VAT, soybean and palm oil were sold after producing the items with the ingredients procured from local sources or collected by any other means. It is further alleged that Tk. 8100.39 core worth of raw materials have been procured locally against which the company failed to submit any VAT challan or Bill of Entry.

2. All the above allegations are absolutely false, frivolous, baseless and the said report has been published with ulterior motive. Both the companies submitted reply to the VAT authority on 27.12.2023 and thereafter submitted an explanation to their reply on 18.03.2024. In the explanation dated 18.03.2024, both the companies produced a clear picture that firstly the said two companies deducted VAT at source in accordance with law and no VAT was evaded which is supported by the evidence produced before the Commissioner of VAT.

3. Secondly, Tk. 10,320 Crore and Tk 9,207 Crore were shown in the respective audit report as sale which were actually received as advance money by issuing DO letters in favour of the intending purchasers for future sales which ultimately did not take place and the amounts so received by the aforesaid two companies were ultimately returned to the buyers through their respective bank accounts. The context of advance sale is a common practice in the local market of edible oil and is recognized business practice all over the country. The return of the amount of those advance sales are well documented.

4. Thirdly, the raw materials for production of edible oil are not available in the local market and those have to be imported by way of L/C. All these explanations were sufficiently placed before the Commissioner of VAT with relevant documents. However, the Commissioner of VAT deliberately avoided from reflecting the same in his determination order. However, in the said news report as well as in the order passed by the VAT Commissioner on 09.06.2024, this explanation of the two companies have willfully been suppressed only to scandalize the said two companies. During the proceeding before the VAT Commissionerate, these two companies requested to allow them opportunity of personal hearing as well as for producing their detailed evidence in supporting their explanation.

5. Lastly, on 04.06.2024 both the companies filed applications before the Commissioner of VAT for fixing the date of hearing on 10.07.2024 or any day thereafter. However, the VAT Commissionerate passed an order on 09.06.2024 without affording these two companies the opportunity of hearing which is a clear violation of section 73 read with 85 of the VAT and Supplementary Act, 2012 as well as of principles of natural justice. Interestingly, the Commissioner in his orders both dated 09.06.2024 totally suppressed the fact of filing of application by these companies on 04.06.2024 only to justify his order.

6. These two companies never evaded any amount of VAT whatsoever and we are confident that if we are given a proper opportunity to produce our explanation along with the supporting documents, we will be able to establish the fact that no VAT has ever been evaded. These two companies challenged the said orders of the VAT Commissioner by filing two writ petitions before the Hon'b1e High Court Division of the Supreme Court of Bangladesh on 30.06.2024. The Hon'b1e High Court Division vide order dated 01.07.2024 was pleased to issue Rule Nisi in the said two Writ Petitions. We already informed the newspaper authority about the pendency of the said two Writ Petitions at 02:00 PM on 30.06.2024. However, the Daily Star published the said news report on their online edition at 4.25 P.M on 30.06.2024 and subsequently published in print version on 01.07.2024 totally concealing the fact that the said order passed by the Commissioner of VAT was already sub-judice before the Hon'b1e High Court Division. This amounts to frustration of administration of justice and therefore, is a serious contempt of the Hon'ble High Court Division.

7. We strongly deny and object to the said false, frivolous, baseless and motivated news report published in The Daily Star. We reserve our right to take appropriate legal action against the said false news report.

OUR RESPONSE

Firstly, the content of our news report was based on findings of an audit by the field office of NBR's Customs, Excise & VAT Commissionerate, Chattogram, and a subsequent review by a five-member committee headed by an additional commissioner, Chattogram VAT Commissionerate. The Daily Star simply reported on the VAT Commissionerate's findings that the said two companies have unpaid VAT and consequent penalty worth Tk 7,000 crore.

So the claim in the second paragraph of the rejoinder that "all the above allegations are absolutely false, frivolous, baseless and the said report has been published with ulterior motive" is totally untrue. The Daily Star published the story in public interest, and with no other motive whatsoever.

The VAT demand adjudication order by the VAT Commissionerate came in June 2024, about eight months after the field office submitted its audit report in October 2023. During the audit and review process, the two S Alam firms were given the opportunity to explain the discrepancies in sales and purchase data they presented in their audited annual financial reports and in their VAT returns. This mismatch between two sets of data, presented by the two companies themselves to the authorities, were discovered by the government's VAT wing, and not by The Daily Star.

In its own admission to the VAT authorities, the two companies said that they "presented inflated values in their audited financial reports to avail bank loans," to which the NBR review committee said that "if this is true, they have clearly committed a criminal offence." The review report further said that the related bank has also "acted very unprofessionally" if it sanctioned loans based on an "imaginary and untrue" financial statement.

We reported these findings and observations of the revenue collector, and not a single word more.

As is our practice in line with internationally accepted standards, we approached their parent company on June 27, 2024, three days before we went online and four days before we ran the report in our print version. Between our first contact and the publication, we have spoken to S Alam Group Executive Director (Finance) Subrata Kumar Bhowmik and the Group's legal counsel Md Mustafizur Rahman multiple times over the phone and exchanged eight text messages via WhatsApp. Md Mustafizur Rahman also sat with The Daily Star at its office on June 29, 2024, to offer their explanations. The meeting lasted about 80 minutes.

In fact, much of the explanations offered in paragraph 3, 4 and 5 of this rejoinder have been included in our story, quoting Mustafizur. We even sent a draft of his comments before publication, asking him to see if it reflected the company's version, and he said by phone "it's okay" and did not suggest any changes, deletion or addition.

To be clear, we dedicated 442 words for the Group to clarify their position in our story. This is only from our telephonic and face-to-face conversations with the Group representatives. If we count the 347 words that we also have incorporated in our story from the NBR's VAT wing report as their explanation on the VAT evasion allegation, we have dedicated 789 words for the Group in our 2830-word story.

About two hours before we were ready to go online, S Alam Group sent a notice asking us not to publish the story since they have filed writ petitions against the orders of the VAT Tribunal. Since we did not comment upon or discuss the merits of the writ petition, we went ahead with our publication which reports on the findings of the NBR field office as provided in its orders.

The Daily Star never engages in "motivated" reporting as the last paragraph of the rejoinder falsely claims. We repeat, we publish stories in public interest, and a story on allegations of VAT evasion worth Tk 3,538 crore and consequent penalty amounting to another Tk 3,531 crore have huge public interest.

The rejoinder does not dispute any facts or present any proof to counter the content of our story. We stand by our report.

Dhaka to seek $20b

with imports by Bangladesh accounting for almost the entire sum.

A team of Chinese Exim Bank yesterday met with officials of the Economic Relations Division, the finance ministry wing that negotiates foreign loans, to discuss the terms and conditions for the loan, The Daily Star has learnt from officials informed with the proceedings.

The other projects for which Dhaka will be seeking loans from China include: the Dhaka Mass Rapid Transit Development Project (Line 2), the Bhanga-Kuakata rail line, bridge over the Kocha river at Pirojpur, the renovation of Dhaka Medical College Hospital, and Maheshkhali-Matarbari Bakhrabad 3rd parallel gas transmission pipeline.

An announcement on starting negotiations for a free trade agreement may also come up during the visit as Bangladesh is eager to boost exports to China to reduce the trade gap.

Beijing wants to upgrade the relationship with Dhaka to a "comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership" from "strategic partnership" that was declared during the visit of Chinese President Xi Jinping in 2016, according to officials involved with the proceedings.

Stakeholders, however, advised putting national interests at the centre of the negotiations.

Bangladesh wants to sign FTAs or other deals with China but it needs to negotiate efficiently to serve the national interests, said Rumana Islam, a commissioner of the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission.

"We have a number of bilateral trade treaties, but mostly they protect the interests of the foreign investors. They don't speak much about Bangladesh's interests," she said at a roundtable on the future of China-Bangladesh relations organised by the Bangladesh Foundation for Regional Studies yesterday.

China can support Bangladesh in the development of state-of-the-art hospitals that are in high demand here, said Imtiaz Ahmed, executive director of the Centre for Alternatives.

"Several lakh Bangladeshis go abroad for treatment every year, a trend that could be reversed with Chinese investment in the health sector," he said.

There are opportunities for China, India and other countries to work on the Teesta project.

"It is important that the Teesta project implementation begins soon as 29 million people are suffering because of the water deficit in the Teesta. It is time for us to turn geopolitical conflicts into cooperation," Ahmed said at the event moderated by Shah Ali Farhad, a former special assistant to Hasina.

Ensure same pension

Besides, all teachers should have better packages during their service as well as in retirement, so that the best minds are attracted to the profession, they say.

The finance ministry in a gazette in March announced a pension scheme titled Prottoy for recruits joining the autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory, or such organisations, including public universities, on or after July 1.

Under the scheme, 10 percent of the monthly basic salary of an employee, up to Tk 5,000, will be deducted and given to their pension fund. The employing organisation will contribute the same amount to the fund. The government will pay the authorities managing the pension. There will be no one-time gratuity for the retiring employee.

The government will investment the money, and the proceeds will be added to the fund.

Under the existing pension system, employees do not need to contribute to their pension funds. Faculty and staff recruited before July 1 this year will be under the current pension scheme.

Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali announced in his budget speech on June 6 that government officials, including bureaucrats, would be under a new pension scheme, which the finance ministry later said would be named Shebok. Employees joining after July 1 next year would be under this scheme.

The government has yet to publish terms of Shebok.

University teachers, meanwhile, are concerned that their retirement benefits will be cut by Prottoy while government officials under Shebok will be better off, said Prof Muhammad Shahadat Hossain Siddiquee who teaches economics at Dhaka University.

He is also a member of a committee the protesting teachers formed to review the new pension scheme.

TEACHERS' DEMAND IS LOGICAL

It is good that the government is heading towards a system in which the employee contributes to the pension funds, said AB Mirza Azizul Islam, former adviser to a caretaker government.

The government must manage the fund carefully and meticulously so that it does not turn into a losing concern.

Retired employees should not be kept waiting for the monthly pension.

The government spending in pension and gratuities was Tk 4,395 crore in fiscal year 2009-10 -- 4.3 percent of the budget. For the 2024-25 fiscal year, the government allocated Tk 36,902 crore, which is 4.63 percent of the total budget, according to the Ministry of Finance.

Azizul, also a former chairman of Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission, said, "The teachers' demands seem logical."

There should be no discrimination and division in the pension of public servants, added Azizul, also a former Dhaka University teacher.

Prof Shahadat said under the new scheme, new teachers and staffers of public universities would enjoy fewer benefits than they would have under the current one.

The brightest students may not choose to be teachers, he said.

The officials who will now be separated under the Prottoy and Shebok categories were all under the same pension scheme for years, he said.

"So, why is this separation all of a sudden?" he asked, adding that teachers were being downgraded from other government officials.

He said he realised that the government's spending capacity had diminished.

"But the government separated us from other officials."

All government officials should be brought under the same scheme, he said.

A finance ministry official, who wished to remain anonymous, said schemes like Prottoy were common across the world.

A similar scheme was introduced in India in 2004, with 10 percent of basic salaries being deducted and transferred to the pension authority, he said.

The government will not be able to continue bearing the growing pension costs, the official added.

The National Pension Authority said in a press release on Tuesday that out of 403 autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory, or such organisations, 90 are currently under one pension scheme. The rest are under the contributory provident fund (CPF) system with employees getting a one-time fund after their retirement. The new schemes will be effective to ensure pensions for all.

Although under the Prottoy scheme pensions will be provided after employees reach the retirement age of 60, the retirement age of university teachers is 65. The National Pension Authority press release said the government will make corrections in the rules.

The new scheme will not provide any one-time pay after retirement, but the monthly allowance will be multiple times higher than that of the existing system.

16TH JUDICIAL SERVICE RECRUITMENT

Gazette delay leaves candidates in limbo

ARAFAT RAHAMAN

Rashed Ahmed, a former student of Rajshahi University, was provisionally recommended to become an assistant judge following the final results of the 16th Bangladesh Judicial Service (BJS) exams.

After getting the recommendation, Rashed thought his days of uncertainty and anxiety would finally come to an end, as he would be joining a government job, which would help him finally start providing for his family.

But to his utter dismay, even after nine months of the results being published, he has yet to join the office due to the delay in publishing the official gazette.

Over 37 lakh cases are pending in the country. If the recommended candidates could join their positions sooner, it would help alleviate some of this backlog.

Due to that, a total of 104 candidates have yet to join their positions as assistant judges, despite being provisionally recommended.

Bangladesh Judicial Service Commission (BJSC), which is responsible for overseeing the appointment of assistant judges, published the recruitment notice for the 16th BJS on February 7 last year.

According to the BJSC website, the preliminary exams were held on March 18, followed by written exams from May 21-31. Oral exams were completed on September 19 and the final results were published on September 24.

Despite the completion of these stages, the final step -- publishing the gazette -- remains pending, causing significant distress among the selected candidates.

"Being recommended for a job and then waiting for nine months is unbearable and truly disheartening. Many people ask me where I have

Freedom fighters' quota not constitutional

GM Quader tells JS

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Not all freedom fighters are under-privileged, therefore, keeping quotas in the name of freedom fighters in government jobs is unconstitutional, Opposition Leader GM Quader told parliament yesterday.

Opposing the freedom fighters' quota in jobs, the JP chief said making the freedom fighters' quota permanent to a large extent destroys the main purpose of the spirit of our independence.

GM Quader said this in his winding-up speech at the third budget session of parliament.

Highlighting the various statements of students protesting against the quota system, GM Quader said, "In my view, permanently setting a large number of quotas for the employment of the upcoming generation of freedom fighters undermines the

Militants using prisons to run operations

Smuggling in phones with help of guards for communication, say police intel report

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

Neo JMB, the IS-inspired militant group responsible for the 2016 Holey Artisan Café attack, has been using cell phones from prisons for communication and operations, as per a recent police intelligence report.

The outfit is also increasing its funds through foreign donations and agricultural earnings.

One of the top leaders of the outfit Abu Ruham alias Kunia has been smuggling cell phones in jails with the help of some prison guards, the report added.

Then the inmates install encrypted apps like Signal, Telegram, and Wicker Me for communication.

Md Asaduzzaman, chief of the Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime unit, told The Daily Star that militants in jail are now under increased surveillance.

The report revealed that Neo JMB's current Ameer, Saudi expatriate and Afghan returnee Abu Bakar, maintains regular communication with jailed members in Bangladesh.

A high-ranking counterterrorism official confirmed that members provide money, SIM cards, and smart phones to inmates with help from some prison guards.

Financial support is also sent through mobile financing services, the official added.

NEW CURRICULUM

Questions of half-yearly exams 'leaked'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The question papers and their answers to the half-yearly assessment for classes 6 to 9 have been allegedly leaked on social media before the exams.

The recently introduced assessment process began yesterday involving approximately one crore students.

The leaked questions, centrally prepared by the National Curriculum and Textbook Board (NCTB), were found to be identical to those used in yesterday's assessments.

Prof Md Moshiuzzaman, acting chairman of the NCTB, admitted that the papers had been found on social media.

"These [question papers] were sent directly to the IDs of the headteachers around noon before the exam. Unfortunately, these questions were shared by the headteachers, leading to their distribution among the students."

"You can't call it a question paper leak," he said, explaining that during last year's evaluation, such papers were published on the official website about two weeks before the exams.

"As the evaluation process is activity-based, students won't get any advantage, even if they get the questions a week in advance. They have to perform and do tasks in front of their teachers during the evaluation," he said.

Regarding steps taken to address the leak, he said an urgent notice has been issued to headteachers, warning of strict action against anyone found responsible for future leaks.

'We need better transport service for a better Dhaka'

Speakers tell BIP conference

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Institute of Planners yesterday urged the government to ensure quality bus service in Dhaka to improve its position in the global liveable city index.

Dhaka has dropped two places to 168th on the Economist Group's Global Liveability Index. This decline from last year's 166th rank has placed Dhaka just above Karachi, while Kyiv, the war-torn capital of Ukraine, ranks three places higher.

The annual survey, published on June 27, assessed the liveability of 173 cities based on stability, healthcare, culture and environment, education, and infrastructure.

BIP, during a press conference at its conference hall, recommended building new playgrounds and parks that are open to everyone.

BIP President Adil Mohammed Khan said the government is prioritising the infrastructure sector in the capital but the question is whether the infrastructure is in place to benefit more people.

Akhter Mahmud, former president of BIP, stressed the need for making all the ministries accountable.

BIP's other suggestions included taking effective initiatives to reduce waterlogging, and protecting waterbodies.

Four to die for killing B'baria AL leader in 2012

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A Chattogram court yesterday sentenced four persons to death and 10 others to life term imprisonment for killing Brahmanbaria's Sarail upazila Awami League vice president AKM Iqbal Azad in 2012.

Judge Mohammad Halim Ullah Chowdhury gave the verdict. The death row convicts are Rafiq Uddin Thakur, Mafuz Ali, Mokkarm Ali Sohel, and Ismat Ali.

Public Prosecutor Ashok Kumar Das said the court sent the convicts -- all leaders and activists of AL and its associate wings -- to jail.

Iqbal Azad was stabbed and hacked to death by his political rivals on October 12, 2012. The PP said Iqbal was murdered in a planned way so that the convicts could grab tender businesses and others political benefits.

SUNDARBANS

Mangroves along rivers to be restored

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Khulna

The Forest Department has taken an initiative to reforest the lost mangroves on the banks of 52 rivers and canals adjacent to the Sundarbans in Khulna, Bagerhat, and Satkhira.

Under the initiative, only the plants that grow naturally in the Sundarbans will be planted on the banks of the rivers and canals that flow through Sharankhola, Morrelganj, Mongla, Dacope, Koyra, and Shyamnagar upazilas of the districts.

The International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN) Bangladesh and the Forest Department will jointly implement this initiative titled "Upper Sundarbans Restoration Programme" with funding from the French Development Agency.

The initiative will enhance the region's capacity to adapt to the impacts of climate change by bringing back the lost mangroves. It will be implemented following the model of mangrove afforestation done across five acres of land on the banks of the lake at Sheikh Russel Eco Park in Khulna's Batiaghata upazila.

Dr Abu Nasser Mohsin Hossain, divisional forest officer, said from July 6 to 8, officials of the department, members of the French Development Agency and IUCN Bangladesh will visit the cyclone-affected areas and the mangrove model created in the eco park.

Encroachment, pollution killing Burai beel

MIRZA SHAKIL, Tangail

Burai Beel, an important natural swamp in Tangail district town, is quickly shrinking due to pollution and illegal encroachment.

Once a vast waterbody, locals used it to commute to the district town from adjoining areas. It also served as a natural reservoir of native fish species, providing livelihood to local fishermen.

Tangail municipality, which is responsible for protecting waterbodies in the areas under its jurisdiction, has been dumping municipal wastes into Burai through several drains, thereby polluting its water. Moreover, some local influential people, including those with political backing, have been encroaching the swamp by filling it with different structures and claiming ownership using forged documents.

As a result, the swamp is now on its death bed. It can no longer drain away the accumulated rainwater of the town during monsoon, leading to waterlogging in neighbouring areas.

"We used to bathe in Burai's clean water decades back. Now the water is as polluted and dirty as it gets. It was also full of indigenous fish species," said Rafiqul Islam, a local.

Gautam Chandra Chanda, divisional coordinator of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association, said Burai Beel and waterbodies in Tangail are disappearing due to people's greed and authorities' irresponsibility.

Ratan Ahmed Siddique, general secretary of Committee to Protect Waterbodies in Tangail, said many areas in the town have become prone to waterlogging due to poor drainage system, and loss of waterbodies.

Contacted, SM Sirajul Haque Khan Alamgir, mayor of Tangail municipality, said they are aware of the issue and steps are underway to recover and protect all waterbodies in the town.

Adulterated drugs a major challenge

Says health minister

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Low-quality and adulterated drugs is a major challenge for Bangladesh, said Health Minister Samanta Lal Sen yesterday.

The minister said this at a programme titled, "Meeting of the assembly members of SEARN", in the capital.

The event was organised by South-east Asia Regulatory Network (SEARN), a network of health ministers of 11 member states from the WHO South-East Asia Region.

Sen said ensuring the safety, efficacy and quality of medicines is of paramount importance to protect people's health.

"The gathering of member states created a valuable opportunity for us to exchange experiences and strengthen drug abuse control in our regions," he added.

Maj Gen Mohammad Yousuf, director general of Directorate General of Drug Administration, Dr Rokeya Sultana and DGHS Director General Abul Bashar Mohammad Khurshid Alam also spoke.

DNCC launches school bus

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Dhaka North City Corporation yesterday introduced school bus service on a pilot basis in a bid to mitigate traffic congestion and ensure safety of students.

As part of the initiative, three buses were given to Banani Bidyaniketan School for transporting its students.

DNCC Mayor Md Atiqul Islam said these buses will have modern technology including CCTV cameras and app-based tracking system to ensure safety of children.

Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhury and DMP Commissioner Habibur Rahman were present at the event.

ACC seizes six Brahma cows from Sadeeq Agro

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday seized six cows of Brahma breed from Sadeeq Agro's farm in the capital's Mohammadpur area.

A drive, led by ACC Assistant Director Abul Kalam Azad, was conducted at the farm in the presence of Dhaka District Livestock Officer Basana Akhter, ACC Public Relations Officer Akhtarul Islam told The Daily Star.

He said the cows have been placed under the custody of the Department of Livestock Services.

Brahma cows were imported from the United States, which is prohibited. During the operation, neither the owner nor the manager of Sadeeq Agro was found.

been posted, and it's frustrating not being able to provide them with satisfactory answers," Rashed told this newspaper.

"It has even led me to avoid public gatherings. Some of the recommended candidates didn't even go home for Eid. Those who did, stayed away from social programmes just to avoid answers," he added.

Maruf Rahman, another candidate, said being unable to start their roles, they are missing out on practical experience that could increase their skills and knowledge, which is crucial given the huge number of pending cases that need to be resolved.

AGM Al Masud, deputy secretary of BJSC secretariat, said, "We already did our part a long time ago. However, it sometimes takes a prolonged time for police verification reports and other bureaucratic processes."

Contacted, Md Rezaul Karim, public relations officer of the law ministry, said, "We haven't gotten the police verification files yet. It is contributing to the delay in publishing the gazette."

Citing ministry officials concerned, Rezaul said, "As soon as we get the reports, the gazette notification publication process will proceed."

Over 37 lakh cases are pending in the country -- 16 lakh civil and 21 lakh criminal cases. If the recommended candidates could join their positions sooner, it would help alleviate some of this backlog, said officials concerned.

(Names of the candidates have been changed to protect their identities.)

However, Md Lutfur Rahman, jailer of the Kashimpur High-Security Jail, said, "There is no possibility of militants using mobile phones, as we are maintaining high security inside the prison."

He also refuted the allegations of guards helping inmates.

Meanwhile, CTTC officials have intercepted communications revealing that Neo JMB leader Saiful Islam Khaled, accused in the Gulshan café attack, used Telegram from Kashimpur high-security jail to contact IS militants in Afghanistan's Khorasan province, seeking financial support to reorganise Neo JMB in Bangladesh.

The outfit is also recruiting members inside jail, CTTC sources said.

To boost finances, the group plans to buy a speedboat, CNG-run autorickshaws, autorickshaws, and motorbikes for income generation, they added.

Abu Ahsan Habib Al Bangali, also known as Lion, who is currently on the run after being released on bail, is overseeing all these activities.

The Neo JMB has collected 1.5 lakh phone numbers and uses those to recruit new members through text messages, the intelligence report adds.

They also spread posters and PDFs on online platforms, and have formed eight social media platforms in this regard.

Abu Adnan Al Bengali, a top leader, has been designated for media operations.

Dhaka Metropolitan Police Commissioner Habibur Rahman said online propaganda poses a significant challenge due to its ability to quickly spread extremist ideology with minimal cost.

The outfit intends to establish remote hill hideouts for operational activities and train new experts in bomb and arms manufacturing.

Rahmat Ullah Chowdhury, deputy commissioner of the CTTC unit, said, "The outfit is altering its strategy to evade law enforcement, but we have heightened vigilance to thwart their subversive intentions."

fundamental goal of freedom. It destroys the purpose of creating a society based on justice without discrimination."

He said the constitution talks about equality in terms of opportunities. "If the constitution is to be obeyed then it must be obeyed properly...," he added.

"The country needs talent to move forward... The world will not depend on our sentiments. We have to compete. If merit is not given priority, on what basis will we compete?" he questioned.

Quader also spoke about the movement of teachers over the pension scheme. He said such a situation has been created due to a lack of trust in the government.

3 killed, 2 hurt in road accidents

STAR REPORT

Three people were killed and two injured in road accidents in two districts yesterday, according to reports from our correspondents.

In Tangail, two people were killed and two others injured in a collision between a bus and a truck in Mirzapur upazila.

The accident occurred on Dhaka-Tangail highway in Gorai area around 5:00am when the Dhaka-bound passenger bus from Nilphamari hit a pole-laden parked truck, said Mohammad Anisuzzaman, sub-inspector of Gorai Highway Police Station.

Mugni Miah, 35, supervisor of the bus; and Forina Begum, 55, a passenger from Dimla, Nilphamari, died on the spot.

Police seized both the vehicles after the accident, said the SI.

In Joypurhat, a bicyclist was killed after a truck ran him over in Khetlal upazila.

Khairul Islam, 65, from Kashba village in Khetlal died on the way to the local upazila health complex, said police.

Meeting to decide VAT on metro fare today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Road Transport and Bridges Ministry will be holding an inter-ministerial meeting today regarding VAT-related issues of the metro rail service.

Apart from ministry officials, representatives from National Board of Revenue, Finance Division, Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd will join the meeting at Road Transport and Highways Division.

RTHD Secretary ABM Amin Ullah Nuri will preside over the meeting, officials said.

The meeting was called after NBR decided not to extend the 15 percent VAT exemption on metro rail fares beyond July 1. DMTCL, however, has not imposed VAT on metro fares thus far.

In April, NBR decided to cancel the tax exemption on fares since the metro rail operation launched in December of 2022.

DMTCL, though the Road Transport and Highways Division, wrote to NBR to review the decision.

Flood deals a blow to peanut cultivation

Severe flash floods across Rangpur division since mid-June have dealt a blow to peanut cultivation in the region.

Peanut, or groundnut, is a vital cash crop for the marginal farmers in the division who cultivate it on the sandy shoal lands of Teesta river basin.

Torrential rainfall in the upstream in India caused the Teesta to swell, inundating vast stretches of croplands across five districts in the division -- Rangpur, Dinajpur, Kurigram, Lalmonirhat and Nilphamari.

According to the Department of Agricultural Extension in Rangpur, 5,512 hectares of land in the division have been brought under peanut cultivation.

> a farmer from Shibdeb Char under Pirgachha.

At least 2,315 hectares of land have been affected by floods.

Peanuts cultivated on 315 hectares of land were completely damaged in the flood, said DAE sources.

This year, the production target for peanut was set at 12,600 tonnes.

Visiting the shoals of Gangachara, Pirgachha, and Kaunia upazilas of Rangpur district, this correspondent observed acres of sandy land used for peanut cultivation have become waterlogged following the flash floods.

"Peanut is harvested around June. The flash floods inundated our croplands when we were gearing up for harvesting our produce. My crops were washed away right before my eyes," said Foyzur Rahman, a farmer from Shibdeb Char under Pirgachha.

"I had planted peanuts on three acres of land after borrowing money from a local lender. How am I going to pay my debts now?" he lamented.

Abed Ali, a farmer from Kaunia upazila, said, "Even if we managed to harvest some of our produce, we could not save those due to a lack of drying space after the floods."

Many other farmers echoed them, predicting that this year's production target is unlikely to be achieved due to the disaster.

Obaidur Rahman, deputy director of DAE in Rangpur region, said, "Peanut on 315 hectares of land has been damaged while over 2,300 hectares of land used in peanut cultivation have been affected due to floods."

He, however, expressed optimism that the overall production will not be affected much.

Robbery accused found dead in police station

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The hanging body of a youth, accused in a robbery case, was found inside the lockup of Chandgaon Police Station in Chattogram yesterday morning.

Md Jewel, 22, was arrested by the police on Tuesday night and was put inside the lockup around 12:30am yesterday.

He hanged himself with his shirt, tied to the toilet ventilator of the lockup, around 6:30am, said Arif Hossain, assistant commissioner of Chandgaon zone of CMP, after seeing the CCTV footage.

"We arrested him from his house following a court warrant. We checked the CCTV footage and found that he died by suicide," he said.

Jahidul Kabir, officer-in-charge of the police station, said Jewel was accused in seven cases.

Police said Jewel was a mugger. He also drove a battery-run auto-rickshaw.

Jewel's sister Salma Begum said, "It's true that my brother was involved in mugging and theft incidents. But he recently pledged to my mother that he gave up left all the crimes and started living a crime-free life as an auto-rickshaw driver."

"His rickshaw was stolen at Kotwali a few days ago, and the owner of the rickshaw put a lot of pressure on him over money. A few days prior to his arrest, he tried to take his own life," she added.

Four to walk gallows for killing man

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A Chattogram court yesterday sentenced four persons to death and another to life term imprisonment for killing a man in Raozan upazila eight years ago.

Judge HM Shafiqul Islam delivered the verdict, court sources said.

The death row convicts are Mithu Chowdhury, Sumon Chowdhury, Md Delwar Hossen and Ershad Hossen. Delwar is on the run.

Another accused Sudip Chowdhury was given life term imprisonment. The court also acquitted another accused Eliash Ilu from the charges.

Victim's lawyer Sudip Kanti Nath said the court also fined the death row convicts Tk 50,000 each and Sudip Tk 10,000. The court sent Sudip to jail and issued arrest warrants against the others.

According to the case, the convicts murdered Sulal Chowdhury, 55, a quack, on June 25, 2016 following a feud over properties. Later, they dumped the body in a local ditch.

Meanwhile, another Chattogram court sentenced a man to life term imprisonment for killing his wife in the city's Bakalia area.

According to police, Md Jamal, 37, from Cumilla strangled Parvin Akhter, 24, over a family feud in 2022.

A family torn apart by the sea

One brother dies, another goes missing in the bay within two years

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pirojpur

Cyclone Remal left the Choto Masua village of Pirojpur's Mathbaria upazila devastated in its wake. With no support coming from the government, many fishers were forced to head out to the sea, despite an active 65-day fishing ban, to feed their families.

Al Amin, the only earning member of his family of six -- including his elderly father, blind mother, wife and two children -- was one such fisherman.

A total of 12 fishermen started their voyage on June 23 from the village.

However, tragedy struck mid sea.

Their fishing boat sank on Monday morning, around 10-12 kilometres from Mahipur of Patuakhali's Kalapara upazila, leaving five fishermen -- including Al Amin -- missing.

Another fishing boat recovered seven fishermen, including the trawler's owner, and returned home on Tuesday afternoon.

Al Amin has been missing ever since.

Al Amin had taken an advance loan of Tk 10,000 from the owner on the condition that he would help them catch fish during the 65-day ban, said Al Amin's father Akabbar Shah, 75.

Akabbar alleged when his son refused to go fishing in the sea, the owner asked him to return the advance loan, leaving Al Amin with no other choice but to accompany them.

Another one of Akabbar's son, Noor Islam, also died after going out to sea one year back.

"Noor's family is leading a miserable life. We support them as much as we can... but now with Al Amin gone, I don't know how we will survive?" he said.

During a visit to the dilapidated house of missing Al Amin, this correspondent found his mother Amina Begum sitting motionlessly.

Al Amin's wife, Salma, kept crying until she lost consciousness. Their two children, yet to understand the gravity of the situation, sat beside their grandmother.

Md Jahangir Alam, a neighbour, said Al Amin's family

Erosion takes serious turn with recession of flood water

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

With flood water receding, erosion along the banks of the Teesta river in different upazilas of Lalmonirhat and Kurigram has taken a serious turn.

River erosions are going at 20 points in different shoal villages under 10 unions in five upazilas of the two districts, while it took serious turn in at least six points.

Currently, Water Development Board (WDB) is trying to check the erosion on a temporary-basis by dumping sand-filled geo-bags at two points.

With flood water receding, erosion along the bank of the Teesta river has taken a serious turn. The photos were taken from Kalirmela village in Kurigram's Rajarhat upazila. PHOTO: STAR

According to WDB officials, erosion by Teesta river is now going on in Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila's Rajpur and Khuniyagach unions, Aditmari's Mahishkhochcha union and Hatibandha's Dawabari, Sindurna and Gaddimari unions, and Kurigram's Rajarhat upazila's Gharialdanga, Umar Majid and Bidyananda unions and Ulipur's Thetrai union.

While erosions took serious turn at Rajpur, Tajpur, Kholahati and Barogharia villages in Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila and Kalirmela and Burirhat villages in Rajarhat upazila of Kurigram.

While talking to chairmen of different erosion-hit Union Parishads (UPs), this correspondent came to know that erosion is going on at different shoal villages along the Teesta river for over a week now.

At least 145 homesteads and about 500 bighas of arable land have already been devoured by the Teesta river since June 21.

Moreover, over 2,000 homesteads, many government and private establishments and several thousand bighas of cropland are under threat of being eroded by the river at any time, they said.

Erosion victim Subas Chandra Roy of Kalirmela village in Kurigram's Rajarhat upazila said his entire homestead and two bighas of arable land went into the river last week.

Finding no other alternative, he and his family members took shelter on a government road, Subas said, adding that at least 20 homesteads and nearly 80 bighas of cropland of the village have been devoured by the river till now.

Farmer Nazar Ali of Kholahati village in Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila said erosion by the Teesta has intensified with the receding water level.

About 25 families, including his, have already lost their homesteads and took shelter on government khas lands.

Rajarhat Upazila Nirbahi Officer (UNO) Khadiza Begum said relief materials, including rice and dry foods, have been distributed among the erosion affected families.

Kurigram WDB Executive Engineer Rakibul Hasan said sand-filled geo-bags are being dumped at Kalirmela village in an attempt to check the erosion temporarily.

A letter has been sent to the higher authorities, seeking fund allocation so that they can provide adequate sand-bags in other erosion affected areas, the engineer said.

Contacted, Lalmonirhat WDB Executive Engineer Sunil Kumar said erosion has occurred at some places due to a recession in Teesta water level.

WDB higher officials have already visited the erosion affected areas, he said, adding that dumping of sand-filled geo-bags will be done to check erosion soon.

Univ teachers likely to sit with govt under the banner of the Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association (FBUTA) have been refraining from work since Monday demanding reinstatement of the previous pension facilities instead of the newly introduced "Prottoy" scheme of the Universal Pension System.

FBUTA Secretary General Nizamul Haque Bhuiyan yesterday said Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader spoke to them over holding a meeting this morning to discuss their demands.

"We will join the meeting, but our movement will continue," he told The Daily Star.

Teachers have been demonstrating since May 26 protesting the government decision to include all officers and employees, joining the service of autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory, or similar organisations and their subordinate institutions on or after July 1, 2024, under the Prottoy pension scheme.

Teachers said that the newly recruited teachers will suffer financial loss and many people will not take up teaching at universities if the new pension scheme is introduced.

They also demanded a separate pay scale for university teachers and inclusion of professors in the pay grade equivalent to that of a senior secretary.

PROTESTS CONTINUE

Skipping classes and exams, Dhaka University teachers under the banner of Dhaka University Teachers' Association (DUTA) staged demonstrations for the third straight day yesterday.

Addressing a sit-in in front of the arts faculty building, the teachers rejected the finance minister's statement and a press release from the National Pension Authority regarding the universal pension system.

Prof Zeenat Huda, general secretary of DUTA, called upon the finance minister to sit down for talks.

"Why is the finance minister avoiding discussion?" she asked.

Boycotting administrative activities, staffers under the banner of Dhaka University Karmakarta Karmachari Oikya Parishad held a sit-in in front of the administrative building.

As a result, many former and current students of the university could not collect their certificates and mark sheets yesterday.

No classes and exams were held at BUET, Rajshahi, Jahangirnagar, Chittagong, Jagannath and other universities yesterday. The university authorities either kept the transport service suspended or significantly reduced trips to and from campuses.

Meanwhile, 107 university teachers under the banner of University Teachers' Network yesterday called for scrapping of the "Prottoy" pension scheme and urged the authorities concerned to implement a separate pay scale for them.

In a statement, the teachers' platform said imposing a new pension scheme on the teachers without any discussion or consultation with the stakeholders is yet another "blatant display of the current government's arbitrary behaviour".

Over 50,000 stranded as flood hits new areas rehabilitation officer in Kurigram, said 450 chars and low-lying riverside areas have been flooded, leaving about 50,000 locals marooned in the district.

Most residents of the affected areas have either taken shelter on boats or the WDB embankment.

"The water has been rising since yesterday afternoon. It entered our house this morning. We might have to relocate soon if the water levels keep increasing," said Mobarak Ali, a 60-year-old farmer of Char Jatrapur in Kurigram Sadar.

Contacted, Kurigram Deputy Commissioner Mohammad Saidul Arif said the district administration will provide sufficient relief materials to the flood-hit people.

Meanwhile, the water level of some rivers in the northeastern region began to recede.

The overall flood situation in various low-lying areas of the northeastern region may remain unchanged, said the FFWC bulletin.

"The Surma, Bhugai, and Kangsha rivers in the northeastern region of the country are in a falling trend, while Kushiyara river is in a rising trend, which may continue in the next 24 hours."

According to the Bangladesh Water Development Board (BWDB), the Surma River, although above the danger level, marked a fall, while the Sari-Gowain River was flowing further below the danger level. However, the Kushiyara, Manu, and Khowai rivers were still above the danger level and rising.

At 3:00pm, the Surma was flowing 81cm above the danger level at Sylhet's Kanaighat Point, the Sari-Gowain was flowing at 127cm below the danger level at Jaintiapur's Sarighat point.

At 6:00pm, the Kushiyara was flowing 142cm above the danger level at Amalshid point of Sylhet; the Manu was flowing 58cm below the danger level at the Railway Bridge point, while it was flowing 45cm above the danger level at Moulvibazar Sadar point; and the Khowai was flowing 45cm above the danger level at Balla Point.

Many flood-hit people said that they were facing a crisis of relief materials.

Shamsun Nahar of Rahimpur under Moulvibazar's Kamalganj upazila said, "The swelling Dhalai river almost destroyed my house. I sent my children to a relative's house. Otherwise, they would be starving as we have not received any relief aid yet."

Contacted, Sylhet Divisional Commissioner Abu Ahmad Siddique said the administration is working to provide sufficient relief materials to the flood-victim people.

Dhaka in the case and also asked the chairman of the Labour Appellate Tribunal to dispose of the appeals as early as possible.

The HC delivered the verdict following a criminal revision petition moved by Advocate Khurshid Alam Khan on behalf of the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) against the Labour Appellate Tribunal order.

In the full text, the HC observed that the chairman of the Labour Appellate Tribunal has not assigned any reason for staying the operation of the judgement and order passed by the chairman of the Third Labour Court of Dhaka which on January 1 this year convicted and sentenced Prof Yunus and the others to six months in prison.

"As per Section 426(1) of Code of Criminal Procedure, there is no provision for staying the conviction passed by the learned Chairman, 3rd Labour Court, Dhaka but the Chairman, Labour Appellate Court, Dhaka, contrary to law, initially at the time of admission of appeal stayed the conviction which, in our view, is against the mandate of law and is ex-facie illegality that cannot sustain in the eye of law," reads the full text.

Contacted, Yunus's lawyer Abdullah-Al-Mamun said his clients will move an appeal before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court challenging the HC verdict.

Anti-quota demos rage on across the country

The demonstrations began around 2:30pm in front of Dhaka University's Central Library. They marched to the Shikha Chirantan and then to the TSC and Doyel Chattar.

The procession reached Shahbagh at 3:45pm and blocked the intersection, disrupting vehicular movement on key roads leading to Bangla Motors, Science Lab and Kakrail.

Hasib Al Islam, an organiser of the "Boishommo Birodhi Chattrra Andolon" (Anti-Discrimination Students Movement), said, "The High Court recently declared the 2018 quota cancellation circular illegal. The government has filed a writ petition, and the court is set to deliver a verdict on the quota system tomorrow [today]. We're waiting for that. If the quota system is reinstated, we will wage tougher movements."

A significant number of police personnel were present at the intersection ahead of the protesters' arrival.

JU, JNU DEMOS

Meanwhile, students of Jahangirnagar University blocked the Dhaka-Aricha highway in front of the university as part of the same protest.

Several hundred students brought out a procession from the JU Central Library around 3:00pm. They then moved towards the highway and blocked it around 3:15pm, halting vehicular movement and causing traffic congestion on both sides.

Jagannath University students also held a procession from the university premises to the Taantibazar intersection and blocked the road from there to Jatrabari, obstructing vehicles from entering the capital for about an hour.

Students from other public universities too blocked different regional highways throughout the day as part of the ongoing movement.

Barisal University students blocked the Dhaka-Patuakhali highway, while Bangladesh Agricultural University students halted train movement on the Dhaka-Mymensingh railway for an hour.

In Rangpur, students of Begum Rokeya University blocked the Dhaka-Rangpur highway.

Additionally, Chittagong University students demonstrated at their main gate and blocked the Chittagong-Khagrachari highway for about 40 minutes.

MOVEMENTS FOR QUOTA SYSTEM

On the other hand, student platform "Muktijoddha Quota Reinstatement Movement" held a rally in front of the National Museum in Shahbagh, in support of the quota system.

They then marched to the Raju Bhashkarjo at DU, making a seven-point demand, including the enforcement of the HC verdict and the issuance of a new circular in this regard.

In Rajshahi, members of the "Muktijoddha Sontan O Projonmo" of Rajshahi University formed a human chain to defend the quotas and protest derogatory remarks about the Liberation War and families of freedom fighters.

They held up placards with messages such as "Those who made the country independent, why should they be insulted?" and "Quota system does not create discrimination but provides equality".

convener Sabbirul Islam Chapal -- were undergoing treatment at Natore Sadar Hospital.

The criminals also threw crude bombs at the rally around 10:00am.

Rahim Newaz, member secretary of the district BNP, said the chief guest of the rally, Mosaddek Hossain Bulbul, forest and environment affairs secretary of the party's central committee, was injured in the blast. Mosaddek, who was also the former mayor of Rajshahi City Corporation, took first aid.

Asked, Rashedul denied the allegation of his involvement in the attack.

Amirul said, "I was not involved in the attack. The incident happened due to internal feud of BNP."

Tariqul Islam, superintendent of Natore police, said BNP had a pre-scheduled programme. BNP leader Shahidul and three others were attacked by criminals on the way to the event. Police identified those involved in the attack.

"Action will be taken against the attackers if a case is filed," he said.

Police had been deployed in front of the BNP office since morning. It is being investigated whether there was any negligence on part of police. If so, they will be punished.

Shariful Islam Ramzan, general secretary of Natore AL, said those who attacked the BNP leaders are identified criminals. None of them are members of their party or its affiliated organisations.

"So, the Awami League will not take the responsibility of this attack. The criminals carried out the attack in front of police."

He added that the incident happened due to inaction of police. Natore AL had no political programmes yesterday.

In Patuakhali, at least five BNP activists were attacked allegedly by AL men on the way to a rally on Swanirbhar Road in the district town yesterday.

The rally was held as part of BNP's central programme.

Injured Rubel Hawlader, senior vice-president of Swechchhasebak Dal Rangabali upazila unit, took treatment at Patuakhali Medical College Hospital, while others took first aid.

Snehanshu Sarkar Kutti, member secretary of district BNP, alleged that a group of AL activists were involved in the attack.

Denying the allegation, Abdul Mannan, secretary of the district AL, said it was BNP's internal conflict.

But Tuesday's draw means Brazil will face a titanic showdown in Las Vegas on Saturday against archrivals Uruguay, winners of Group D with a perfect record.

Brazil goalscorer Raphinha insisted the five-time world champions would be unfazed at the prospect of playing Uruguay.

"Our team is evolving with each game, with each training session and we think we're on the right track," Raphinha said.

EVER-SMILING MOUSUMI MOU SOLDIERS ON

Mousumi Mou, always radiant with her ever-present smile, has become one of the busiest and most acclaimed anchors today. Her spontaneous and engaging style has earned her widespread praise over the years. Demonstrating remarkable versatility, she has successfully anchored a wide range of programmes, including cricket talk shows, lifestyle segments, and entertainment-based broadcasts.

The multi-talented artiste has also mastered mime art and been featured in fiction and web projects. She has been involved with dancing, singing, recitation, and debating, from a young age.

In a recent conversation with The Daily Star, the artiste shared about her recent works, upcoming plans with her career, and more.

"Usually, Eid is one of the busiest seasons for entertainment-related programmes. However, this time, I did only one live show as the T20 World Cup was going on," shared Mou. Even on Eid day, Mou did three live cricket shows as a part of the tournament package. She hosted three shows on cricket namely: Banglalink presents Cric Café, bKash presents Free Hit powered by Banglalink, and Banglalink presents Catch the Match for the channel Toffee. Meanwhile, she hosted another show for DBC News, titled Bat e Ball e Bishwo Kapey. In her career, she spent the busiest time in this T20 World Cup 2024.

"Due to my heavy schedule, I couldn't return home for 48 hours and even had to stay back at Nagorik Television's office. I slept on the divan in Rubana Huq's office room," she said, "It is because their show's call time was 3am, and after finishing a late-night programme, it was not possible to return home and then show up again at that time."

After keeping up with the tournament's pressure, she travelled to Chattogram with her parents, where her father was honoured with the Bhubonjoyee Baba Award. "It is an exceptionally emotional and win-win moment for me when my parents are honoured for my achievements," she added.

After that, she hosted the Shikho GPA 5 Reception for the third consecutive year, where all the students' earning GPAs are generally appreciated and celebrated through a grand reception.

While maintaining her busy schedule, she also manages to spare time to nourish her passion for acting. She has already worked in two web-films, which are awaiting release. "One of the web-films is for the platform iScreen, titled Shodh, directed by S Shariar Nazim Joy. It features the director himself, along with Runa Khan, Tangia Zaman Methila, and me," she shared.

"Another web-film, Tribhuj Prem, is directed byAlok Sen. It tells the story of three couples who belong to different socio-economic classes in society. It features Shohel Mondol alongside me, while the other pairs are Shariar Nazim Joy and Anika Kabir Shakh; and Imtiaz Barshon and Farin Khan. This film will be released on DeeptoPlay".

Mou has done several international shows— not just hosting but mime shows. She won the Best Female Performer Award at the 35th International University Theatre Festival 2023 in Casablanca, Morocco, last July. On her future plans with mime, she shared, "I have collaborated in various mime performances, but this time, I have a plan to do my solo show. It is currently underway and if all goes well, I will be doing it soon."

Discussing the art of mime, the artiste shared that it is a challenging discipline with few practitioners in modern times. "Unfortunately, the investment required for this art form, and the lack of support from related associations, make it difficult to sustain," she explained. Financial constraints are a major reason for mime's limited popularity, and female artistes in this field are especially rare. "When I began performing mime, I was the only woman on the team, but now more girls are being encouraged and showing interest." She expressed her gratitude to Dhaka University Mime Action (DUMA) for their efforts to expand the reach of mime.

She also spoke about her recent on-stage performance in the show Adore Gora Bhobishshot, sponsored by Meril. Directed by Tariq Anam Khan, the show features the veteran actor himself, Sumon Patwary, and herself. "It has a unique style, different from the conventional ones. We performed as hosts in the drama, addressing various issues typically faced by new parents. It was fun to be a part of such a unique project," she concluded.

Kushum Sikder makes directorial debut with 'Shoroter Joba'

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT DESK

After a five-year hiatus, Kushum Sikder is returning to the spotlight, taking on the dual role of director and actress. She is set to make her directorial debut this year with the film Shoroter Joba, in which she also stars.

The film has already received its censor certificate and is slated for release in September. The actress-turned-director managed the entire shoot in the Narail district, overseeing every detail. "This experience is new for me as an actress and quite challenging as a director," she shared.

Once a familiar face in dramas and films, Kushum stepped back from the industry five years ago due to depression and a heavy work schedule. In Shoroter Joba, Kushum teams up with Yash Rohan, marking their first collaboration on screen. The cast also includes Shahidul Alam Sachchu, Naresh Bhuiyan, Jeetu Ahsan, and others.

Chanchal starrer 'Padatik' release date finalised

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT DESK

After winning hearts with his superb performance in Toofan, Chanchal Chowdhury is once again set to impress fans in theatres with his first Indian film, Padatik, directed by Srijit Mukherji. After much delay, the film has finally locked in its release date.

Earlier on Tuesday, Srijit announced the release date of the movie along with its poster. The film will be released in theatres this August 15.

Padatik is the biopic of renowned Indian film director Mrinal Sen. Chanchal Chowdhury takes on the role of the protagonist in the movie. The teaser of the movie was released last May.

The actor has been praised for his extreme dedication and ability to embody the character. People are also appreciating the director for the movie.

Chanchal revealed that playing the role of a famous person like Mrinal Sen is a significant achievement for him. "The entire credit for my acting in Padatik belongs to the director. I acted as he wanted," shared the actor with The Daily Star.

Regarding his character, the Hawa famed actor revealed that it was also challenging to portray Mrinal Sen on the silver screen. "I have given my best, and I am sure the audience will see how much effort I put into the role," said Chanchal.

'Despicable Me 4' premieres in Bangladesh simultaneously with global debut

The much-anticipated Despicable Me 4 premiered in theatres worldwide yesterday, including a simultaneous release in Bangladesh at Star Cineplex. This marks an exciting moment for Bangladeshi fans who have followed the beloved animated series since its inception.

Despicable Me first captured audiences' hearts in 2010, followed by successful sequels in 2013 and 2017. Directed by Chris Renaud and produced by Universal Pictures, the fourth instalment continues the adventures of the reformed super-villain Gru, voiced by Steve Carell. The film also features voice talents from Kristen Wiig, Miranda Cosgrove, Steve Coogan, Chris Renaud, Dana Gaier, and Pierre Coffin.

In just two days of dropping the trailer of Despicable Me 4, it amassed over 1.5 million views on Universal Pictures' YouTube channel.

In this new chapter, Gru and Lucy welcome their newborn son, Gru Jr. The story introduces a new antagonist, Maxime Le Mal, who has integrated cockroach parts into his body. After escaping prison, Maxime seeks revenge on Gru's family. To protect them, the Anti-Villain League (AVL) relocates the family, assigns three minions to them, and moves the rest to AVL headquarters.

ARBOVIRUS will tour Canada with original lineup

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT DESK

Arbovirus is gearing up for their inaugural Canada tour, starting with Bangladesh Rockfest on August 17 at the Toronto Pavilion.

The band will perform their popular hits and debut a single from their forthcoming album, Nikhoj Songbad. Joining them on stage will be Bangladeshi pop-rock band Shunno and Bangladeshi-American hip-hop band Stoic Bliss.

On August 18, Arbovirus will take the stage at the Giovanni Caboto Club in Windsor, Ontario, under the auspices of AIA Productions. Fans can expect a special treat as original drummer Farhan Tanim and bassist Ishtiaq Hossain Jishan, are rejoining the band for this tour after 16 years, marking a significant reunion.

Guitarist Asif Asgar Ranjan shared his excitement, saying, "Our Canada tour, starting with Bangladesh Rockfest, is significant in many ways. We're reuniting after a long time, and original members Ishtiaq Hossain Jishan and Farhan Tanim, who our longtime fans have missed, are joining us."

"This makes it a fantastic reunion. We haven't performed together in years, and we're thrilled to kick off our show with the debut single from our fourth album, Nikhoj Songbad. Most of the album is completed; we're just wrapping up a few final takes and doing the mixing and mastering. So, this show also announces the start of our new album," he continued.

Original drummer Farhan Tanim and bassist Ishtiaq Hossain Jishan, are rejoining the band for this tour after 16 years, marking a significant reunion.

"Expect surprises, too," said lead guitarist Ranjan, "Our live shows are always an experience to remember, both for us and the audience. We give it our all every time, and this show will be no exception."

The day after, Arbovirus has another show in Windsor under AIA Productions. The band is also planning more shows in October and November.

"Our Bangladeshi fans can look forward to us performing several big shows. We're finalising details with sponsors and organisers and will return to Bangladesh for those events," stated Ranjan.

"We're incredibly excited about the Canada tour and being together again is indescribable. We're preparing diligently and will have a full week of rehearsals once we arrive in Canada. It's a fantastic time for us," he said.

Farhan Tanim, conveyed, "I'm thrilled to rejoin Arbovirus after so many years, with the original members on stage together again. This reunion feels like a merging of continents, with members joining from England, America, Canada, and Australia, all connected through their roots in Bangladesh."

"It's rare due to our busy lives, so this reunion is exhilarating. Technology and our commitment are making it possible. We're preparing through regular communication and practice, and I anticipate a wonderful evening." Jishan simply said, "I'm very excited. It's time for us to feel young again."

The current lineup of Arbovirus includes Sufi Maverick on vocals, Asif Asgar Ranjan as guitarist, Ahmed Aldnane Alam as bassist, and Nafeez Al Amin as drummer.

Arbovirus is nearly finished with Nikhoj Songbad, which will be released through their label, Infected Records.

4TH OF JULY
CELEBRATING THE 248TH AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

The Daily Star
DHAKA THURSDAY JULY 4, 2024
ASHAR 20, 1431 BS

We appreciate a bolstered BANGLADESH-US BILATERAL RELATIONS

Remarks by the Hon'ble Foreign Minister Dr. Hasan Mahmud, M.P. at the Celebration of the 248th Independence Day (04 July 2024) of the United States of America

DATE: 25TH JUNE 2024 VENUE: LE MERIDEN, DHAKA

His Excellency Ambassador Peter Haas,

Hon'ble Cabinet Colleagues, Hon'ble Members of Parliament,

Distinguished Members of the Diplomatic Corps,

Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen,

As-salamu Alaikum & Good Evening

It is my great pleasure to be here today to celebrate the 248th anniversary of the Independence of the United States of America. On behalf of the Government of Bangladesh and on my own behalf, I would like to congratulate you and the people of the United States on this momentous occasion.

Ladies and gentlemen,
The Fourth of July is not only a date on the calendar; it is a symbol of freedom, democracy, and the enduring spirit of a nation that has continually inspired people around the world. We may be oceans apart geographically, but our shared spirit of freedom binds us closely together. Our journey towards independence under the visionary leadership of our Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman was inspired by the same yearning for freedom and self-determination.

I recall with great conviction the contribution of the people of the United States during our Liberation war. They raised their voice against the genocide committed against our people. The concert for Bangladesh at the Maddison Square Garden in New York in 1971 touched the chords of many hearts of the American people. I recall, with great honour, Senator Edward Kennedy, Consul General Archer K. Blood and so many like them who stood up for Bangladesh in 1971.

Dear Friends,
Our bilateral relationship with the US over the past five decades is a story of cooperation and mutual respect. I must thankfully acknowledge the sustained support and assistance of the United States during both crisis and peace time.

When the southern part of Bangladesh, including my district Chattogram was devastated by a category-5 cyclone in 1991, the US government quickly deployed more than 8000 naval and marine personnel under its "Operation Sea Angel" program to help Bangladesh respond to the crisis. As I was also conducting relief operations at that time from my party, Awami League, I personally witnessed that act of support and compassion by the US.

More recently, the USA once again emerged as the largest partner of Bangladesh to combat COVID-19 pandemic. More than 137 million doses of COVID vaccines donated by the US was a mainstay of our fight against the virus.

Dear Audience,
Under the dynamic leadership of Hon'ble Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, Bangladesh has emerged a miracle of development. During the last three terms of Awami League government, extreme poverty has fallen from 25% in 2006 to 5% today. The poverty rate has fallen from 41% to 18.6% during the same period, while life expectancy increased by 7 years. Bangladesh is set to graduate from LDC in 2026 and a forerunner in achieving SDGs.

With the rapid growth of our economy, trade between our countries flourished. Trade surpassed 14 billion dollars in 2022 and investment reached the 4 billion dollars mark. The United States is the largest single export destination for Bangladeshi goods, and a significant source of our FDI.

As we continue to march forward to realize the dream of Bangabandhu's 'Sonar Bangla'- a golden Bengal- we anticipate stronger partnership of the US in fulfilling our journey towards a smart developed country by 2041.

Excellencies, Distinguished Guests,
The Rohingya crisis continues to loom large on us. Sheltering 1.2 million Rohingyas for 7 years has been heavily draining our resources and creating multipronged challenges. Thankfully, the United States has been a leading partner in our humanitarian response to this crisis. We seek continued and renewed support of our international friends to bring an end to this protracted crisis.

Ladies and Gentlemen,
Despite being one of the least polluters, Bangladesh is one of the most vulnerable countries to climate change. Bangladesh is pledge-bound to pursue a low carbon growth path in spite of its insignificant carbon footprint and huge development need. We appreciate existing US support and look forward to a stronger and deeper collaboration in implementation of our National Action Plan 2023-50 and the Mujib Climate Prosperity Plan through increased investment in areas like energy efficiency, cleantech/green energy, smart grid, transfer of technology, and climate-smart agriculture.

Dear Audience,
As we celebrate American Independence Day, let us also rejoice the strong people-to-people ties that bind our nations. The vibrant Bangladeshi-American community has enriched the cultural tapestry of the US and contributed to the economic enhancement of both our countries.

Dear Friends,
We appreciate the renewed commitment of a bolstered Bangladesh-US bilateral relations as expressed by President Joe Biden in his letter to our Prime Minister after her electoral victory this year. Together, we can continue to promote peace, stability, and prosperity for our peoples, in our respective regions, and beyond. Let us celebrate the spirit of independence and the enduring friendship between Bangladesh and the United States. Happy Independence Day to the United States of America! Long live Bangladesh-USA friendship.

I thank you all.

Joy Bangla. Joy Bangabandhu.
May Bangladesh Live for Ever.

AMBASSADOR'SMESSAGE

His Excellency Peter Haas
US Ambassador to Bangladesh

Today, we honor the Declaration of Independence, which was promulgated on July 4, 1776. Today, we celebrate the birth of a nation founded on the principles of freedom, rule of law, and the pursuit of happiness. And today, we renew our commitment to a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

The central role of the people, of each and every American citizen, is deeply enshrined in our democracy. Our Constitution, signed almost 250 years ago, gives the idea that the basis of government derives from the people. The preamble of that document says, We, the people of the United States of America, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

In his very first speech as President of the United States of America, George Washington re-emphasized the point. He declared that the continuation of America's democracy was entrusted to the American people. Democracy in the United States is not, never has been, nor will ever be perfect. We are not above reproach. We must strive continually to achieve our more perfect union. Our Declaration of Independence boldly declared that all men are created equal. That was simply not the case in 1776. It took us until 1865 to abolish slavery. Women did not have the right to vote until 1920. In 1964, we finally outlawed major forms of discrimination against racial, ethnic, national, religious minorities, and women. And only in 2015 did our Supreme Court affirm the constitutional right of LGBTQI plus couples to marry.

Clearly, our democratic journey has been a winding path, reflecting aspirations and imperfections that come with the pursuit of a more perfect union, and a more perfect democracy. 2024 is an unprecedented year for elections. More people are voting this year than at any time in history. In fact, national elections this year will involve nearly one-half of the world's population. As we know, Bangladesh's elections have already taken place, and ours will take place in November of this year. As those elections take place, it is important to ensure that the voice of the people is heard and that everyone be committed to the idea of striving for ever more perfect democracy.

Today I would also like to express the desire to build an ever more perfect relationship between the United States and Bangladesh. Both of our nations were founded on the principles of democracy, human rights, and national sovereignty. Both of our nations earned our independence through the sacrifice of brave patriots. And both of our countries need brave patriots to help us consolidate and advance our democracies.

But who are these brave patriots? They are the dissidents. They are the journalists. They are the human rights activists. They are the opposition politicians. They are civil society activists. In short, they are anyone willing to challenge the status quo, to point out our shortcomings, and to fight for change. Just because they disagree does not mean that they are disloyal.

As we celebrate American independence tonight in Bangladesh, I am reminded that we are on a collective journey. As a partner, and with humility, the United States has cooperated with Bangladesh over the past 53 years to advance the rights, well-being, and prosperity and security of our respective peoples, and we will continue to do so.

Thank you very much.

Labour set to surpass 1997 landslide in election: poll

AFP, London

The UK Labour party is 99 percent "certain" to secure more seats in today's general election than when it won a landslide victory in 1997, a major new poll said on Tuesday.

The centre-left opposition party -- out of power since 2010 -- is predicted to claim 484 out of a total of 650 seats in what would be an unprecedented victory in modern British history, pollster Survation said.

Meanwhile, the right-wing ruling Conservatives and the centrist Liberal Democrats (Lib Dems) are in a close race to come a distant second and form the country's official opposition, it added.

The prediction is the latest in a series of so-called MRP polls -- which use large national samples to forecast results for every UK constituency -- that estimate Labour will win emphatically today.

Such a scenario would see its leader Keir Starmer replace the Conservatives' Rishi Sunak as prime minister.

Labour has led the Tories in the polls by double-digit margins for nearly two years, and the gap has failed to narrow during a six-week election campaign widely seen as having gone badly for Sunak.

Survation said its data indicated that Labour would win around 42 percent of the overall vote, ahead of the Conservatives on 23 percent.

However, due to the UK's winner-takes-all electoral system in each of its 650 constituencies, that would see the Conservatives capture just 64 seats, with the Lib Dems predicted to claim 61.

Labour's estimated 484 seats would exceed the 418 won by ex-prime minister Tony Blair in 1997, and even top the Tories' landslide haul of 470 in 1931.

The pollster also predicted that Labour would again become the largest party in Scotland, winning 38 of its 57 seats.

2024 UK ELECTION

Sunak: Conservative leader still hoping for unlikely win

AFP, London

The UK Conservatives hoped Rishi Sunak would stabilise the party and country when they made him leader following his predecessors' chaotic tenures. Instead, he has led them to the brink of electoral wipeout.

The party's MPs installed the 44-year-old former financier in October 2022, after Liz Truss's 49-day premiership imploded when spooked markets moved against her tax-slashing plans.

Sunak succeeded to a point in stabilising the country's economy, but failed to stop bitter Tory infighting, or to make a dent in the persistent polling lead held by the opposition Labour Party. Buoyed by rare pieces of economic good news, Sunak called today's election in late May, despite not having to face the voters until early 2025.

He hoped the shock announcement would catch right-wingers Reform UK by surprise, and Labour's 20-point polling lead would shrink during the campaign.

But Sunak's campaign has lurched from one disaster to another.

By far the most damaging was Sunak's decision to leave early from D-Day commemoration events in France, provoking unilateral outrage and alienating right wing whose votes he desperately needs.

Starmer: Britain's next prime minister?

AFP, London

Labour leader Keir Starmer is a former human rights lawyer turned-state prosecutor whose ruthless ambition and formidable work ethic look set to propel him to Britain's highest political office.

The 61-year-old, named after Labour's founding father Keir Hardie, is the centre-left opposition party's most working-class leader in decades.

"My dad was a toolmaker, my mum was a nurse," Starmer tells voters often, countering depictions by opponents that he is the epitome of a smug, liberal, London elite.

With his grey quiff and black-rimmed glasses, Starmer remains an enigma in the eyes of many voters, who are predicted to propel him to Downing Street after today's general election.

Detractors label him an uninspiring opportunist, but supporters insist he is a managerial pragmatist who will approach being prime minister the same way he did his legal career: tirelessly and forensically.

"Politics has to be about service," Starmer said in a recent campaign speech, repeating his mantra to put "country first, party second" following 14 years of Conservative rule under five different prime ministers.

Sometimes appearing uncomfortable in the spotlight, the devoted Arsenal fan, who came to politics late in life, has struggled to shed his public image as buttoned-up and boring.

LIBERAL DEMOCRATS WINNING HERE

Key issues at stake in UK polls

AFP, London

Here are some key issues at stake in the UK general election today:

WILL JADED VOTERS TURN OUT?

The main opposition Labour party is widely predicted to win and has been determined not to take any risks, making for a lacklustre election campaign.

For the past two years, polling has suggested that Labour is 20 points ahead of the Conservatives, and no amount of campaigning has managed to shift the dial. But if that indicates a desire for change after 14 years of Tory government, there does not appear to be much enthusiasm for Labour's plans.

Indeed, Labour has repeatedly warned that it does not have a "magic wand" to change the country overnight.

The apathy extends to both leaders, with 72 percent having an unfavourable opinion of Tory leader Rishi Sunak and 51 percent of Labour's Keir Starmer, according to a YouGov poll this month.

That has prompted questions about whether voters will turn out in large numbers spurred on by the promise of change or remain at home jaded by years of chaos and no great love for party leaders.

LUCKY NUMBER EIGHT FOR FARAGE?

An unexpected addition to the campaign, Nigel Farage -- the Brexit figurehead who has now become the spokesperson of hard-right, anti-immigration views -- entered the race as the leader of Reform UK.

Despite a surge in the polls, the UK's first-past-the-post system makes outright victory for the 60-year-old former European parliamentarian and his party unlikely.

If he succeeds at his eighth attempt to get a seat in parliament as the MP for Clacton-on-Sea in east England, Farage -- a Donald Trump ally -- will have even more visibility.

If he fails, his startup Reform UK party, currently polling around 19 percent, would still play a decisive role in the race between the Tories and Labour in several constituencies.

TORY WIPEOUT?

Several polls suggest the party of Winston Churchill, Margaret Thatcher and Boris Johnson will win fewer seats than the 141 it secured in 1906, in what would be the worst result since its creation in 1834.

Speculation has already started about who would succeed Rishi Sunak to lead the fragmented party. It remains to be seen how many big names will save their seats and what direction the party, which was centrist under David Cameron (2010-2015) and then drifted to the right, can take. In the event of Reform's success, some Tories would not object to an alliance.

WEAKENED SCOTTISH NATIONALISTS?

Nothing seems to be going right for the Scottish National Party (SNP), which has dominated the devolved nation's politics for the last 15 years.

The surprise resignation of first minister Nicola Sturgeon in 2023 destabilised the party. Her successor Humza Yousaf only lasted a year.

The left-wing party is still the target of a probe into its finances in which Sturgeon's husband was implicated and does not have a viable strategy to deliver independence, a fight that was revived by Brexit but blocked by London.

First Minister John Swinney insists that winning in a majority of Scotland's 59 constituencies would be a green light for him to launch fresh negotiations on another referendum with the new government in London.

Russian forces advance in Ukraine's eastern region

Kill five in Dnipro strikes; dozens injured

AFP, Kyiv

Russia said yesterday its forces had captured a district in the key hilltop town of Chasiv Yar near Bakhmut in eastern Ukraine, where Moscow has been pressing for months.

The claim from Moscow came just after Kyiv said that Russian strikes on the industrial city of Dnipro had killed five people and wounded nearly three dozen more including a 14-year-old girl.

The defence ministry said its troops had "liberated" the Novy district of Chasiv Yar, but it was unclear if it was claiming its forces had crossed a canal which runs through the eastern part of the town.

The capture of Chasiv Yar -- a prized military hub that was once a sleepy town home to some 12,000 people -- would pave the way for Russian advances towards the last Ukrainian-controlled civilian centres in the Donetsk region.

Russia's capture of the district was also reported by the DeepState military blog, which has links to the Ukrainian army.

It said the area had been flattened by Russian bombardments, and that withdrawing was "a logical, albeit difficult decision." There was no immediate reaction from officials in Kyiv.

The Russian attack on Dnipro prompted Ukraine's President Volodymyr Zelensky to call on allies to help bolster its air defences and provide more long-range weapons to thwart Russian strikes.

CENTRAL ASIAN SUMMIT

Putin, Xi vie for influence

AFP, Astana

The leaders of Russia and China were in Kazakhstan yesterday for a regional summit, seeking to harden anti-Western alliances and press their influence in the strategic Central Asian region.

Russian President Vladimir Putin touched down in the Kazakh capital of Astana yesterday morning for a meeting of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO) -- a Beijing-led regional bloc that covers Central Asia, India and Iran.

Moscow and Beijing have deepened their political, military and economic ties since Russia launched its invasion of Ukraine in February 2022.

Alongside Chinese leader Xi Jinping, who arrived in Kazakhstan on Tuesday, the pair see the SCO as a key forum for advancing their strategic interests across Eurasia. "We attach great importance to partnership cooperation within this organisation," Kremlin aide Yury Ushakov told Russian state media outlets ahead of Putin's arrival.

"We believe that the SCO, as well as the second major association of BRICS, are the main pillars of the new world order, a locomotive in the context of establishing genuine multilateralism in world affairs," he added.

Both Russia and China have railed against what they call a US-led "hegemony" on the world stage.

China's Foreign ministry spokeswoman Mao Ning said earlier this week that Beijing believed the SCO summit would "help build more consensus among all parties and make contributions to promoting security, stability and development of member countries", and advance "lasting peace and common prosperity in the world".

80pc of Gaza people now displaced

Says UN coordinator

AFP, United Nations

The UN humanitarian coordinator for Gaza said Tuesday that 1.9 million people -- 80 percent of the territory's population -- were now displaced, adding she was "deeply concerned" by reports of new evacuation orders for Khan Yunis.

The United Nations has estimated that up to 250,000 people are impacted by the Israeli military order for civilians to leave parts of Khan Yunis and Rafah in Gaza, which has a total population of 2.4 million.

"Palestinian civilians in Gaza have been plunged into an abyss of suffering -- their home lives shattered, their lives upended," the UN coordinator for Gaza, Sigrid Kaag, told the Security Council.

"Over one million people have been displaced once again, desperately seeking shelter and safety, (and) 1.9 million people are now displaced across Gaza," she said.

"I'm deeply concerned about reports of new evacuation orders issued in the area of Khan Yunis," Kaag added.

"The war has not merely created the most profound of humanitarian crises. It has unleashed a maelstrom of human misery."

She said that not enough aid was reaching the war-torn strip, and that the opening of new crossings, particularly to southern Gaza, was necessary to avert a humanitarian disaster. Kaag said the Rafah crossing between Gaza and Egypt should be reopened, and also pleaded with the international community to do more to fund relief efforts.

Aid volumes entering Gaza had "dropped significantly" since the start of the Israeli operation in Rafah, she added.

UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres's spokesman said "yesterday's orders for the evacuations of 117 square kilometers in Khan Yunis and Rafah governorates apply to about a third of the Gaza Strip, making it the largest such order since October."

"An evacuation of such a massive scale will only heighten the suffering of civilians," said the spokesman, Stephane Dujarric.

Biden admin has 'complicity'

Say former US officials on killing of Palestinians in Gaza

REUTERS, Washington

A dozen former US government officials who quit over US support for Israel's offensive in the Gaza Strip on Tuesday accused President Joe Biden's administration of "undeniable complicity" in the killing of Palestinians in the enclave.

In a joint statement, the 12 former government officials said the administration was violating US laws through its support for Israel and finding loopholes to continue shipping weapons to its ally.

Both the White House and the State Department had no immediate comment on the statement.

There has been mounting international criticism of Israel's conduct in Gaza and of US military and diplomatic support for its ally in an offensive that has so far killed nearly 38,000 people and created a humanitarian crisis.

The resignations of the 12 US officials reflects some dissent within the government over its support for Israel. Washington has pushed for the protection of civilians in Gaza and has called on Israel to improve aid access.

Among the people who signed the joint statement were former members of the State Department, Education Department, Interior Department, White House and the military.

Labour predicted to eject

But Johnson -- ousted by his own colleagues, including Sunak, in 2022 after a string of scandals, and who has been notably absent from the campaign -- urged supporters not to see the result as a "foregone conclusion".

The Brexit stalwart told a rally late Tuesday that Starmer would try to "usher in the most left-wing Labour government" since World War II.

Earlier, Survation pollsters predicted Labour was on track to win more than the 418 seats it won when Tony Blair ended 18 years of Conservative rule in 1997.

Labour requires at least 326 seats to secure a majority.

"There is more chance of lightning striking twice in the same place... than Rishi Sunak remaining as prime minister," Britain's pre-eminent political polling expert John Curtice said this week.

Attention in the British media is turning to what a Starmer government would look like when the results for the 650-seat parliament start dropping from about 2230 GMT today into Friday morning.

Today's vote is Britain's first July election since 1945, when Labour under Clement Attlee defeated the Conservatives of World War II leader Winston Churchill, ushering in a period of transformational social change.

Attlee's government created the modern welfare state, including the National Health Service, Britain's most cherished institution after the royal family.

Starmer's "change" agenda is not so radical this time around and promises cautious management of the country's economy, as part of a long-term growth plan that includes nursing battered public services back to health.

With an air of inevitability about a Labour win, Starmer and his colleagues are raising expectations of a turnaround in Britain's flagging fortunes.

Economists say anaemic growth should be addressed. Pro-Europeans want Brexit reversed. Everyone wants an end to the sustained squeeze on their finances over the last decade and a half that has tipped more people into poverty.

Others want a return of political integrity and stability after a chaotic period of five prime ministers, a succession of scandals and Tory infighting between centrists and right-wingers that shows no sign of abating.

Starmer -- the working-class son of a tool maker and a nurse -- has none of the political charisma or popularity of former leader Blair, who presided over that last Labour victory in 2005.

But the former human rights lawyer and chief public prosecutor stands to gain from a country fed up with the Tories, and a feeling of national decline.

Biden expresses concerns speak to lawmakers to reassure them about his fitness as the party's standard-bearer after his disastrous debate last week against Trump.

Biden spoke to Representative Hakeem Jeffries, the minority leader in the House of Representatives, on Tuesday, and Senator Chuck Schumer, the majority leader in the Senate, yesterday, a White House official said.

Some supporters have expressed growing doubts about the 81-year-old's candidacy after last week's televised showdown with Donald Trump, when Biden stumbled over his words and lost his train of thought -- exacerbating fears about his age.

Congressman Lloyd Doggett became the first Democratic lawmaker to publicly call on Biden to make way for another candidate, saying he was hopeful the president would "make the painful and difficult decision to withdraw."

Nancy Pelosi, a Democratic Party heavyweight and former speaker of the House, said it was "legitimate" to ask whether Biden's debate disaster was indicative of a deeper problem rather than a one-off.

Biden has not given a live interview since the debacle, but will be interviewed by ABC on Friday with the first clips released later that day.

On Tuesday, he blamed exhaustion from international travel for his debate flop.

Speaking at a fundraiser, Biden said he "wasn't very smart" for "traveling around the world a couple times... shortly before the debate."

"I didn't listen to my staff," he said. "And then I almost fell asleep on stage."

Biden traveled to France from June 5 to 9 to commemorate the 1944 Allied landings, headed back to the United States, and then flew to Italy for a G7 summit followed immediately by a visit to California.

He then returned home and went to a presidential retreat for several days of rest and preparation for the debate.

House Democrat Jim Clyburn - a kingmaker of sorts within the Democratic Party and who was instrumental in Biden's 2020 win - told CNN yesterday that the party should hold a "mini-primary" if Biden steps aside, the first senior party member to talk publicly about how, exactly, replacing Biden as a candidate would work.

Clyburn, who said on Tuesday that he would back Vice President Kamala Harris as the presidential candidate if Biden were to depart.

Another bad precedent in public service

Loosening service rules, and the grip of accountability, raises fresh concerns

In another questionable move with the potential to exacerbate corruption, the government seems set to allow public servants to engage in stock market trading, reversing a decades-old prohibition. According to a report, the law ministry has positively vetted an amendment to the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1979 forwarded by the public administration ministry. If or once approved, employees will be able to legally buy or sell primary shares and bonds of registered companies. This is one of the several changes billed as necessary for a "modern and time-befitting" code of conduct. But given past experiences, we must say this is the wrong way to go about it as allowing officials to trade stocks may open a Pandora's box of unethical practices.

We don't need to go that far back to understand why. Matiur Rahman, a top NBR official now under investigation for corruption, allegedly made a fortune through stock market investments, using insider information, which is illegal. He is not alone in such pursuits. Many government employees, despite current prohibitions, are believed to be engaged in stock trading. Many have already demonstrated their willingness to exploit their positions for personal gain. Against this backdrop, legalising stock trading could widen the scope for corruption. The speculative nature of stock markets means that losses are inevitable, and when faced with losses, employees might be tempted to recoup them through illegal means.

The proposed amendment, therefore, will further weaken, rather than fortify, the ethical framework governing public officials. Unfortunately, the public administration ministry seems to be going in the opposite direction. In another editorial not long ago, we commented on its proposal to relax another provision in the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules requiring officials to submit wealth statements every five years, and how the removal of such an important layer of scrutiny could encourage dishonest officials to commit crimes with little fear of detection. Over the years, we have seen how such anti-graft rules and regulations have been relaxed, sometimes even lightening penalties for proven corruption.

As we write this, news has emerged of another top official, a former additional IGP, and his wife who illegally amassed wealth worth Tk 30.35 crore while concealing information of wealth worth Tk 36.91 crore—adding to the recent disclosures of scams involving former and current security and revenue officials. The list will only grow, whether it comes to light or not, unless we tighten relevant rules, enhance existing oversight mechanisms, and enforce stricter penalties for violations. Government employees, because of the power they exercise, must be held to the highest standards of conduct. We, therefore, urge the public administration ministry and other authorities to refrain from further relaxing service rules.

Sad plight of BSMMU specialised hospital

Govt must ensure unimpeded operation of health facilities

When it comes to public healthcare in a poor country like Bangladesh, any wastage of resources and money hits particularly hard as it deprives millions of low-cost medical care. This is why it is hard to accept what has been happening at the Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University's (BSMMU) super-specialised hospital.

Inaugurated in September 2022—with world-class facilities capable of providing stem cell therapy, gene therapy and robotic operations, and a capacity to treat 5,000 patients a day—the hospital now receives less than 500 patients. This is due to shortage of doctors, technicians and support staff, and the corruption involved in their recruitment. We have commented on it before, and sadly, the situation has not changed much even in a year. What's more disheartening is that 90 percent of the medical equipment bought from South Korea with $33 million remains unused because of the manpower shortage. The warranty period of some of the machines is nearing expiration, requiring additional maintenance cost. Add to that the burden on the public to repay the Tk 1,047 crore loan that the government had taken from South Korea to build this state-of-the-art hospital.

In short, far from providing world-class, low-cost health service as advertised, it's turning into a white elephant. A country where out-of-pocket health expenditure is among the highest in the world, and where approximately 800,000 people travel to foreign countries for medical treatment, this super-specialised facility could have been a beacon of hope. That hope has turned into despair because of systemic negligence and corruption, with visiting patients not getting to see doctors on time or having simple diagnostic tests done there. They even have to pay almost the same doctor fees as in private hospitals.

This is not the first time that public trust in the health sector has been betrayed. Thanks to the problems mentioned above, we have often seen how well-intentioned projects like this one turned into a debacle in their operation phase. It seems the projects are valued more for the money that can be spent rather than the return on investment, or the benefits owed to the public. How else can the purchase of medical equipment without even recruiting technicians to operate them be justified? We urge the higher authorities to critically look into the case of BSMMU's super-specialised hospital and make it fully operational. Longstanding issues in public procurement and recruitment that are also plaguing other health-sector projects must be resolved too.

Coasting on the 'highway to climate hell'

Dr Quamrul Haider
is professor emeritus at Fordham University in New York, USA.

QUAMRUL HAIDER

According to Copernicus, the European Union's climate monitoring service, average global temperatures reached record highs for 12 consecutive months since June, 2023. The Director of Copernicus warned that unless planet-warming pollution caused by greenhouse gases is slashed, "This string of hottest months will be remembered as comparatively cold." The worse is yet to come, he said. Indeed, we are pummelled by the second round of blistering heatwaves across the globe that is threatening to leap to a whole new level.

This "shocking but not surprising news" has alarmed António Guterres, Secretary General of the United Nations, to the extent that in a bare-knuckled speech in New York timed for the World Environment Day (June 5), he compared humans to meteors that wiped out the dinosaurs. Moreover, he called the fossil fuel conglomerates the "godfathers of climate chaos."

In response to Guterres' fiery speech about the future of our planet, US congressman John Curtis, a Republican from Utah, sarcastically quipped, "I'd be curious to ask him how he got to work in the morning. How he gets around when he flies, because as far as I know, there aren't any electric planes." Then again, how does Mr Curtis commute from Salt Lake City to Washington DC? Certainly not by a stagecoach, bicycle, or walking!

> Part of what makes Earth "just right" is the interplay between carbon dioxide, water vapor and the planet's energy balance. If there is too much carbon dioxide and water vapor in the atmosphere, global warming will accelerate and energy imbalance will increase, causing more ocean evaporation and baking out of carbon dioxide from rocks and oceans.

As a self-proclaimed "better steward" of climate change and founder of the Conservative Climate Caucus in the US House of Representatives, Curtis thinks "false narratives" that equate fossil fuels with greenhouse gas emissions are duplicitous. He speaks for approximately 75 percent of Republicans who hold that the economy should be given priority, even at the risk of ignoring climate change.

'We need an exit ramp off the highway to climate hell,' said UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres during a World Environment Day speech. PHOTO: AFP

That is why the fossil fuel industry loves the Republicans and their like-minded hucksters worldwide so much that they donate millions of dollars to them for the sole purpose of rolling back environmental regulations.

Despite what climate change deniers believe, concentration of planet-warming carbon dioxide in the atmosphere is surging "faster than ever" to a level not seen for millions of years, the administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said in a statement earlier this month. In May, the concentration hit an all-time high of nearly 427 parts per million.

A key measure of global warming is the difference between the amount of solar energy absorbed by the planet and the amount of thermal infrared radiation Earth emits back into space. A positive energy imbalance means the Earth is gaining energy, causing the planet to heat up. Due to greenhouse effect, this imbalance has doubled in the past 20 years, raising concerns about the large amount of heat the oceans are absorbing.

Presumably, that is why Guterres also said: "We need an exit ramp off the highway to climate hell." His reference to hell may have been metaphoric, though our closest neighbour and the brightest planet in the solar system, Venus, often called Earth's evil twin because it shares similarities with our planet in size, composition and gravity, became hellish billions of years ago.

How did Venus, once a pleasant planet, become an inferno? Without going into details, Venus' thick envelope of carbon dioxide, roughly 200,000 times the amount in Earth's atmosphere, gave rise to runaway greenhouse effect, a climatic phenomenon where the greenhouse effect became so intense that it spun out of control, resulting in unrestrainable and escalating increases in the planet's surface temperature. Today, the average surface temperature of Venus is 465 degrees Celsius, higher than that of a self-cleaning oven, and the atmospheric pressure is 90 times greater than on Earth.

Is it possible for the Earth to turn into a hothouse planet like Venus? Yes, it is almost certain that the Earth will become Venus-like in about two billion years, as the Sun increases in luminosity.

What is the likelihood of triggering a runaway greenhouse effect ourselves? That is a distinct possibility if we burn the entire "proven" reserve of fossil fuels, including shale oil and tar sands. The amount of carbon dioxide that will be released in the process could be enough to push the planet over the tipping points, which are critical thresholds that, if exceeded, will trigger devastating and irreversible changes in the surface temperature. This is a precursor to the onset of runaway greenhouse effect.

Part of what makes Earth "just right" is the interplay between carbon dioxide, water vapor and the planet's energy balance. If there is too much carbon dioxide and water vapor in the atmosphere, global warming will accelerate and energy imbalance will increase, causing more ocean evaporation and baking out of carbon dioxide from rocks and oceans. This added water vapor and carbon dioxide will intensify the greenhouse effect, driving temperatures a little higher. The higher temperatures will induce a positive feedback loop, intensifying the greenhouse effect even further. This self-sustaining process of intensification, most efficient in tropical ocean regions because large amounts of water vapor are pumped upwards by convective storms high in the atmosphere that, in turn, traps heat so effectively, will eventually snare the Earth into a vicious cycle of runaway greenhouse effect.

Against the ambivalence of China, Russia, the United States, and other countries equally committed to their fossil fuel industries, are we really coasting on Guterres' "highway to climate hell?" In a paper published last year in the journal Astronomy, scientists at the University of Geneva and France's CNRS laboratories in Paris and Bordeaux suggested that because of escalated global temperatures and the evaporation of water from seas and oceans, Earth could become an "uninhabitable hell" similar to Venus in just a few centuries, or even sooner.

Arguably, the general trend of catastrophic climate change we are witnessing currently is a bad omen for runaway greenhouse effect. Therefore, combating this threat to preserve Earth's climate stability and avert cataclysmic consequences requires urgent and collective efforts to stop the rapacious extraction and consumption of fossil fuels without further delay. However, world leaders and business magnates with stakes in the fossil fuel industry seem intent on continuing to gain morbidly vast wealth at the expense of every human and other creatures on our planet. Meanwhile, the average temperature will continue to rise, and millions of people will die as a result.

Finally, we cannot give our children and grandchildren the same number of years we had because we are all guilty to one extent or another for speeding on the "highway to climate hell." We are letting our jewel of a home be ruined by greed, stupidity and indifference. The Earth will still be here for a long, long time, spinning as a dead ball of rock.

What is wrong with business law education in Bangladesh?

AZHAR UDDIN BHUIYAN

Imagine a business professional who does not know the laws that govern their industry in the country they operate in. How can they make smart decisions, avoid legal troubles, or lead their company effectively? The truth is, they can't. This is why business law education is so crucial. Yet, in Bangladesh, the business education system is falling short. Our business schools are not preparing students to handle the legal challenges they will face in their careers.

So, what is wrong with business law education in Bangladesh? Firstly, there's the curriculum. Business law courses in Bangladesh heavily rely on Indian textbooks about Indian laws. Sounds odd, right? It is. Because why would Bangladeshi business schools teach Indian laws? These books focus on Indian laws, which are not relevant to Bangladeshi students. Imagine learning about laws you will never use in your career. It is like training for a cricket match with football equipment. When these students enter the workforce, they struggle with compliance issues because they have not learned the laws that apply in Bangladesh, and they are not taught how to freshly learn the laws that apply to themselves. While it is true that there is lack of good books on business law in Bangladesh, teaching Indian textbooks based on Indian laws cannot be a solution.

Secondly, who are the people teaching these courses? Surprisingly, it is not law academics. Instead, business academics, who may know a lot about business but not as much about law, are teaching these courses. This gap means students miss out on vital legal knowledge and updates that could be crucial for their careers. Because in the commercial justice sector, regulations are updated, or new regulations are introduced almost every year. Moreover, in many business schools, teaching business law is viewed as a less desirable assignment, akin to a "punishment posting" for full-time faculty members in business schools. This negative perception leads to a lack of enthusiasm and investment in delivering up-to-date, engaging, and practical education.

Thirdly, we are missing the point of teaching business law as a core course of the business curriculum in Bangladesh. Currently, business law courses are too theoretical and contentious. They focus on disputes and litigation rather than practical, everyday business transactions and compliance. Instead of learning how to avoid legal pitfalls, students are taught how to fight them in court. Shouldn't we be preparing them to avoid these problems in the first place? Moreover, there is a lack of practical training. Students do not engage in simulation exercises or real-world scenarios. Business students need similar practical exposure to understand how to apply legal principles in real-world situations.

Now, can we fix this? If yes, then how? We need a major overhaul of how business law is taught in business schools. The pedagogy for business law in business schools must be significantly different from that of law schools because these are two different ballgames.

The business law curriculum in business schools should be based on laws relevant to Bangladesh. This way, students learn what they will need in their careers. Hiring law academics to teach business law should be the way to go as they are the people who know it best. They can provide accurate, up-to-date information and practical insights. Shifting from purely theoretical teaching to include practical exercises is crucial as well. Simulations, case studies, and real-world scenarios can help students understand how to apply what they learn.

And why does this matter? Think about the impact a heightened awareness of the legal doctrine can have on the business environment in Bangladesh. Well-informed business leaders can drive compliance and ethical practices. This leads to a more stable and robust corporate sector. Wouldn't you prefer to work in a business environment where leaders understand the laws and navigate them confidently? By revamping business law education, we are not just improving individual careers, we are strengthening the entire business landscape in Bangladesh. Informed leaders can avoid costly legal mistakes, foster ethical practices, and ensure compliance. This contributes to the country's economic growth and stability. Isn't that what we all want?

Revamping business law education is more than just an academic exercise; it is a strategic move for the future of Bangladesh's corporate world. Let's equip our future leaders with the right legal knowledge and skills. Let's prepare them to lead with integrity and legal acumen.

The illusion of inclusion

Empty policies and promises for Bangladesh's hijra community based in New York, is interested in how religion and politics shape art in South Asia.

Sara Rashid,

SARA RASHID

In 2013, Bangladesh granted the hijra community "third gender" status, which constitutionally embedded their rights and safety, and started the process of opening economic opportunities to them. However, other than an official gender recognition, it did little to change the hijra community's historically tragic and exploited dire reality.

The acknowledgement came severely underfunded, without any policy changes, and had no impact on the social and cultural transformation needed to incorporate the historically marginalised hijra community into Bangladeshi society. In Bangla, hijras are referred to as jouno o lingo protibondhi, meaning "a person with sexual and gender disabilities," and this term has further ostracised the community based on their perceived sexual, physical, and gender shortcomings. Although Bangladesh has made legal changes on paper that are considered as markers of progress in a Western context, little has been done to improve the lives of the hijra community from a social and economic perspective.

The hijra community is the oldest transgender group in the world, and their fight for equality precedes the formation and subsequent split of the South Asian countries they inhabit. But this was not always the case. Some hijra communities were and are considered to be members of a holy caste of people, whose presumed mythical powers and physical traits led to their reverence and indispensability within the Mughal Empire.

The policing and criminalising of hijra communities stigmatised and alienated them across the Indian subcontinent, undercurrents of which continue to be found in South Asian countries today, including Bangladesh.

However, the British colonial powers' quest to civilise Indian society, and their ideas of morality and traditional gender norms were in direct conflict with the existence of the hijra community. They viewed this group with disgust and frustration due to their inability to understand and place them into rigid gender categories, causing them to implement rulings that led to the community's rapid marginalisation. This is not to claim the group did not previously face discrimination or violence, but that British colonial rule hastened and exacerbated the socio-economic, cultural and political decline of the community.

The policing and criminalising of hijra communities stigmatised and alienated them across the Indian subcontinent, undercurrents of which continue to be found in South Asian countries today, including Bangladesh. In the last decade, Bangladesh's remarkable and unexpected economic success has outpaced all its peers. As the world watches, Bangladesh's pressure to perform continues to increase. This pressure has often led to the implementation of ineffective, hasty and incomplete policies, designed mainly to appease and cater to Western ideas of growth and advancement.

Bangladesh's recognition of the hijra community as "third gender" is one such performative policy. Since its implementation in 2013, the hijra community has been strongly persuaded, and often compelled, to identify as third gender in all official documents for data collection. From the perspective of the hijra community, this push for self-identification came with a hope to reap supposed benefits tailored to them; however, shortcomings of the policy were manifold and further worsened their circumstances. The complexities surrounding the rights and recognition of the hijra community in Bangladesh highlight a tragic paradox as they navigate a socio-cultural and religious landscape that struggles to accommodate their existence beyond the traditional binary structures of gender.

Bangladesh's hijra community is complex, unique and replete with specific cultural and social features that make it difficult to translate and categorise the group's identity into a monolithic marker of gender or sexuality. The term "hijra" includes members of the intersex community, castrated men as well as transgender women, among others. In Bangladeshi society, the term hijra is used generously and with abandon; not only is it used for members of the intersex or transgender community, it is a rebuke, used to call out effeminate characteristics, shame a lack of toxic but expected machismo in men, and curb a non-conformity to traditional sexual and gender roles. Till date, the word hijra is interchangeable to a gaali, an insult and a curse.

Colonial powers have stripped it so extensively of its depth and nuance, that today the community not only continues to be incorrectly identified, but also has become a homogenous marker of how an individual should not operate in society. The word hijra is treated as a contagion, one that is almost impossible to recover from, and this fear has been used to administer the population's behaviour and restrict freedom of expression. This fear of social and moral corruption has consequently distanced people from the community, and in turn led to a conflation of the term hijra. This ostracisation and ignorance is bred by the government as well, who have identified the community as only members of the intersex group, conveniently erasing other members of the hijra community and the rituals, disciple-guru relationship and social processes that predate the rich history of the group, and the intricate ways in which they architected the social fabric of South Asia. Not only are they relegated to the margins of society, but the policies aimed at improving these lives fail to acknowledge the existence and needs of crucial members of this group, making these political strategies ineffective, performative and superficial.

Often, hijra are assigned "male" at birth, but may identify as female later in life and prefer to be recognised as hijra or third gender, as many consider themselves to transcend the traditional rigid and binary confines upheld within society. However, this preference is based on choice, and a mandated government policy strips them of a right to choose. Depriving the hijra community of their ability to choose their preferred gender orientation and coercing them into identifying as third gender not only violates their individual authority, but diametrically opposes Bangladesh's goal of bestowing more rights on the hijra community. For a country that is not able to ensure the safety of its citizens and has a history of violence against the hijra community, the motivation behind enforcing a third gender ultimately becomes more symbolic and performative than substantive.

On the other hand, members of the hijra community who volunteer to self-identify as third gender face several difficulties as even after 10 years of implementing the policy, most government forms lack a third gender option. In 2016, the Election Commission updated their voter list to include 50,320,362 men and 49,578,191 women; however, no information was provided on the number of hijra or third gender voters who had been registered on the updated list. Thus, the hijra were effectively barred from registering under the third gender status and were excluded from participating in the election process under their chosen gender identity. In these instances, the failure of the government and their lacklustre attempts at implementing these policies to improve the lives of the hijra community become glaringly evident.

In Bangladesh, discrimination and social exclusion are a hijra's birthright. The intolerance starts at home, and stems from the family's need to preserve deep-rooted ideas of patriarchy and gender and sexual norms. The hijra community's effeminate mannerisms and cross-dressing are considered to bring shame to a traditional Bangladeshi family, and often become the reason they are banished from their homes and schools. It is naive and negligent to assume the complex barriers that have precluded the hijra community from gaining access to education, a family structure, basic needs, and equal employment opportunities can be addressed by the simplistic recognition of the third gender, without any additional work to address the bone deep prejudices extant in society. Family members prefer to completely sever ties with their hijra relatives, and this inevitable displacement makes them even more vulnerable and susceptible to violence and alienation. The hijra community faces a similar predicament in school, where they are physically bullied and verbally abused, called maigya polas (effeminate boy), and sexually exploited by their teachers who accuse them of violating school principles and social decorum.

Bangladesh has displayed its incompetence and impassivity by doing exactly that and a prime example of the country's inadequate and vapid policies lies in the first school it opened in 2020 for the transgender community. The aim was to provide education and eventual employment opportunities to release the group from a life of sex work, dancing, singing, or begging. However, the curriculum included only religious teachings and vocational subjects. The decision to not include subjects like Bangla, Mathematics, English, and Science only sets up the hijra community for failure.

In the last few years, Bangladesh has opened a handful of Islamic curriculum schools catering solely to the hijra community. However, does a separate school for this community truly work toward integrating them into larger society or does it further disparage and relegate them to the margins? Does the existence of a separate institution for hijra not label them as incapable and unworthy of mingling with larger society? A structurally inbred segregation inadvertently reinforces existing social biases and exacerbates the prejudices against the hijra community by alienating them from the mainstream education system. To effectively create space and equal opportunities for this community, the government needs to firmly enact anti-discrimination policies, build an inclusive curriculum and educate the masses to ensure the inclusion of hijra in mainstream institutions, and provide legal consequences for discrimination against the group.

Discrimination across the education and economic spaces inevitably bleed out to all extremities of the hijra community's existence, including their access to healthcare. Data shows that the community experiences extreme discrimination within the medical space, and impediments to accessing healthcare include harassment from hospital authority, inability to disclose conditions like STDs for fear of abuse, public derision, and the absence of medical infrastructure for the third gender. Additionally, although 80 percent of the hijra community sought assistance from government healthcare facilities, the overall success rate in achieving healthcare services was less than 50 percent. Regardless of gender identification, there have been no changes in the provision of healthcare services for the hijra community.

Due to their lack of access to the formal workforce, the group often earn their livelihoods through prostitution, which is legal in Bangladesh. However, Section 377 of the Penal Code makes homosexuality, and possibly gender nonconformity, illegal. And law enforcement agencies are given the liberty to arrest those suspected of committing a "cognisable offense." There are no set parameters for what is considered to be an offense of this nature, and an inordinate amount of power is placed in the hands of the law enforcement, who can make arrests based on subjective legal interpretations. For a system rampant with corruption, Section 377 provides the country's law enforcement with easy opportunities to perpetuate the harassment and extortion of the hijra community. The homophobic legacy of British colonialism continues to paralyse marginalised groups, and despite numerous opportunities to repeal the laws, the Bangladeshi government refuses to break away from its inherited shackles to provide equal protection and rights to all its citizens.

In addition to the socio-economic and casteist rhetoric surrounding the public marginalisation of the hijra community, a discourse on disability based on their putative genital status has emerged since their legal recognition as third sex and continues to perpetuate their discrimination. Labelling the hijra community as genetically disabled is baseless and confusing for the state and wider public. The hijra community themselves question being labelled as disabled, when they do not suffer from any physical, mental or sexual impediments. The government's decision to retain the term is unclear and ambiguous, as it is rhetoric around disability that has led to the group's marginalisation. Legal and state negligence toward the hijra community and a lack of motivation to bring grassroots change for the group is evident in policy implementation.

The hijra community are a systemically and constitutionally persecuted group, and the consistent attacks on them have prevented them from enjoying basic human rights. The intricacy with which these social structures are entangled require a comprehensive approach to solving the issue and a desultory legal recognition without social inclusion tools, autonomy and security, and a rights-based approach will continue to jeopardise the lives and safety of hijra people. However, this cannot be achieved without departing from the government's tokenistic approach toward them. As of now, neither the legal recognition nor the cultural understanding of the "other" has led to a communal acceptance of the group. In contrast, the hijra is perceived to be in a ridiculed state of liminality and are reduced only to their genital deficiencies. Ultimately, despite the intentions behind these policy changes, what has come to the forefront through the ostracisation and consistent conflation of this group is Bangladesh's desperate and sycophantic attempt at gaining the attention of "modern" and "liberal" hegemonies and being deemed as an upholder of neocolonial markers of progress as a means to achieve political clout.

BOOK REVIEW: FICTION

A wound in our experience

Review of Saikat Majumdar's 'The Remains of the Body' (Penguin Random House, India, 2024)

Many readers would identify the problems of the modern-day system in Sunetra's words when she observes how the not-so-academically-bright ones made it to the top and she, the best student of her class, was merely a highly paid lab assistant. And Kaustav, another top student in his discipline was barely making ends meet despite being affiliated with the best universities.

SOHANA MANZOOR

"An exceptional novel that makes gender disappear to build unconventional love and friendship"

Ruth Vanita

Saikat Majumdar's latest novel, The Remains of the Body, is a deeply visceral and textured exploration of loss, desire, and identity. To an unsuspecting reader, the novel might start out as a love triangle rising out of marital discord, or betrayal of old friendships. The Remains of the Body, however, delves deeper into examining various forms of relationships reflecting the complex human psychology in an intricate and ever-changing world.

Set in Toronto and La Jolla, the storyline constantly moves not just between places, but more between times. The story is narrated from the perspective of Kaustav, who is a post-doc fellow based in Toronto. He is a bachelor, but it is hinted that he had had romantic relations with women throughout his life. The novel begins in the backyard pool of Avik's spacious home in La Jolla, California. A cautious reader might find it symbolic because human life begins in water—in the womb of one's mother. And then all three major characters, Kaustav, Avik, and Sunetra are seen playing in it. The complexity of their relationship is introduced right there as they thrash about the pool aimlessly, each revealing in different ways the dysfunctionality of their seemingly successful lives. Kaustav's position is perhaps the most vulnerable as he is caught between his love for both his childhood buddy Avik and his wife Sunetra.

Avik is a professional whom his childhood friend Kaustav describes as a big baby who never grew up. Their relationship goes far back into the past when they were mere boys and shared intimate moments and secrets. As adults, they are still forever attached, even though their relationship is dotted with occasional jealousy and doubt. Hence, Kaustav and Sunetra can make fun of Avik and his successful friends with houses in suburbs, who seem mad about "goat curry for dinner and sausages for breakfast and their wobbly tummies" and laugh over "sad jokes and endlessly recycled memories from their engineering college hostel days."

Many readers would identify the problems of the modern-day system in Sunetra's words when she observes how the not-so-academically-bright ones made it to the top and she, the best student of her class, was merely a highly paid lab assistant. And Kaustav, another top student in his discipline was barely making ends meet despite being affiliated with the best universities. When Kaustav accuses Avik of hindering Sunetra from pursuing her dreams in academia and joining instead a research-intensive biopharmaceutical company, he feels a "kick in his groin," as the latter retorts that Sunetra and Kaustav are equally impractical, and that the world does not run on theories. Here, the readers suddenly have the lens being reversed—Kaustav and Avik, the old friends, had been looking at each other through the same lens and shaking their heads and calling each other immature.

Seemingly caught between the two men in her life, Sunetra shows a strength that is characteristic of women thwarted from attaining their dreams. Bright as she is, she is quick to realise that Kaustav and her adulterous adventures were merely mistaken acts. For Kaustav, at least, it turns out to be the means to reach out to an unattainable body. Sunetra is quick to retreat because she cannot afford to make another mistake. In some ways, she may remind one of Garima Basu, a fascinating New Woman from The Firebird, Majumdar's second novel, who pursued her dream of stage-acting in spite of being criticised both at home and outside. Sunetra's plight and decision to finally pursue her unfulfilled dream is not altogether unusual in a world where marriages often end in divorce because the highly qualified wife refuses to be quelled by the dictatorial husband. Her struggles also touch on an important segment of women's problems in a patriarchal world where men and women are forever set across from each other simply because of power structures.

The Remains of the Body is a very short novel, barely 172 pages. But a sensitive reader would find it fascinating, not necessarily for the storyline, but for the portrayal of a world that is both vibrant and realistic. Anyone frequenting the diasporic world and familiar with the tension between academia and the corporate world would recognise the scenes depicted in this slim volume. One will also find remnants of loss, pain, and love that keep us alive. In his "Acknowledgements", the author writes: "Sometimes we write because there is a wound in our experience of life about which we can do nothing. Writing then becomes a cry of both pain and war." The words are a reminder that life is a constant battle and there are many wounds. A wound-free life might be happier, but the wounds give meaning to our lives because each one of them has a story.

In a recent interview with Platform Magazine, Majumdar observes, "I think this book ends up showing that what we call queer is actually a pervasive reality, and the heteronormative ideal is just that—an ideal that is forced due to the needs of the state and the market." In some crucial ways, these words capture the spirit of our world. The characters with a Dostoevskian analytic turn of mind often make ruthless assessments of the selves, and thus are a constant reminder that there are so many contradictions and conflicts in the modern world that the word "normal" has lost its traditional meaning, as have many others.

FOR THE CURIOUS WRITER

Sitting in the discomfort

During the drafting stage, consider letting your first (or even second) draft simmer a bit. Return to it after a while–you decide how long a 'while' lasts–and let your writing simultaneously impress and horrify you. Give yourself a pat on the back for having a draft and snort in self-deprecating derision because the draft needs work. As for the time you spend away from your desk? Perfect for doing tasks that let your mind wander–cleaning comes to mind or even trying to keep a plant alive.

BOOK REVIEW: POETRY

Speaking up for the intellectual resurgence in non-cosmopolitan Bengal

Review of Bibhas Roy Chowdhury's 'Poem Continuous: Reincarnated Expressions' (Hawakal, 2024), translated by Kiriti Sengupta

MALASHRI LAL

"My reader, I dip into the water just for you."

Bibhas Roy Chowdhury

How does a poet capture a boatman singing words to the gentle wind, a child bewildered by war, and a woman identified with rain? Bibhas Roy Chowdhury is a legendary poet who is known for the strength and diversity of his Bengali poetry. The translator into English, Kiriti Sengupta, has achieved an immense feat in bringing 60 poems into a 10th anniversary edition. Roy Chowdhury writes a nuanced Bangla, often focusing on rural Bengal, haunted by memories of Partition, and remains a highly private person. Poem Continuous: Reincarnated Expressions is a fortuitous title as it gestures towards the challenging act of translation and the desirable creativity of a refined translator.

One can offer a specific example by commenting on the exquisite poem, "In the Monsoon", which begins with the lines, "The algae float in the song / of my tender age. / I wonder if the river / is nearing death." Bengal's dramatic kaal baishakhi and barsha defy any easy description—and here, the association with algae, which is a parasite, and water, which is an element associated with the final rites of ash immersion, are collocated to yield a magnificent spectrum. This short poem ends with a startling image: "In the song of my younger age / two blind come / across each other quite often", packing a cryptic coding of "blind" relations among people. Is the Monsoon downpour from heaven a witness to social interludes, the maya or illusion of action? Such a poem is open to multiple interpretations, and I present mine as an example of the complexity of Roy Chowdhury's writing and Kiriti's translation.

ILLUSTRATION: AMREETA LETHE

If water, earth, and fire are the core elements defining human existence—as in the poems "I can Leave, but Why", "Lunatic", "The Lighthouse", among others, do the poems take a philosophical stand in re-casting this eternal interdependence? Perhaps the answer is in the negative because Roy Chowdhury never repeats himself, nor does he preach. The book's "Epilogue" comprises a significant interview between the author and translator. Kiriti asks: "Your poems mostly deal with agony and emotions...Why is this agony an essential component of your poems?" Roy Chowdhury answers obliquely, "Let my poetry capture the journey of the refugee boy from extreme distress to where I stand now. I have let my life ply behind the metaphors.

Metaphors are the greatest challenge to translators, and several poems build upon a key phrase or word. "The Poetry of a Hibiscus Flower" is a striking example, and if one reflects upon the lines, "The hibiscus lives in solitude as expected. / Lost people do exist, more or less in a similar way", a plethora of cultural references will show up. Though a common flower, the hibiscus, called 'joba' in Bangla, is sacred to Maa Kali and offered in worship at the temple; Santhal women often wear it in their hair, and Jaba-Kusum is a popular cosmetic brand. These allusions float in the literary aura of the word. Roy Chowdhury astutely associates the hibiscus with a lost mother—perhaps pre-Partition Bengal—isolation, abandonment, yet hardy survival. Interestingly, the translator, Kiriti Sengupta, has independently written a poem, "Hibiscus", with the lyrical lines: "I'll bloom / like a hibiscus: / the blush will endorse / my bloodline" that I read in the Amethyst Review. My point is that metaphors are powerfully suggestive, and insightful poetry hints at a backstory through a key image and allows the reader to ponder over the consciousness it generates.

Argentina hope for MESSI BOOST

AGENCIES

Defending champions Argentina will hope for their star man and skipper Lionel Messi to be back for their crucial Copa America 2024 quarterfinal tie against Ecuador at the NRG Stadium in Houston on Friday morning.

Messi returned to training on Monday as they prepare to face Ecuador in a rematch from the 2021 Copa America quarterfinals, in which they breezed past Ecuador 3-0 and eventually lifted the trophy.

Messi had not trained since sustaining a groin/thigh injury during his side's 1-0 win against Chile on June 25. He sat out Argentina's 2-0 victory over Peru on Saturday.

The Argentine football federation said the 37-year-old did some kinesiology work before training and was with the rest of the group afterwards.

The Albiceleste topped Group A with a 100 percent record while Ecuador held Mexico to a 0-0 draw, finishing second in Group B.

Statistically speaking, the opening phase of this tournament was nearly flawless for Lionel Scaloni's men, who won their three encounters and did not concede.

All five of their goals scored in the opening phase came in the second half, and they have not fallen behind in a Copa America match since the 2019 semifinals (2-0 loss versus Brazil).

What augurs well for Argentina is the potential return of Messi in this game, even though coach Scaloni will be cautious about not overusing the little magician. But even without Messi, Argentina should have very little problem against Ecuador, a team against which the Albiceleste have dominated over the years.

Argentina have never lost to Ecuador at the Copa America while the World Cup holders have advanced beyond this stage on four successive occasions.

Argentina's pedigree in the competition will also make them hopeful of cruising to last four.

The Argentines have won eight consecutive matches across all competitions and have only conceded two goals over that stretch.

Their last three appearances in the quarterfinals of this tournament have been a breeze, with Argentina winning those encounters by a combined margin of 9-1.

Only once in this century have we seen them lose a quarterfinal fixture at this tournament, when they hosted this event in 2011 and were beaten on penalties by Uruguay (5-4).

Meanwhile, Ecuador are capable of pulling off an upset on their day but will have to outdo themselves to stand any chance against Scaloni's troops.

Despite being on the back foot for a good portion of their previous encounter, Ecuador did enough to hold off the Mexicans and claim a spot in the knockout phase on goal difference.

It is the second successive time that La Tri have qualified for the last eight of this tournament, while they have now made the quarterfinals in three of the previous four Copa Americas.

The Taskin scenario and its timing

SPORTS REPORTER

Before an important board meeting on Tuesday, which was set to shed light on how Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) assessed the just-concluded T20 World Cup performances of the national team, news broke that pacer Taskin Ahmed had missed the India game for having overslept.

A series of poor performances in World Cups is nothing new, and an explanation for the team's poor approach, especially in the Afghanistan game, should have been a top priority for the board. The timing of the news about Taskin was curious, as it took the limelight away from what was, in fact, a poor World Cup performance despite securing a place in the Super Eights.

What happens inside the team environment usually stays out of public knowledge, but this time the news about Taskin was leaked quite some time after the World Cup game in question.

Shakib Al Hasan, meanwhile, who usually keeps mum regarding anything inside the team's environment, had talked about Taskin missing the team bus on Tuesday evening before leaving for USA.

Thus, when BCB president Nazmul Hassan attended the press conference following the board meeting on Tuesday, it could be surmised that the board felt content with what the team achieved despite carrying 'new' players. In fact, after questions related to the team's performances came one after another, Hassan said they were not willing to be too critical.

Inevitably, the question of Taskin came up. The BCB chief remarked: "I also heard that he missed the team bus. Why he didn't come on time, until I ask him directly... but I feel this report should come from the concerned department."

Why the board has not yet discussed the team's disciplinary issues before sitting down for a meeting is anyone's guess. If one were to venture a guess, it would be that the board has not sought an explanation seriously enough.

Taskin himself acknowledged in yesterday's Facebook post that he had, in fact, overslept. But he felt there was a huge "outcry" over this particular event. It would have made sense had Taskin been issued any fines or punishment.

No development has come till now on the penalty Taskin will be handed, as the board is still awaiting the coach and team manager's report regarding the matter. Instead, the news of him having overslept became public knowledge and made the rounds on social media, crucially grabbing the spotlight.

Moreover, head coach Chandika Hathurusingha's report for the World Cup is due. Bangladesh's planning in the Afghanistan game lacked conviction that they were, in fact, going for a win. Instead of addressing what caused the bad performances, it appeared BCB was content to allow a story to fuel.

While the BCB president said there were things that cannot be discussed with the media, the focus had somehow shifted to Taskin, which may have been intended.

Crown-favourite Gauff on redemption run

REUTERS, London

Coco Gauff did not look at her imperious best under the roof on Wimbledon's Court One on Wednesday, but she was always in control of an error-strewn second-round 6-2, 6-1 victory over Romanian qualifier Anca Todoni.

The US Open champion slipped and fell twice on the slick court and muttered to herself during the one-hour, six-minute match against an opponent ranked 140 places below her.

Second seed Gauff, a crowd favourite at Wimbledon after announcing her arrival on the big stage with a fourth-round run as a 15-year-old five years ago, produced 16 unforced errors in the short match and managed to land only 43% of her first serves.

But her nervous opponent, at 19 six months Gauff's junior, hit 23 unforced errors and could not find her range against the fleet-footed American, who wrapped up the match with a drop shot that Todoni could only send wide.

Gauff, who suffered a humiliating first-round exit last year at the hands of compatriot Sofia Kenin, said she had learned from that disappointment and from her triumph at the US Open to manage expectations and emotions.

"Overall, I just learned about life a lot. What I do, I'm very passionate about but it's not ever that serious," she said.

"It's a game, it's sport. Sometimes the world can make you feel like there is so much pressure and expectation."

The draw has opened up for Gauff after the first-day withdrawals of Belarusians Aryna Sabalenka, the Australian Open champion, and former world No. 1 Victoria Azarenka. She will next play British qualifier Sonay Kartel or France's Clara Burel.

Stacked fixtures await cricketers

SPORTS REPORTER

Following the T20 World Cup, it seems Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) is waiting for their coaches and players to finish the ongoing break in order to start preparation for their next international assignment -- a two-match Test series against Pakistan, scheduled to be held in August.

Although Pakistan Cricket Board (PCB) is yet to confirm the itinerary of the series, which is also part of the ICC World Test Championship 2023-25 cycle, Bangladesh are expected to tour Pakistan for the first time since 2020.

According to chief selector Gazi Ashraf Hossain Lipu, they are planning for some practice matches during their camp for the Pakistan series in order to prepare themselves for red-ball cricket -- a format which they last played in March-April against Sri Lanka.

"The players are on a break now and after that, the schedule of the camp will be announced formally. There are some suggestions from our head coach. There are plans to play some warm-up matches," Ashraf told The Daily Star yesterday.

The BCB is currently running two camps -- High Performance (HP) unit in Rajshahi and Bangladesh Tigers in Chattogram -- simultaneously. Nearly 50 cricketers are preparing for two scheduled High Performance and A team tours in Australia and Pakistan, respectively.

According to camp officials, national players like Shadman Islam and Shahadat Hossain Dipu, who are part of the Bangladesh Tigers camp, are set to feature in both Australia and Pakistan tours before the Test series.

The first contingent of HP unit, which will play two four-day matches against Pakistan Shaheens between July 19 and 29, is expected to leave Dhaka for Australia on July 14. HP unit will also play a 50-over tri-series and a T20 series, featuring a different set of players.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh A will leave for Pakistan, with a few players from the HP unit joining the team from Australia, to play two four-day matches and three one-day matches on August 6.

"The A team will leave for Pakistan on August 6. During the tour of the A team, our national team will arrive in Pakistan. We are actually operating all three programmes at the same time," said national selector Hannan Sarkar, who also mentioned that the HP squad will be announced in two-three days.

ROAD TO EURO QUARTERS

Showdowns, young guns and own goals

AFP, Stuttgart

Euro 2024's quarterfinals kick off on Friday with a blockbuster match between hosts Germany and Spain as the tournament heads towards its decisive final week.

Big boys clash

Germany's clash with Spain in Stuttgart pits the Euros' two best performing sides against one another at least one round earlier than fans would have liked, due to an unbalanced knockout bracket which has four serious candidates for overall victory on one side.

The winner of Friday's tie will face either Portugal or France, both former European champions.

Meanwhile, England face Switzerland on Saturday after having scraped past Slovakia in the last 16 and find themselves in the last eight having played way below expectations in each of their four matches.

Big name flops

The Euros has brought together some of the best footballers on the planet but none of the biggest stars have shone so far as the big teams -- Spain and Germany apart -- have mostly been below-par.

Cristiano Ronaldo looks like he's gone one tournament too far while Kylian Mbappe has just a group-stage penalty to his name and is a long way from the phenomenal form which won him the golden boot at the last World Cup.

England pair Jude Bellingham and Harry Kane, respectively La Liga player of the year and the Bundesliga top scorer, have played way below expectations despite scoring all four of England's goals.

Young guns & ageing icons

Records have fallen in Germany at both ends of the age spectrum. Spain winger Lamine Yamal, 16, is dazzling having become the youngest player ever to feature at a European Championship. Should he strike in the quarters or beyond, he will become the youngest scorer in the tournament's history.

By contrast Croatia's Luka Modric set a new record for the oldest at 38 by netting against Italy and Portugal duo Ronaldo, 39, and Pepe, 41 (now the oldest-ever Euros player), could yet surpass the Real Madrid midfield maestro.

Own goals on fire

While the continent's star strikers have failed to fire, there have been nine own goals at this Euros and the record of 11 set at the last championships three years ago looks sure to be broken.

Prior to Euro 2020, there had just been 11 in the tournament's history.

The most comical came in Turkey's 3-0 thumping at the hands of Portugal, when Samet Akaydin unwittingly doubled the deficit by playing a sloppy back pass which ended with Zeki Celik and goalkeeper Altay Bayindir bundling into the net in a vain attempt to keep the ball out.

The majority, though, have come from dangerous crosses, like Riccardo Calafiori handing Spain a 1-0 win over Spain in one of the most-anticipated games of the group stage.

Spain's Robin Le Normand, Czech defender Robin Hranac and Austria's Maximilian Woeber all found their own net in similar fashion as attempted clearances to low crosses have gone wrong.

Underdogs shine

The plodding, static performances of France, Belgium, England and Portugal -- FIFA's four highest-ranked sides before the tournament -- have been offset by some brilliant underdog showings.

Despite being the lowest-ranked team, Georgia's run to the last 16 lit up the tournament, particularly their 2-0 victory over Euro 2016 winners Portugal.

Romania had won just one of their 16 games at the championships heading into Euro 2024 but topped a group featuring Belgium, Ukraine and Slovakia, before going down to the Netherlands in the last 16.

Turkey have however emerged as the tournament's true dark horses, booking a spot in the quarterfinals with a brilliant 2-1 win over fellow upstarts Austria on Tuesday.

Vincenzo Montella's Turkey and Georgia also played the best game of the group stage, a 3-1 win for the Turks in front of a pulsating crowd in Dortmund.

Over 50,000 stranded as flood hits new areas

STAR REPORT

The flood situation in the northern districts deteriorated yesterday due to heavy rainfall and the onrush of water from upstream.

Vast tracts of low-lying areas were inundated due to the rise in the water level of the Teesta, Brahmaputra, Dharla, and Dudhkumar rivers.

"Brahmaputra-Jamuna and the Ganges-Padma rivers are on a rising trend, which may continue in the next 72 hours," a bulletin from the Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre (FFWC) said yesterday.

In the next 24 hours, the water level at some points of the Jamuna River along Jamalpur, Gaibandha, Bogura, and Sirajganj districts may rise and cross the danger levels," it added.

The flood situation in the low-lying areas in Kurigram along the Brahmaputra River may deteriorate at the same time, the bulletin warned.

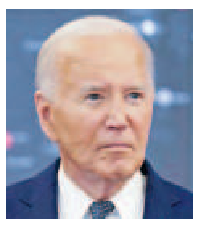
Biden expresses concerns over his candidacy to ally

Says NYT report

AGENCIES

US President Joe Biden has told an ally that he knows he may not be able to salvage his candidacy if he cannot convince the public in the coming days that he is up for the job after his debate performance last week, the New York Times reported yesterday.



After the report was published, White House spokesperson Andrew Bates wrote on social media: "This claim is absolutely false".

The Times quoted the ally as saying that Biden "knows if he has two more events like that, we're in a different place" by the end of the weekend. The report described the ally as "key" but did not name the person.

The headline of the report said that Biden told the ally he is weighing whether to continue in the race. The text of the report did not include any reference to those comments.

Anti-quota demos rage on across the country

Students block several highways; SC to hear appeal today

DU CORRESPONDENT

University students yesterday stepped up their protest demanding the reinstatement of the government's 2018 circular that abolished the quota system in public service.

Students of Dhaka University, Jahangirnagar University, Jagannath University, Chittagong University, and Bangladesh Agricultural University and more took part in the protest for third consecutive day. They brought out processions, blocked roads and highways, and held sit-ins.

Meanwhile, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court is scheduled to hold a hearing on the government's appeal challenging the High Court verdict that declared the 2018 circular illegal.

On June 5 this year, the HC declared the verdict, consequently restoring the 30 percent quota system for the children of freedom fighters in government jobs. It did so after disposing of a 2021 writ petition that challenged the legality of the quota abolishment.

The SC is scheduled to hold a hearing on the government's appeal challenging the HC verdict that declared its 2018 circular, which abolished the quota system for government jobs, illegal.

The government had issued the circular in the wake of student protests for quota reforms.

No provision for staying conviction if appeal pending

HC says in full verdict

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court has observed that there is no provision for staying the conviction of an individual in a case while an appeal against it remains pending.

A conviction can either be scrapped, affirmed or modified upon disposing of the appeal, said an HC bench in the full text released yesterday of a judgement.

The bench on March 18 delivered the verdict scrapping the Labour Appellate Tribunal's stay order on the conviction and sentence of Grameen Telecom Chairman Prof Muhammad Yunus and directors Ashraful Hassan, Nurjahan Begum, and M Shahjahan and granted them bail in a case filed under the labour law.

The bench of Justice Md Nazrul Islam Talukder and Justice Kazi Ebadot Hossain, however, stayed their sentences and fines until disposal of the appeals filed by the Nobel laureate and three others, challenging the verdict of the Third Labour Court in

Gaza families seek shelter amid fresh Israeli strikes

Complain of water shortages, inflated prices for basic foodstuff; 28 more Palestinians killed

REUTERS, Gaza

Many Palestinians were seeking shelter yesterday after fleeing their homes in southern Gaza and complained of water shortages as Israel pressed on with its military offensive in the densely populated enclave.

Israeli forces carried out new military strikes in the southern city of Rafah amid fierce fighting with Hamas fighters overnight, residents said. At least 12 people were killed in new strikes in central and northern Gaza.

- » Hamas fighters shell Israeli tanks in west of Rafah
- » Five Palestinians killed in Israeli raids in West Bank
- » Gaza death toll rises to 37,953

Israel's leaders have said they are winding down the phase of intense fighting against Hamas, and will soon shift to more targeted operations in the nearly nine-month-old offensive in Gaza.

But fighting continued overnight in two locations at the centre of Rafah, where tanks have seized several districts and advanced further west and north of the city in recent days, and concerns about the plight of hundreds of thousands of displaced people are growing.

The Israeli military said its forces had continued targeted, intelligence-based operations in Rafah, dismantled several sites and killed Hamas members.

Hamas' armed wing said it had shelled two Israeli tanks in a neighbourhood west of Rafah and fired mortar bombs at Israeli forces attacking Shejaia, an eastern suburb of Gaza City in the centre of the enclave.

The armed wing of Islamic Jihad, an allied group, said it had shelled an Israeli military bulldozer in Rafah, and fired on Israeli army positions east of Shejaia.

In Maghazi refugee camp in central Gaza, two Israeli airstrikes killed five Palestinians, health officials said. In Shejaia an airstrike killed four and wounded 17, medics said.

BNP leader stabbed on way to rally

STAR REPORT

Acting convener of Natore BNP Shahidul Islam Bachchu was stabbed allegedly by ruling Awami League men in front of the BNP office at Alaipur yesterday morning while he was going to attend a rally near the office.

The attackers also beat up and injured five other leaders in different areas of the district town on their way to the event organised by the district BNP as part of its central programme demanding unconditional release of party Chairperson Khaleda Zia and her treatment abroad.

Shahidul came under attack near the party office around 9:45am. Mashiur Ferdous Hitlu, general secretary of BNP ward-5, who was with Shahidul, was also beaten up by the assailants, said Dewan Shahin, joint convener of the district BNP.

He alleged that AL activists Rashidul Islam Koyel, Golam Kibria Selim, and Amirul Islam Jony carried out the attack.

Shahidul was moved to Dhaka from Rajshahi Medical College Hospital in the afternoon as his condition was stated to be critical.

An equalizer from Daniel Munoz in first half stoppage time was enough to earn Colombia a share of the spoils after Raphinha had fired Brazil into the lead with a sublime 12th-minute free-kick at Levi's Stadium in Santa Clara, California.

The result means Colombia advance to the knockout rounds as winners of Group D, where they will face Group C runners-up Panama in Glendale, Arizona, on Saturday.

Scientists discover moss can grow on Mars

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Scientists have discovered that a type of desert moss found in Antarctica can survive the extreme conditions of Mars, making it a promising candidate for colonising the planet.

The moss, Syntrichia caninervis, was already known to be able to withstand drought conditions, but tests by researchers at the Chinese Academy of Sciences revealed that it can also tolerate temperatures as low as -196˚C and similar levels of gamma radiation to that found on the Martian surface.

"Our study shows that the environmental resilience of Syntrichia caninervis is superior to that of some of the highly stress-tolerant microorganisms and tardigrades," the researchers wrote.

"Syntrichia caninervis is a promising candidate pioneer plant for colonising extra-terrestrial environments, laying the foundation for building biologically sustainable human habitats beyond Earth."

Anti-quota protests swell across univs

For now, HC verdict not stayed; protesters vow tougher demos

STAR REPORT

Anti-quota protests intensified across the country yesterday as students of more universities joined in, and the demonstrators announced fresh programmes to press for scrapping of the quota system in government jobs.

Earlier in the day, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court decided to uphold until further orders the June 5 High Court verdict. The HC verdict reinstated the quota system after terming illegal a 2018 government circular that abolished it. The decision was announced around 10:00am.

Protesters said they will bring out processions on college and university campuses on Saturday and boycott classes and exams on Sunday, demanding the reinstatement of the government's 2018 circular.

University students in and around Dhaka were demonstrating against the HC verdict for the last several days.

As part of the demonstrations, they blocked key intersections in the capital and highways for several hours, causing sufferings to the commuters.

Nahid Islam, an organiser of the movement, said the mainstay of the country's constitution and spirit of the Liberation War is equality for all.

"The crisis over the quota system should be resolved keeping in mind the public opinion. But we are seeing the system is being reinstated, ignoring public opinion. We'll continue our movement until our demands are met," he said during a procession at Dhaka University.

Graft suspects getting promoted in civil service

Allege secretaries during meeting

BAHARAM KHAN and MD ABBAS

Secretaries at a meeting yesterday said some government officials facing allegations of corruption were getting promoted and posted to key positions at different ministries, divisions, and departments.

They observed that secretaries must take strict measures to ensure those officers are not considered for promotion in the future, according to sources present at the meeting held at the secretariat.

"We have enough laws and regulations to stop corruption, but these are not properly implemented, which is why corruption has become a burning issue," said one of the speakers.

"Officers who indulge in irregularities while providing public service need to be identified and held accountable," said a secretary.

A few corrupt officers are tainting the reputation of all government officials and they are the cause of criticism in the media, said another speaker.

$14b export data puzzle is unnerving

AHSAN HABIB

You can lie with data or illuminate the truth with data. And there's something in between -- half-truths.

A $14 billion correction in export figures by the central bank is necessary because it addresses one economic half-truth.

But half-truths are unnerving.

The data revision that came on Wednesday through a regular update on the balance of payments raises disturbing questions about the country's economic performance and the policy that revolved around it.

The shocking revelation has sent economists scrambling for answers, but there are more questions than answers as the authorities are almost silent.

What's clear is that the discrepancy in export figures again underscores the importance of accurate macroeconomic data. A lack of statistical accuracy can upend many indicators. The calculation of gross domestic product is one of them.

Such a big discrepancy is "unbelievable", said MK Mujeri, an economist and former director general of the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies.

Export and import data calculation is a simple task, but big mistakes such as this by officials raise questions over the authenticity of other components of the economy. "Entire GDP estimates should be revisited," said Mujeri.

NEWS ANALYSIS

It's time for serious stocktaking

ZINA TASREEN

Bangladesh Bank has opened a can of worms with its revision of the balance of payment data. There is no better way to put it.

It turns out that exports, too often billed as the shining light of the Bangladesh economy, were not as outstanding over the years as they were made out to be by the official government statistics.

As is standard practice, export data is recorded when the consignment is cleared by the customs for shipment.

But in Bangladesh, three different government bodies were recording the export data: the Export Promotion Bureau, the commerce ministry wing responsible for developing the nation's exports; the National Board of Revenue by way of customs; and the Bangladesh Bank, which logs in the actual proceeds from the shipments.

In theory, all three approaches should lead to more or less similar figures. In reality, the three yielded different numbers.

But, it was the Export Promotion Bureau's data, which showed the rosiest picture, that was published as the official export figures. Why did the EPB's methodology yield the highest number of the three? There were too many incidences of double or triple counting the same consignment.

Now, on the insistence of the International Monetary Fund, Bangladesh has decided to go with the customs data as the official export figure -- as it should have been the case always.

This correction has answered an

Beijing open to working with Delhi

Says Chinese envoy ahead of Hasina's China visit; Dhaka's proposal seeking budget support likely to be considered

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Chinese ambassador yesterday hinted that Beijing may consider Bangladesh's proposal seeking budget support that will ease pressure on the country's foreign reserves.

China is open to working with India for the Teesta restoration and management project, but it is Bangladesh which has to make the decision in this regard, Chinese Ambassador to Bangladesh Yao Wen told reporters at the Jatiya Press Club.

It is expected that during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's visit to China next week, multiple "cooperation documents" will be signed and the two countries will jointly announce major cooperation achievements, according to the ambassador.

Bangladesh sought around $5 billion from China in budget support in addition to loans for a number of mega projects, finance ministry officials said.

Regarding this, the ambassador said, "We too talk about these issues. We too have some new proposals from Bangladesh. I should say it is very new for both of us. Some initiative we never came across before.

"But, China, we are open. We are still on the discussion. That is my position that whatever China can do, it we will do as per the request from Bangladesh side. Let's see, hopefully we can make some breakthrough in this regard."

About Teesta project, he said "The Teesta river is within the territory of Bangladesh. So, it is your river. Any

Biden vows to stay 'to the end'

Rejects pressure to quit race

REUTERS, Washington

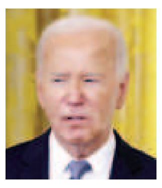
US President Joe Biden vowed to stay in the 2024 presidential race during calls with campaign staff and meetings with Democratic lawmakers and governors on Wednesday evening, as he sought to shake off calls for him to drop out after his shaky debate performance last week.



Biden dialed in to a call with worried members of his campaign team and told them he wasn't going anywhere, according to two sources familiar with the call.

"No one is pushing me out. I'm not leaving. I'm in this race to the end," Biden said in a separate email blast by his campaign, urging supporters to "pitch in a few bucks" to help defeat his Republican rival Donald Trump in the November 5 presidential election.

The president met virtually and in person with 24 Democratic governors and the mayor of Washington, DC, on Wednesday evening to reassure them he is up to the job of standard-bearer for the party after the faltering debate performance.

Only three of the governors - the leaders of New York, Minnesota and Maryland - met with reporters afterwards, vowing to stand with Biden after what they called an honest discussion about his bad performance in last week's debate.

He added, "We're not against the freedom fighters; rather, we have no objection to increasing the facilities for those who are real freedom fighters. But we want the quota system gone."

Their demands include the formation of a commission to reform the quota system and also to ensure vacant positions are filled with candidates selected on merit in the absence of quota candidates.

Also, they demand that individuals be allowed to use the quota system only once in their lifetime for any type of competitive public examinations, including university entrance tests.

THE SC SAYS

Yesterday morning, a six-member bench of the Supreme Court's Appellate Division, headed by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan, held a hearing on the government's petition for a stay on the HC verdict that termed its 2018 circular abolishing quotas illegal.

However, much to the dismay of the protesters expecting a stay, the apex court asked the government to submit a leave-to-appeal petition after the full text of the HC judgment is released.

The HC verdict came on June 5 this year, following a 2021 writ petition that challenged the legality of the quota abolishment.

Since then, students have taken to the streets demanding the reinstatement of the government circular.

PROTESTS ESCALATE

Once the news of the Appellate Division's decision spread, students of Dhaka University began gathering in front of the Central Library from 11:00am.

They brought out processions on different roads on the campus and around 12:20pm blocked the Shahbagh intersection, for the third consecutive day. They stayed there till 6:00pm.

Despite bouts of rain, the students stayed put, chanting slogans like "Bury the quota system", "No place for discriminations in my golden Bangla", "No more tears for the meritorious", and "Keep the country's talent in the country, abolish the quota system".

They also sang patriotic songs and recited poems.

Meanwhile, traffic came to a halt on the roads leading to Bangla Motors, Science Lab and Kakrail due to the blockade.

On the other hand, leaders and activists of Chhatra League, the pro-ruling party student body, took position at different dormitories, including Zahurul Huq Hall and Surja Sen Hall, to prevent students from joining the protests.

Asaduzzaman Farid, joint secretary of Zahurul Huq Hall BCL, said they were on alert to prevent the anti-quota demonstrations at the hall.

Sharjis Alam, a master's student of Zoology and one of the leaders of the anti-quota protesters, was allegedly forced to vacate the Amar Ekushey Hall of DU around 10:00pm.

He claimed that Chhatra League leaders in the dorm forced him to leave.

As the news spread, hundreds of students from different halls gathered in front of the dorm around 11:45pm and started chanting slogans.

Hall provost Prof Ishtiaq M Sayed was seen trying to calm the students.

Saddam Hossain, president of Amar Ekushey Hall unit of Chhatra League, said they did not force anyone to leave the dorm. "Who stays or not depends on the hall authority, not them."

Around 1:00pm, students of Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University blocked the Agargaon thoroughfare for an hour, said Ahad Ali, officer-in-charge of Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station.

Jagannath University students also blocked roads near their campus on Chittaranjan Avenue and Ray Saheb Bazar for over an hour and half since 12:00pm.

They too shouted anti-quota slogans such as "No place for discriminations in Bangabandhu's Bangla", "Rise again with the spirit of '18", "Let the meritorious be free!".

The blockade caused traffic congestion on both roads.

Helal Ahmed, one of the protesters, said, "We'll continue our movement until the quota system is abolished."

Students of Jahangirnagar University brought out a procession on campus and then blocked the Dhaka-Aricha highway around 12:20pm for almost an hour, leading to traffic jams.

AFM Sayeed, officer-in-charge of Ashulia Police Station, said though the blockade was lifted around 1:00pm, it took time for traffic to go back to normal.

Cumilla University students blocked the busy Dhaka-Chattogram highway, a commercial artery between the capital and the port city, in Beltali area of south sadar upazila for three hours from 12:30pm.

They lifted the blockade only after Deputy Commissioner Khandaker M Musfiqur Rahman and Superintendent of Police Abdul Mannan ensured that the protesters' message would be conveyed to the higher authorities.

After a procession on their campus, several thousand students of Rajshahi University braved the rain and blocked the Dhaka-Rajshahi highway for over two hours from around 10:00am. Slogans like "Let the weapon of 2018 roar again", "We want merit-based recruitment, no quotas except for the disabled" were chanted.

Hundreds of Chittagong University students blocked the Chattogram-Khagrachhari highway for around two hours from 11:45pm.

Fatema, a sociology student, said, "Because of the quotas, meritorious students are not being recognised. It's unacceptable that a talented student with high exam scores may not get a job while some others can, benefiting from the quota system."

The Barishal-Kuakata highway was also blocked by students of Barisal University for five hours.

QUOTA SYSTEM

The quota system has long been criticised as the reason for bureaucracy being devoid of merit in the long run.

While giving a lecture at Dhaka University in January 2018, the late Akbar Ali Khan, a former adviser to a caretaker government and former cabinet secretary, had said it was "the biggest problem in the cadre service".

He said, "No other country in the world has such a bizarre system."

A study conducted by Akbar Ali Khan and Kazi Rakibuddin Ahmad, also a former secretary and former chief election commissioner, recommended reducing the number of quotas.

In the report, which they submitted to the Public Service Commission in 2008, they termed the system "unjust".

In 2018, the government issued the circular, abolishing the quota system, in the wake of massive student protests for reforms.

Until then, about 56 percent of government jobs had been reserved for candidates from various quotas. Of this, 30 percent were for the children and grandchildren of freedom fighters; 10 percent for women; 10 for people from underdeveloped districts; five for members of indigenous communities, and one percent for persons with physical disabilities.

The quota system was introduced through an executive order in 1972 and had been amended several times since.

From 1972 to 1976, 20 percent were recruited on merit.

Merit-based recruitment then increased to 40 percent in 1976, which continued till 1985 before it was further upped to 45 percent.

project regarding the Teesta river is for Bangladesh to decide upon. That decision must be respected by all of us."

In 2020, Bangladesh's water resources ministry wrote to the Economic Relations Division seeking a $983.27 million loan from China to implement the Teesta project that includes dredging, creating reservoirs, and building townships along the river.

But, after her India visit last month, Hasina told reporters that her government will implement the Teesta project with assistance from India and it has got assurances from the neighbouring country in this regard.

At yesterday's event organised by the Diplomatic Correspondents Association, Bangladesh, the Chinese envoy replied in the negative when he was asked whether there was tension between India and his country over the project.

He said China placed a proposal regarding the Teesta project following a request from Bangladesh and was awaiting a response.

When asked if India and China could work jointly on the Teesta project, he said: "We are ready. We are open...But it's Bangladesh [which has] to make decision in this regard. China is open about whatever proposal Bangladesh gives."

Asked how many documents could be signed during Hasina's China visit, the ambassador said he could not comment on the specifics.

Discussions between the two countries will focus on infrastructure, trade, the financial sector, the digital economy, education, media cooperation, and the development of Bangladesh's southern region, he said.

Through the PM's visit, the envoy said, the two sides will further enhance coordination and cooperation on regional and international issues.

He said China supports Bangladesh's bid to become a partner country of the BRICS and hopes Bangladesh will be a BRICS member soon.

China highly appreciates Bangladesh's humanitarian spirit in sheltering more than one million Rohingya refugees, he said.

He said China is actively persuading all parties involved in the conflict in Myanmar to achieve a ceasefire and dialogue, thus paving the way for the repatriation at an early date.

Asked whether Bangladesh and China are going to sign any defence deals during Hasina's visit, he said he was not sure.

The countries will have more defence cooperation in future, he said, adding that defence cooperation serves as a pillar of the relations of the two countries.

DCAB President Nurul Islam Hasib and General Secretary Ashiqur Rahman Apu also spoke at the event.

$14b export data puzzle is unnerving

His stance concurs with the views expressed by other economists.

"If the ratio of this discrepancy has significantly increased over time, then that should necessitate revisiting the growth estimates," said Ashikur Rahman, principal economist at the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh.

With the disclosure, some other issues came to a head as well.

The statistical revision suggests that Bangladesh Bank and the finance ministry have finally accepted that no significant export earnings are retained abroad as exporters have claimed for years. That means the trade deficit is much larger than originally presumed. That also indicates that the target of reaching $110 billion in exports by 2027 is far from realistic.

"In other words, we should now formulate a more realistic export strategy and identify what exact constraints are hindering our export performance," Ashikur said.

The difference between export figures calculated by the Export Promotion Bureau and Bangladesh Bank persisted for at least 12 years, with the gap crossing $12 billion in fiscal 2022-23.

Economists have long been referring to the puzzle. Finally, the central bank woke up and reconciled the mismatch for the July-April period of fiscal 2023-24. As a result, exports fell 6.8 percent during this period, a sharp contrast with a 3.93 percent growth shown in the EPB's figures released earlier.

What's more, Bangladesh runs the risk of reputational damage abroad. The country's image as a garment powerhouse defined by the sheer volume of shipments will be seriously dented. Clothing exports, which make up about 10 percent of the economy, are an important indicator that sets the country apart from its peers.

SOME ESTIMATES ARE OBSOLETE NOW

It is going to create serious data chaos. Whatever Bangladesh has estimated in the past has now become "mostly irrelevant", said Fahmida Khatun, executive director of the Centre for Policy Dialogue.

The EPB publishes figures based on the data from the customs department. Apparently, for procedural reasons or otherwise, the customs department took into account the same export data more than once in many cases, known as double or triple counting.

As per the EPB data, exports were $47.47 billion in the July-April period of fiscal 2023-24. However, the amount stood at $33.67 billion after the correction, according to data released by the central bank on Wednesday.

But it's not clear for how long such wrong data entry has been going on.

Good policy framing depends on authentic data. Poor quality data gives wrong signals to the policymakers.

"If policymaking is done based on unreliable data, then policies become irrelevant and defunct," Fahmida said. Unfortunately, citizens have been misled about the real economic situation due to such anomalies perpetuated by government organisations, she said.

These errors show the extent of data governance or a lack of it in Bangladesh. Without quality information, informed policy-making is difficult, said MA Razzaque, chairman of the Research and Policy Integration for Development.

The export data mismatch will have an impact on GDP estimates because value addition from exports is included in the GDP calculation. The ratio of value addition is nearly 60 percent. So, the GDP impact will be as much as $6 billion, Razzaque said.

Md Deen Islam, associate professor of economics at Dhaka University, said this correction would lower the GDP growth rate, with exports contributing less to overall economic output, GDP growth rates for the period will need to be revised downward, and future projections for economic growth will need to be adjusted to reflect the more accurate export figures, potentially leading to more conservative growth estimates.

The significant revision could create temporary confusion and mistrust among stakeholders, including businesses, investors and international partners, he said.

"Revisions might lead to questions regarding the credibility and reliability of economic data published by national agencies," he added.

Deen Islam said policymakers may need to reassess their strategies to stimulate economic growth and stabilise the macroeconomic environment as the revised export figures indicate a significant decline.

However, the reconciliation of export data provides a more accurate picture of Bangladesh's economic landscape, which is crucial for effective policy-making and strategic planning, said Deen Islam.

Birupaksha Paul, a professor of economics at the State University of New York, said it was a positive move toward a proper accounting of the balance of payments.

A senior official of the EPB said it does not produce export data. The agency compiles export data based on numbers it receives from the customs wing of the National Board of Revenue and the central bank.

"We only see export data once the goods are shipped. If any consignment is returned, the EPB does not have the chance to find that out," he said, adding that it is monitored by the BB and NBR.

"Still, if we need to correct any data, we will do it," said the official. There is a committee comprising representatives from the EPB, the BB, the NBR and other agencies.

The EPB is yet to release data for the July-June period of FY24 although it usually publishes the figures early every month.

Saiful Islam, executive director of Bangladesh Bank, said from now on, the central bank will base the calculation on the corrected export data.

Asked about the previous mismatch in data between the BB and the EPB, he said there was no problem with the past data. There was a problem with the method of reporting. He did not elaborate.

Despite the big reset, the economy's health remains unchanged. The correction addresses anomalies but does not fundamentally alter the economic landscape.

It's time for serious stocktaking

important riddle: despite reports of solid showing in the export market month in and month out, why was the foreign currency reserves not bouncing back?

At the same time, the dwindling dollar stockpile was not due to rampant capital flight through trade mis-invoicing: the discrepancy between the NBR data and the central bank data is not too wide.

More importantly, the balance of payment adjustment has raised a few uncomfortable questions.

Was there no oversight on the EPB's data collection practice? Why did the EPB and the NBR not sit down at the close of a fiscal year to reconcile their entries? Who should be held responsible for this scandal? Or, was this intentional all along and the authorities are doing a mea culpa now that they were caught by the IMF?

The event also gives rise to a bigger existential question: was the oft-peddled narrative of Bangladesh being an economic star performer over the past decade or so a sham?

Exports and remittance are the two big drivers of the Bangladesh economy. The stellar GDP growth reported over the years was pinned on the impressive growth registered by the two sectors.

Surely, Bangladesh's actual GDP is markedly lower than what was reported all this while. About one-third of the country's GDP comes from industrial output, which is dominated by merchandise for the export market.

This also raises another question: is Bangladesh really ready for graduation from the least-developed country bracket in 2026?

Bangladesh's LDC graduation was determined by its economic performance and now that it needs revision, surely the scheduled timeframe for graduation should be calibrated too.

With graduation from the LDC bracket, Bangladesh will lose all the trade benefits it currently enjoys. With the trade privileges, Bangladesh's exports flattered to deceive. Will the exporters be able to manage without it? Can the Bangladesh economy afford a further drop in exports?

There must be serious stock-taking by the Awami League government of more than 15 years to this end.

And yet, the biggest damage the readjustment of the balance of payment data has done is not material -- there is no change in the net balance of payment and foreign exchange reserve scenarios -- but psychological: it raises questions on the credibility of all data provided by the government.

If the export data was inflated, what about the other components of the economy? What about the reported progress on poverty alleviation and remarkable gains made in social development indicators?

All the achievements made over the past decade will be called into question -- all that glitters may not be gold.

Acknowledgement is the first step to recovery. Now that the government has admitted its mistake, it must call for re-computation of all official records connected to export data.

At the very least, the past GDP figures must be reset. Other than regaining the lost credibility, there is another silver lining: Bangladesh's tax-GDP ratio, which has long been among the lowest in the world and often touted as an Achilles heel of the economy, would most definitely improve to a decent number.

There is another gain to be had with the resetting of the GDP figure, which would entail a massive swallowing of pride for the current government.

A sizeable portion of Bangladesh's sovereign debt portfolio is non-concessionary due to its reported GDP figure. Interest payments on those loans are progressively turning out to be an albatross around the government's neck.

Things can only look up from here onwards if the government takes the episode as a sobering lesson.

Political killings tripled, custodial deaths doubled

Shows ASK report

RAFIUL ISLAM

At least 41 people were killed in incidents of political violence in the first six months of 2024, which is three times higher than first six months of 2023, according to rights body Ain o Salish Kendra (ASK).

Fourteen people were killed and 2,422 were injured between January and June last year. The number of deaths rose to 45 by December last year.

ASK prepared the report on information based on news reports published in national dailies, alongside its own findings.

The rights body said the killings in political violence increased this year centring the general election on January 7, city corporation elections, and upazila polls held in four phases across the country.

Many opposition parties, including BNP and Jamaat-e-Islami, boycotted the polls.

So, the killings mostly took place among supporters of Awami League candidates and independent AL candidates during national polls, while during local elections, they took place among supporters of candidates affiliated with AL.

Besides, the deaths in custody of police and Rab have doubled between January and June this year, compared to the same period in 2023, it also said.

The rights body said the killings in political violence increased this year centring the general election on January 7, city corporation elections, and upazila polls held in four phases across the country.

At least eight individuals, including two women, died in custody. One of the victims, Afroza Begum, 40, died in police custody of Jashore's Abhaynagar, hours after she was picked up from her residence on June 2.

Family members alleged that police first implicated Afroza in a false drug case and tortured her to death for money. Police, however, denied the allegations.

Thirteen people were killed and 11

'Happy that I was not put in a cage'

Bail of Prof Yunus extended till Aug 14

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka tribunal yesterday extended bail of Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus and three directors of Grameen Telecom till August 14 in a labour law violation case.

MA Awal, chairman (in-charge) of Labour Appellate Tribunal, passed the order, Khaja Tanvir Ahmed, a lawyer for Yunus, told The Daily Star.

Around 11:00am, Yunus, chairman of Grameen Telecom, along with his three colleagues appeared before the tribunal and filed a petition, the lawyer said.

Talking to journalists afterwards, Yunus said, "The complaints against me are that I laundered money, set up many companies abroad, evaded taxes etc. These are matters for investigation, not for debate. It is a judicial matter... I think I have nothing to say about it."

"The things she [PM] raises as complaints, we have answered those many times... we made a list of 29 Grameen Bank questions and answers

One murder, too many questions

3 out of 6 retract confessions; family yet to get authorisation for DNA test; probe into gold smuggling link stalled

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

The detectives have come up with multiple theories since Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar was killed over a month ago.

Initially, law enforcement officials said the MP was killed due to a gold smuggling-related feud, placing suspicion on a fellow lawmaker and a powerful businessman -- both allegedly part of the same syndicate as Azim.

The probe into the gold smuggling issue remained stalled.

The investigation has taken so many twists and turns since then that it has raised some doubts and confusion in the public mind.

Suddenly, political rivalry came into the mix as a possible reason for the murder following the arrest and confession of Kazi Kamal Ahmed Babu, relief and social welfare affairs secretary of the Jhenaidah Awami League.

Suspects appeared and were held from far-flung corners of the country, each with a purported motive for the MP's demise.

Adding to the confusion is the mystery surrounding the remains found in a Kolkata apartment.

Though suspected to be Azim's, his family is yet to get the green light to visit Kolkata for DNA tests.

Abdur Rauf, a personal assistant of Azim, told The Daily Star, "We were supposed to go Kolkata on July 3, but we did not get any authorisation. We do not know when the authorisation will come."

Further complicating matters, three individuals who initially confessed to the crime, yesterday recanted their statements, claiming they were coerced in custody.

Was Azim eliminated in a gold-smuggling power struggle? Was he killed by his political rivals? Or is there something more sinister at play? -- these questions now surround the murder mystery.

MP AZIM MURDER

Babu yesterday applied to a Dhaka court to withdraw his confessional statement. He was coerced, he claimed.

Two others, including the alleged killing mission coordinator Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan and his cousin Tanvir Bhuiyan also applied to withdraw their confessional statements over similar reason.

Their confessional statements were pre-written by the cops, they just put their signatures on them due to torture, the three said.

Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate Mahbubul Haque ordered the applications to be kept on record.

Confirming the developments, Advocate Ehsanul Haque Samaji said the accused applied for treatment as they were sick due to torture in remand. The court ordered the jail authorities to provide treatment as per the jail code, he added.

Abdul Ahad, deputy commissioner of (Wari division) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, told The Daily Star that he is unaware of the matter.

Meanwhile, Mustafizur Rahman Fakir and Foysal Ali Sahazi have given confessional statements in the court on Tuesday and Wednesday.

In addition to arranging for their visa, passports and travel arrangements, Aktaruzzaman, one of the masterminds behind the murder, also provided the two with chloroform and other weapons used for the murder through his personal assistant Siam.

The two also cleaned the flat after murdering the MP, said Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (Detective Branch) of DMP.

Drives are underway to arrest more suspects whose names are emerging from the investigation, he added.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at a friend's house overnight. He left the house the next day saying he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, police from India and Bangladesh said Azim was killed in a Kolkata flat.

Metro fare won't increase this month

Govt forms committee on VAT-related issues

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday formed a technical committee to submit a report on VAT-related issues for metro rail service.

The committee, led by Neelima Akhter, executive director of Dhaka Transport Coordination Authority (DTCA), will have to submit the report within a month.

The authority will not increase metro rail fares until a decision is taken following the committee's report, said ABM Amin Ullah Nuri, secretary of the Road Transport and Highways Division (RTHD).

The decision was taken at an inter-ministerial meeting held at the division yesterday with Nuri in the chair. Representatives of National Board of Revenue, Finance Division, and Dhaka Mass Transit Company Ltd (DMTCL), among others, participated in the meeting.

The meeting was held when confusion arose regarding whether the metro rail fare would be hiked, as NBR decided not to extend the 15 percent VAT exemption for metro rail service after June 30 this year.

Relatives of MPs dominated UZ polls: Shujan

Wealthy individuals and businessmen with close ties to the members of parliament govern the majority of upazila parishads across the country, said speakers at a press conference yesterday.

This raises concerns about huge power being concentrated in the hands of a few people, they added.

Sushashoner Jonno Nagorik held the event at Jatiya Press Club, presenting an analysis of the sixth upazila parishad election.

They examined data obtained from 470 elected upazila chairmen. It showed 360 (76.6 percent) are businessmen, followed by 48 agriculturists, 19 lawyers, and 15 teachers.

Out of 470 elected upazila chairmen, 360 (76.6 percent) are businessmen, followed by 48 agriculturists, 19 lawyers, and 15 teachers.

Additionally, 42 of these chairmen have an annual income exceeding Tk 1 crore.

Shujan highlighted that lower-income candidates had a significantly lower chance of winning, while higher-income candidates had double the success rate. The report also pointed out that the elections were neither participatory nor competitive, with voter apathy being a major issue.

The results might lead to internal conflicts within the Awami League, as around 90 percent of the winning chairmen are from the ruling party.

The report said 114 of the elected chairmen currently face cases, 182 had cases in the past, and 75 have both past and current cases.

Shujan Secretary Badiul Alam Majumdar expressed concerns about the large amounts of money spent illegally in elections.

Biman only profits from 11 out of 21 int'l destinations

Reports national flag carrier to JS body

RASHIDUL HASAN

The national flag carrier is only earning profits in 11 of its 21 international routes.

They are: London, Toronto, Dubai, Jeddah, Madina, Riyadh, Dammam, Bangkok, Kathmandu, Kuala Lumpur and Singapore.

Biman Bangladesh Airlines is incurring operational losses in six international destinations -- namely Manchester, Kuwait, Delhi, Kolkata, Guangzhou and Narita.

The other four international routes -- Abu Dhabi, Muscat, Doha and Sharjah -- are gradually turning profitable by reducing the load penalty through coordination of excess baggage weight with airfare.

The airline placed the information before a meeting of the parliamentary standing committee on civil aviation ministry yesterday.

Awami League MP and chief of the parliamentary watchdog Sajjadul Hassan chaired the meeting.

Efforts to increase profitability including optimising revenue per passenger, improving on-time performance, and minimising operational costs were discussed at the meeting.

Besides, how to maximise and utilise newly-acquired Boeing aircraft and enhancing passenger service quality were also discussed.

The lawmakers expressed concerns over service quality, flight punctuality issues, and technical faults affecting schedules.

They urged Biman management to address these promptly.

Looking forward, Biman aims to expand its network with new international routes to destinations like Male, Sydney, and Seoul, alongside efforts to resume the Dhaka-New York route.

Domestically, plans are underway to introduce new flights connecting major cities including Chattogram, Sylhet, and Cox's Bazar.

Civil Aviation Minister Muhammad Faruk Khan, alongside committee members and Biman officials, emphasised the need for stringent supervision to tackle challenges and optimise operational efficiency.

Discussions also focused on manpower structure and recruitment processes to streamline operations further.

3, including mother and son, die inside septic tank

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

Three people, including a mother and her son, lost their lives after falling into a septic tank in Mithapukur upazila of Rangpur yesterday.

The deceased are Delwara Begum, 55, her son Ida Mia, 35, and their neighbour Iblul Mia, 35.

According to Abdur Rashid, chairman of Gopalpur union, the incident occurred early in the morning when Delwara Begum set a ladder beside the septic tank and climbed it to collect vegetables from the tin roof.

She slipped and fell into the open tank.

Her son Ida Mia entered the tank in an attempt to rescue his mother.

When both failed to respond to the calls of locals, Iblul Mia, their neighbour, also entered the tank to help them, but he met the same tragic fate.

Fire Service and Civil Defence recovered the bodies around 7:30am, said Moshiur Rahman, inspector of Mithapukur fire service.

Want to order a boat? Just give a call

Boat makers in Bagerhat embrace technology

PARTHA CHAKRABORTTY, Bagerhat

Boat makers in Kachua upazila of Bagerhat have turned to digital platforms using their mobile phones to sell dinghy boats, thereby transforming the way to reach out to their buyers.

Samples of the boats, crafted from wood of Chambal and Mahogany trees, are prominently displayed at Badhal Haat (bazaar), with contact details of the artisans.

Interested buyers would use the contact numbers to place orders over phone, said Altap Hossain and Sobhan Sheikh, two artisans from Tangrakhali village in the upazila who are at the forefront of this approach to market their products.

The approach not only saves their time but also increased their sales, they also said.

"Usually, we can make a dinghy in a single day. However, following this approach, we sold 60 boats each from our homes in one month. Based on the size and quality, each boat fetched Tk 3,000- 5,000," said Altap.

"Our customer base has expanded beyond the locality to Morrelganj, Rampal, Polerhat, Doibaghyahat, and Vatkhai in Bagerhat, and Bhaijor and Indurkani in Pirojpur district," said Sobhan.

Sharing his experience, one satisfied customer, Rafiqual Sheikh from Rampal, said, "We use these dinghy boats in the fish enclosures for feeding fish. The process of ordering over phone is very convenient."

Another buyer, Laizu Sheikh, who had ordered three boats for fishing, echoed him.

Altap and Sobhan's initiative serves as a model for other artisans in the region to follow suit and thereby improve their livelihoods, said Abu Bakar Siddque, a resident of Tangrakhali village.

DSCC fines 9 establishments Tk 1.71 lakh

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka South City Corporation yesterday fined owners of nine establishments Tk 1.71 lakh for finding Aedes mosquito larvae on their premises.

Seven mobile courts conducted the drives at Kamrangirchar, Panthapath, Narinda, Shwamibag, Kratia Road, Surulia, Demra, Ranimahal, Nandipara M Block, Banasree and Khilgaon.

DSCC mobile teams visited 458 houses and structures and found Aedes mosquito larvae at nine houses including a construction building.

Meanwhile, 32 dengue patients were hospitalised in the last 24 hours till yesterday morning.

The total number of dengue cases this year rose to 3,844 while the total number of deaths stood at 46 till yesterday.

Probe committee finds error in construction work

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A parliamentary probe body -- formed to investigate irregularities in the Chattogram Expressway project -- found some errors in the work during its investigation yesterday.

The committee also found inconsistency in the works while visiting the under-construction expressway.

MA Latif, an Awami League lawmaker and head of the sub-committee, told reporters after visiting the expressway that they will include technical experts in their committee to investigate these errors.

"Then we will submit our report to the ministry concerned through parliament," he said.

Latif said they informed the project officials about the errors, who assured them of rectifying those soon.

After some cracks were found at multiple pillars of the expressway, the parliamentary standing committee on the Ministry of Housing and Public Works on June 10 formed the probe body.

Contractor firm Max-Ranken (Joint Venture) is constructing the expressway.

Mahfuzur Rahman, director of the project and executive engineer of Chattogram Development Authority, said there are some air cracks in pillars but nothing major. "We already examined and asked contractors to level the cracks. We also found some errors in the finishing work. We will solve them as soon as possible."

The construction work of the much-awaited Chattogram Elevated Expressway is nearing completion. The project was initiated in 2017. The project's original cost was Tk 3,250 crore and was scheduled to be completed in June 2020.

However, the government had to extend the deadline as the CDA failed to implement the project within the stipulated time. At present, the cost of the project is Tk 4,298.95 crore.

decided to cancel the tax exemption it has been given since the beginning of the metro rail operation in December 2022.

But DMTCL, through the RTHD, wrote to NBR to review the decision. But NBR did not extend the exemption order, which means the 15 percent VAT on metro rail fares would be applicable from July 1.

Amid the situation, yesterday's meeting decided to form the technical committee to look after the entire issue, Nuri told The Daily Star last night.

The committee will have representatives from NBR, Finance Division, DMTCL, RTHD, and Bangladesh Computer Council, he said.

"The committee will recommend whether VAT has to be imposed on metro rail service or not, and if imposed, how the VAT would be collected, etc," he said.

Upon receiving the report, they will sit again and take a final decision in this regard, he added.

the accused first forcibly took her to Chattogram from Rangamati on June 19 and then to Dhaka.

On June 25, they took her to a restaurant and asked her to marry a man who speaks Chinese. As she refused, they confined her.

Meanwhile, a human chain was formed in Rangamati yesterday demanding exemplary punishment to the arrested trafficking gang members.

Earlier, two women from Chakma and Marma communities filed similar separate cases with Rangamati's Naniarchar and Khagrachhari's Laxmichhari police stations on May 1 and April 26 respectively.

Political killings

others were injured in shooting by Indian Border Security Force in the last six months, while the number was 11 from January to June last year.

A total of 250 women were raped across the country from January to July this year, among whom 14 were killed after rape and three died by suicide. The number was 294 in the same period last year, according to ASK.

The ASK report also revealed that 631 children have become victims of killings, torture, and repression so far this year. Among those, 239 were killed, and 50 died by suicide.

In the first six months of 2023, at least 806 children became victims of killings, torture, and repression, and 109 of them were killed.

The cases of attacks on minorities, including the Hindu community, so far this year have included the attack and vandalism of 21 Hindu idols, temples, and puja mandaps, alongside the arson and vandalism of 25 houses.

The last six months also saw 32 people killed in mob lynching, the report said.

and printed them in the form of advertisements in newspapers. If you read it, you will get the answers there. It is not necessary to search for new answers now," he said.

"I have never been prosecuted by the government or the NBR regarding my taxes. So I do not understand where did the issue of tax evasion come from. So, these are the subject of investigation," he continued.

He also said, "I am feeling good as I was not inside the cage today. There is no cage system here. The cage system should be removed permanently from courts."

Meanwhile, the tribunal set August 14 for hearing the appeal filed by Yunus and three Grameen Telecom directors against a labour court's sentence in the case.

On January 1, the Labour Court-3 of Dhaka sentenced the four to six months' imprisonment and fined Tk 30,000 each for violating labour laws.

Mother, daughter die as microbus hits auto-rickshaw

STAR REPORT

Three people were killed and two injured in road accidents in two districts yesterday.

In Natore, a woman and her three-year-old daughter were killed in a head-on collision between a microbus and a battery-run auto-rickshaw in Lalpur upazila.

The accident happened around 1:00pm on Lalpur-Bagha regional highway at Rahimpur Jamtla, said police.

Retired cop, wife sued over graft

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday sued a former senior assistant superintendent of police of the Industrial Police and his wife for accumulating wealth illegally beyond their known source of income and concealing information in their wealth statements.

They are Abul Hashem, who retired recently, and his wife Taherina Begum.

Musabbir Ahmed, assistant director of ACC Chattogram Integrated Office-2, filed two separate cases with ACC Chattogram Integrated Office-1 against the two after finding irregularities in their wealth statements during an initial probe, said Nazmus Sadat, deputy director of ACC in Chattogram.

According to the case statements, Abul Hashem concealed information on Tk 4.45 lakh wealth and accumulated wealth worth Tk 18,60,298 beyond his known source of income.

His wife showed a boutique house to her name but failed to show relevant verified documents.

She also concealed information on Tk 6.84 lakh wealth and accumulated wealth worth Tk 43.32 lakh beyond her known source of income, the case statements revealed.

Abul Hashem started his career as a sub-inspector of the police force in 1988 and retired in 2022 as senior ASP of Industrial Police.

Three traffickers held in Dhaka

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Rangamati

Police have arrested three members of a human trafficking gang from Dhaka's Uttara and Bashundhara residential areas.

The arrestees are: gang leader Sajeev Chakma, 21, of Rangamati's Barkal upazila; his sister Jassi Chakma, 23; and Mamiya Talukder, 21, of Khagrachhari's Dighinala upazila.

A Rangamati court yesterday sent them to jail after they were produced before it shown arrested in a case filed with Baghaichhari Police Station for kidnapping a 19-year-old girl from an indigenous community in Rangamati. They confined her to Bashundhara and Uttara areas of Dhaka, and tried to force her to marry a man who speaks Chinese.

Police said the arrestees admitted their involvement in organised human trafficking.

Earlier, Rangamati police arrested them on Wednesday following a two-day drive after the girl filed the case accusing four gang members and few others including Chinese nationals.

Another accused member of the gang, Ankhi Chakma of Rangamati, is absconding.

Uttara Paschim police rescued the victim from house in Uttara on June 25 a day after her father lodged a general diary with Baghaichhari Police Station.

In the case statement, the victim said

Flood situation worsens in the north

Major rivers in Sylhet still overflowing

STAR REPORT

The flood situation in the country's north continues to deteriorate due to an onrush of water from the upstream, while two major rivers in the Sylhet region are still flowing above the danger level.

The Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre (FFWC) warned that floods may worsen at some low-lying areas near the Brahmaputra and Jamuna rivers in Kurigram, Jamalpur, Gaibandha, Bogura and Sirajganj districts.

Heavy to very heavy rainfall is expected in the north and areas adjoining the upstream in the next 48 hours, an FFWC bulletin released at 9:00am said yesterday.

However, the flood situation in the low-lying areas of Sylhet region may remain steady in the next 24 hours, it added.

Yesterday, fresh areas were inundated in Kurigram as the Brahmaputra's water level further rose by 48cm in 24 hours from 6:00pm on Wednesday. Earlier, it was 60cm above the danger level at the Noonkhawa point, according to the local Water Development Board (WDB).

"If the water level continues to rise at this rate, the flood situation may take a severe turn," said Rakibul Hasan, executive engineer of Kurigram's WDB.

Meanwhile, the flood-hit people have been suffering immensely.

Tofazzal Hossain, 60, a resident of Char Bhagabatipur in Kurigram Sadar, said, "My house has gone at least 3-4 feet under water. The tube wells and toilets were also submerged. My 10 chickens and two goats floated away."

Majibur Rahman, 60, of Barabhita village in Phulbari upazila, said, "We can't get out of home and we have no work due to the flood. How will we survive?"

Some also lost their paddy fields to the flood.

In Sirajganj, low-lying and char areas have been inundated as water levels of the Jamuna rose 20cm above the danger level at Hard Point last evening.

According to Nazmul Hossain, sub-divisional engineer of Sirajganj WDB, it will continue to rise for the next 2-3 days due to the onrush of water from the upstream.

In Gaibandha and Bogura, floods further intensified as the Jamuna flowed 77cm above the danger level at Gaibandha's Fulchari upazila around 6:00pm yesterday.

At least 80,000 people were affected in both districts combined, according to the district relief and rehabilitation officers.

In the northeast, the Surma river was flowing 70cm above the danger level at Sylhet's Kanaighat point at 3:00pm, while the Kushiyara was flowing 155cm above the danger level at the Amalshid point.

However, the water levels of the Sari-Gowain and Manu rivers in Sylhet and Moulvibazar were flowing below the danger levels.

"Water will continue receding if there is no rainfall in the upstream," said Dipak Ranjan Das, executive engineer of Sylhet WDB.

However, many people still remained stranded.

Moinul Islam, a resident of Bademansur area in Moulvibazar, said, "We can't even get out of our house as the entire village remains under water."

889 schools closed in Sylhet division

PHOTO: STAR

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

At least 889 primary schools in Sylhet division have kept their academic activities suspended indefinitely due to ongoing floods.

According to the Divisional Primary Education Office, there are 5,054 primary schools in the division, many of which are either submerged or being used as shelters for flood-affected people.

The floods, a recurring issue during monsoons due to torrential rain and downstream waters from India, have impacted 6,49,378 people in the division.

Currently, 19,820 people are staying at 366 shelters across four districts -- 164 in Sylhet, 59 in Sunamganj, 75 in Moulvibazar, and 68 in Habiganj. Most of these shelters are set up in primary and secondary schools, said Jalal Uddin, deputy director of the Directorate of Primary Education.

In a recent visit to Kulaura upazila in Moulvibazar, this correspondent saw at least 28 government primary schools kept their doors closed due to flood damage.

Many schools are submerged, with some standing like isolated islands in the middle of waterlogged roads.

"There is over a foot of water in classrooms, making it impossible to conduct classes," said Rontu Ranjan Chanda, headteacher of Ghourkoron Government Primary School.

As floodwaters persist and inclement weather continues, the situation may worsen.

Khushi Mohan Sarkar, chief executive engineer of the Bangladesh Water Development Board in Sylhet, said around 20 rivers in the region would be excavated to mitigate future flooding.

EMBEZZLING TK 60.72 LAKH

Former state minister among 3 issued legal notice

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

Zakir Hossain, former state minister for primary and mass education, and two of his family members have been issued a legal notice for allegedly embezzling Tk 60.72 lakh.

The money was allocated for providing solar-powered houses to 263 poor families in Kurigram's Roumari upazila, as per the allegations.

The other accused are Hossain's wife, Suraiya Sultana, and cousin, Ahsan Mandal alias Babu Mandal.

Moksed Ali, a resident of Char Gaytapara and an Awami League activist, sent the notice through his lawyer. Ali said Tk 60 lakh was collected from 191 families for houses and Tk 72,000 from 72 families for solar facilities in FY 2020-21 from Char Gaytapara, Dantabhanga, Char Shoulmari, and Bandaber villages.

Many families alleged that they did not get homes or solar facilities. PHOTO: STAR

He claimed the money was delivered to Hossain and his wife through Babu Mandal but neither houses nor solar facilities were provided.

Akbar Ali, a day labourer from Char Gaytapara, said he paid Tk 36,000 but received neither a house nor a refund. Multiple victims shared similar stories.

Contacted, Zakir Hossain claims the allegations are part of a conspiracy against him.

Babu Mandal, who is sub-publicity secretary of Roumari upazila AL, denied knowing Moksed Ali and refuted the allegations.

Moksed's lawyer, Khademul Hasan, said the legal notice was sent on June 26, and they have supporting documents. If the money is not returned within 15 days, a case will be lodged.

I've received more than I expected in my acting career: Totini

Tanjim Saiara Totini, a rising showbiz star of her generation, has quickly garnered immense popularity and critical acclaim in the Bangladeshi entertainment industry. Despite her relatively short career, Totini has already made a significant impact with her remarkable performances in various dramas.

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

Her recent drama Nayantara, which aired during Eid, was a massive hit, with Totini's stellar performance captivating audiences. Directed by Mohammad Mostafa Kamal Raz, the drama resonated deeply with viewers.

Reflecting on her success, Totini shared, "Playing the role in Nayantara brought me immense love and praise from the audience. It touched the hearts of many, and that makes me very happy."

Another notable drama featuring Totini, Vitore Bahire, directed by the acclaimed Mizanur Rahman Aryan, also received a warm reception during Eid.

The actress expressed her satisfaction, saying, "Honestly, only a few dramas aired last Eid. Among them, Vitore Bahire gave me a sense of fulfilment and joy. It resonated with everyone just like Nayantara did."

Discussing her journey in the media industry, Totini remarked, "Overall, I've been in the media for five years, but I've only been acting for a few years."

When asked what she has received in her relatively short acting career, Totini humbly replied, "I've received more love than I ever expected in my acting career. Considering the few years I've been working, the amount of love from people has been overwhelming and humbling."

Regarding her dreams and aspirations, Totini said, "I want to continue acting and remain in the audience's hearts. I aspire to become a complete artiste."

She also expressed her desire to work on OTT platforms, mentioning an upcoming web-series shoot. "I'll share more once the shooting begins. I haven't started shooting anything significant post-Eid, but I'm hoping to kick off work with something great soon," she revealed.

Throughout her career, Totini has worked with several actors, but her pairing with Yash Rohan has been particularly well-received by viewers. Speaking about her co-actor, Totini commented, "Yash is a very calm person and an excellent actor. I enjoy working with him."

When asked about her view on the concept of on-screen pairs, Totini stated, "The concept of on-screen pairs isn't bad. It's actually good. It depends on the audience's preference. If they like it, then it's possible. From this perspective, I see it positively."

Earlier in February, Totini took on leading roles in four Valentine's Day special projects-- Jahid Preetom's directorial Buk Pocketer Golpo, Ragib Raihan's Pori, Rafat Mazumdar Rinku's Bolte Chai, and Vicky Zahed's Chinho.

The actress began her journey in the showbiz world in 2019. Her popular works include Ei Muhurte, Bachibar Holo Tar Sadh, and Shomoy Sob Jane, among others.

Meher Afroz Shaon to return to screen after 17 years

Meher Afroz Shaon, a media figure since her debut in Notun Kuri and known for her roles in Humayun Ahmed's works, is returning to cinema after 17 years. She stepped back from acting to focus on family and, since Ahmed's passing in 2012, has made occasional musical appearances.

Now, she is set to return with the government-funded Fakhrul Arefeen Khan directorial film Neel Jochona. The film is adapted from Mustak Ahmed's parapsychology novel Neel Jochonar Jibon.

She starts shooting Neel Jochona in Dhaka today, with co-stars Tariq Anam Khan, Intekhab Dinar, Partha Barua, SM Naeem, and Paoli Dam.

Fawad Khan to return to Bollywood after eight years

Famed actor Fawad Khan is all set to return to Bollywood in a romantic comedy film opposite Vaani Kapoor.

According to reports by the Indian news agency IANS, the still-untitled film, directed by Aarti Bagdi, will be shot entirely in the UK.

Fawad Khan's last appearance in a Hindi-language film was eight years ago. The versatile actor has featured in Indian movies like Ae Dil Hai Mushkil, Kapoor & Sons, and Khoobsurat.

Fawad Khan, a top Pakistani actor, starred in 2022's The Legend of Maula Jatt, the highest-grossing Pakistani film ever, while also debuting in the Marvel Cinematic Universe with Ms Marvel.

BTRC took the decision to file the case against in the 161th Commission meeting. It also decided to send a letter to the ministry concerned for cancellation of its licence, documents show.

The court issued arrest warrants against Asif, Ayrin, Shariful, and Rashel between September 23, 2021, and November 30, 2021.

Since then, the four have been fugitives, according to the case records.

Locals said Asif has regularly attended various political and government programmes, and election campaigns between May 2022 and June 23 this year.

A Facebook page named "Adv Asif Shams Ronjon" shows Asif was live at least on 120 occasions in Bera between the time the arrest warrant was issued and yesterday.

According to locals, a rally led by Asif Shams paraded Bera streets, marking the AL founding anniversary on June 23. He also sought votes for candidates in the Bera upazila parishad polls on May 6.

He took part in his father's campaign for the 12th national elections.

According to BTRC documents, Vision Tel Ltd got its licence on April 12, 2012.

A BTRC official said the case was filed to recover the dues arisen from revenue sharing and annual licence fees, which has now become over Tk 235 crore with interest.

The last hearing on the case was on June 26, said a court staffer, adding that since there were no developments regarding arrests, the court set August 25 for the next hearing.

Contacted, Asif yesterday said, "I have severed links with Vision Tel Ltd in 2013 with the BTRC's permission. The case was filed against the company.

"I was not informed about the court's notices and the arrest warrant earlier," he told The Daily Star by phone.

"Today [yesterday], I appeared before the court and the problem has been solved. I will return to Bera soon," he said, adding that he reached Dhaka from Bera a few days ago.

Vision Tel Ltd's licence was cancelled on June 16, 2015.

Recently, some media outlets reported that Asif went abroad, fearing that he would be arrested.

However, The Daily Star has a video clip in which Asif was seen inside a car in the capital's Ramna on Wednesday.

His personal assistant told this newspaper that the mayor last worked at his Bera office on June 28.

forecasting its biggest-ever victory.

But Starmer was taking nothing for granted as he urged voters not to stay at home. "Britain's future is on the ballot," he said. "But change will only happen if you vote for it."

Voting began at 7:00 am (0600 GMT) in more than 40,000 polling stations across the country, from church halls, community centres and schools to more unusual venues such as pubs and even a ship.

Sunak was among the early birds, casting his ballot at his Richmond and Northallerton constituency in Yorkshire, northern England. Starmer voted around two hours later in his north London seat, shortly before Liberal Democrat leader Ed Davey.

Hannah Tinsley, 26, a trainee lawyer who was voting in south London, told AFP that it was "important" for young people to cast their ballots.

"The voter turnout for young people compared to older people is really low and obviously, it's going to affect us in the long term," she added.

In Saint Albans, north of London, 22-year-old student Judith told AFP: "I don't really trust any of them but will vote. A lot of my friends feel the same."

He drove to his village home in Azampur village a day earlier. He then met up with his friends, they wanted to go to Ishwardi in his car.

They went on a drive in the evening, said police.

On the way back home, Nayeem was driving fast. At one point, he lost his control over the steering and the vehicle skidded off the slippery road and hit a tree.

Three of them died on the spot, said OC Rafiqul, adding that the two others were declared dead at Ishwardi Upazila Health Complex.

Nayeem and Shahid were transferred to Rajshahi Medical College Hospital for better treatment, said the OC.

Charges framed against Alal, Tuku, 87 others who is now in jail custody, pleaded not guilty after Judge Md Aminul Islam of Dhaka Metropolitan Special Tribunal-16 read out the charges to them yesterday.

Before that, the tribunal dismissed the petitions seeking to have them cleared of the charges in the case.

According to the prosecution, it was alleged that around 12:25pm on February 8 of 2018, a group of leaders and activists of BNP and its front organisations led by Alal held demonstration in the city's Moghbazar area ahead of a judgment against Khaleda Zia, her elder son and BNP's then senior vice chairman Tarique Rahman and four others in the Zia Orphanage Trust graft case.

They also chanted slogans against the government, instigated destructive activities, obstructed movement of vehicles and prevented law enforcers from discharging their duties, the prosecution said.

Following the incident, Sub-Inspector of Ramna Model Police Station Abdul Kuddus filed a case against Alal, Shimul Biswas and 178 others in this connection.

After an investigation, police pressed charges against 90 people, including Alal, Tuku, Sohel and Shimul.

areas near Khan Yunis and Rafah after the military on Monday issued a sweeping evacuation order that the UN said impacted 250,000 people.

Witnesses reported air strikes and intense artillery shelling in western Rafah yesterday.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 38,011 people have been killed during nearly nine months of offensive. The toll includes at least 58 deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

US President Joe Biden, under growing domestic pressure over Washington's support for Israel, in late May outlined a roadmap for a six-week ceasefire and exchange of hostages for Palestinian prisoners held by Israel.

There has been little progress since, but Hamas said later on Wednesday it was communicating with officials in Qatar and Egypt as well as Turkey with an eye to ending the conflict.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was due to convene his security cabinet yesterday evening to discuss new Hamas positions on a possible ceasefire deal in Gaza, reports Reuters.

Before the cabinet meets, Netanyahu will have consultations with his ceasefire negotiations team, a source in Netanyahu's office said.

Israel received Hamas' response on Wednesday to a proposal made public at the end of May by Biden that would include the release of about 120 hostages held in Gaza and a ceasefire in the Palestinian enclave.

A Palestinian official close to the mediation effort told Reuters that Hamas has shown flexibility over some clauses, that would allow a framework agreement to be reached should Israel approve.

Univ teachers carry on strike

Though academic buildings remained open in most of the universities, students were hardly seen. Most classrooms and examination halls were locked.

Additionally, the university authorities either kept the transport service suspended or significantly reduced trips to and from campuses.

Teachers at the public universities said that they will continue their indefinite work abstention until their demands are met.

Teachers of 35 public universities under the banner of FBUTA have been refraining from work since Monday demanding reinstatement of the previous pension facilities instead of the newly introduced "Prottoy" scheme of the Universal Pension System.

They have been demonstrating against the government decision to include all officers and employees, joining the service of autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory, or similar organisations and their subordinate institutions on or after July 1 in the "Prottoy" pension scheme.

Teachers said the newly recruited teachers will suffer financial loss, and many will not take up teaching at universities if the new pension scheme is introduced. They also demanded a separate pay scale for university teachers and inclusion of professors in the pay grade equivalent to that of a senior secretary.

Messi, Ronaldo and plenty more

Messi had hurt his right hamstring and skipped Argentina's final Group A match against Peru, which the defending champions won 2-0 to qualify for the last eight as group champions.

Even if Messi ends up a no-show, Albiceleste fans will feel optimistic about their side's chances of progressing to the semifinals as the reigning world champions are playing like a well-oiled machine under long-serving coach Lionel Scaloni.

After watching some of the best football action South America has to offer, football fans are set to tune in at night to watch four heavyweights clashing in two high-stakes matches of the Euro Championship.

First up, two former World Cup and Euros champions, hosts Germany and Spain, will face off in Stuttgart at 10:00 pm.

Both teams topped their respective groups before Germany broke down a resolute Denmark to pick up a 2-0 win, while Spain came from behind to trounce Georgia 4-1 in their respective Round of 16 fixtures.

The weekend of fascinating football fixtures will end with Cristiano Ronaldo's Portugal taking on Kylian Mbappe's France in Hamburg, starting at 1:00 am.

2024 UK ELECTION

What do govts abroad want from UK polls ?

AGENCIES

The UK is not the diplomatic powerhouse it once was, with Brexit leaving it looking inward and years of economic failures meaning the Conservatives and Labour are both sidelining foreign policy in their campaign messaging. Still, leaders around the world will be taking an interest in the election. Here are some of the key issues:

RUSSIA AND UKRAINE

Kyiv is desperately fighting off the battlefield for money, weapons and diplomatic support and the backing of the next UK government could be critical. London still retains diplomatic sway in Europe and is a vocal member of Nato.

Stakes are high for the Ukrainian leader, Volodymyr Zelensky, as he faces the prospect of Donald Trump winning the US presidential election in November. Trump is expected to cut off US military support to Ukraine.

The Tories claim they have "led the world in support of Ukraine against Putin's aggression" and will continue to do so, but it is expected that Keir Starmer would be equally supportive of Kyiv if Labour came to power.

ISRAEL AND PALESTINE

In previous elections, Israeli governments would have probably favoured conservative candidates, who have traditionally followed Washington in near-unconditional backing of Israel over Palestine.

Starmer, however, could prove the exception to the rule as his policies on the occupation have been seen through the prism of the Labour party antisemitism scandal, which he promised to fix.

Whatever his personal views on the destruction of Gaza, Starmer has been criticised by party members for a Middle East stance that could be seen as more pro-Israel than that of the Tories. More than 38,011 Palestinians have been killed and 87,445 have been injured in Israeli military offensive on Gaza since October 7, reports Reuters.

For Palestinian officials, neither a Tory nor a Labour government will give hope for the radical policy change they have been calling for.

THE UNITED STATES

The White House is too focused on its own election to be concerned about the smaller half of the "special relationship". Joe Biden has maintained good ties with both Labour and Conservative politicians, although Trump has a soft spot for the more extreme, populist wing of the Tory party. Reform UK, led by Nigel Farage, has the most Trumpian politics of all the UK parties, playing up migration as a threat. Farage has previously joined Trump on campaign rallies.

CHINA

Relations between Beijing and London have nosedived under Conservative administrations. Sunak has said that "authoritarian" China, the world's second-largest economy, is the "greatest state-based threat to our economic security", reports The Guardian. Bejing's embassy in London condemned what it called Sunak's "malicious slander against China" and urged British politicians "to end their belligerent rhetoric" and "instead, focus more on domestic economic and social issues".

In a sense, that has happened, with Sunak largely avoiding international issues on the campaign trail. Still, Labour has not indicated any big policy shift in Asia. The party's manifesto promises its policy on China will be to "cooperate where we can, compete where we need to, and challenge where we must".

THE EUROPEAN UNION

As a supranational body, the political and economic union across Europe will be facing the prospect of the first non-conservative government in London since David Cameron called the referendum that led to Brexit.

All three big parties are seeking to improve their relationship with the EU, but Labour – and certainly the Liberal Democrats – may find that easier to achieve.

Senior Brussels sources said this week that while the EU leadership would welcome a change of UK government, it would not revise its Brexit red lines, but was open to improving existing agreements.

What has Labour promised to do if elected?

REUTERS, London

Britain's Labour Party was projected to win yesterday's national election with a large majority. Below are some of the party's main domestic policy plans, set out in its manifesto ahead of the July 4 vote:

ECONOMY

Labour has said sustained economic growth will be its first mission for government. Its plan focuses on wealth creation. It has said it will be "pro-business and pro-worker" and introduce a new industrial strategy, which will end short-term economic policy.

TAXES

It has pledged not to raise taxes "for working people", with no increase in the basic, higher, or additional rates of income tax, insurance, or VAT. It will cap corporation tax at the current level of 25 percent.

HEALTH, SOCIAL CARE

Labour plans to cut waiting times in the National Health Service by adding 40,000 more appointments every week. This will include incentivising staff to carry out extra appointments out of hours, pooling resources across neighbouring hospitals and using spare capacity in private sector.

IMMIGRATION

Labour has pledged to reduce net migration. It wants to reform points-based immigration system, by bringing in restrictions on visas and by training workers where there are domestic shortages.

SCO SUMMIT IN ASTANA

India, China FMs agree to work on border issues

REUTERS, New Delhi

India's Foreign Minister Subrahmanyam Jaishankar yesterday met his Chinese counterpart Wang Yi in Kazakhstan where the two agreed to step up talks to resolve issues along their border, New Delhi said in a statement.

India and China share a long Himalayan border, much of it poorly demarcated, and relations between the two countries have been sour since a military standoff in July 2020.

India said Jaishankar met Wang on the sidelines of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) summit in Astana where they agreed that "prolongation of the current situation in the border areas is not in the interest of either side."

The two agreed to enhance meetings between their diplomatic and military officials "to resolve the remaining issues at the earliest," the Indian foreign ministry said. China and India should properly handle their differences and ensure relations advance on a stable track, a Chinese foreign ministry statement quoted Wang as saying during the talks.

"We must maintain a positive mindset, properly handle and control the situation in the border areas on the one hand, and actively resume normal exchanges on the other hand," Wang said. Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi said in April that the two countries should urgently address the "prolonged situation" on their border.

Modi to visit Russia for talks with Putin on July 8-9

AFP, Moscow

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi will visit Russia on July 8 and 9, the Kremlin said yesterday, in his first trip to the country since Moscow launched its military offensive in Ukraine.

That campaign has tested relations between Moscow and New Delhi, even though India has ramped up its purchases of Russian oil and not joined Western sanctions.

Modi and Russian President Vladimir Putin will discuss "prospects for further development of traditionally friendly Russian-Indian relations, as well as relevant issues on the international and regional agenda," the Kremlin said in a statement.

Putin sees Modi as a key potential diplomatic and economy ally, with Russia isolated in the West. But Ukraine has complicated ties.

In a September 2022 meeting between Putin and Modi at a regional summit in Uzbekistan, the Russian president told Modi he understood he had "concerns" about the conflict and that Modi wanted it to end "as soon as possible."

Earlier this year, India said it was pushing Russia to release some of its citizens who had signed up for "support jobs" with the Russian army, following reports some were stranded in Russian border towns and forced to fight in Ukraine.

New Delhi has not been a staunch backer of Kyiv, notably declining to sign a joint statement at a peace summit in Switzerland last month that called for Ukraine's territorial integrity to be respected in any peace agreement.

the case, accusing Enamul of amassing Tk 9.76 crore, which is inconsistent with his income and beyond his known sources of income.

According to the case statement, the accused bought land, flats, and commercial spaces at 64 places for Tk 21.52 crore between 1993 and 2022. He had gold ornaments, savings, and investment in share market, and fish farm worth Tk 58.32 lakh.

In another development, the same court directed the authorities to confiscate four flats and 866 decimals of immovable assets of Matiur Rahman, former member of the National Board of Revenue, and his family members over graft allegations.

The properties are in the capital's Bashundhara Residential Area and Dhanmondi, Barishal's Muladi, and Narsingdi's Raipura.

The family members are Matiur's wife Laila Kaniz Lucky, also upazila chairman of Narsingdi's Raipura; his son Ahmed Taufiqur Rahman Arnob; daughter Farzana Rahman Ipshita; and second wife Shammi Akhter Sheuly.

Judge Joglul Hossain made the order after ACC Deputy Director Md Anowar Hossain, also the inquiry officer, submitted a petition, said an ACC lawyer.

Anti-graft body Public Prosecutor Mir Ahmed Ali Salam moved the application on behalf of the graft watchdog.

In the appeal, the ACC said Matiur, former president of NBR's Customs, Excise and VAT Appellate Tribunal, amassed hundred crores of illegal money. He and his family members were trying to hand over their properties. So, an order is needed to stop their move.

The ACC has formed a three-member committee to enquire into the allegations.

On June 24, the same court issued a travel ban on Matiur, his wife Lucky, and son Taufiqur.

Graft suspects getting promoted in civil service

It should be demonstrated before the public that not all government officials are corrupt and that the government is taking visible steps to combat corruption.

The two-hour-long meeting was presided over by Cabinet Secretary Mahbub Hossain and attended by most of the 83 secretaries.

Even though government-sponsored foreign trips are currently suspended, "mid-level officers are making frequent foreign trips in the name of pre-shipment inspection of goods. And it must stop", said a source.

Additional secretaries and above have to get permission from the Prime Minister's Office to travel abroad. "But joint secretaries and those below them need permission from the ministry concerned. That's why the number of foreign trips has been surging," the source added.

The bureaucrats unanimously agreed to submit their wealth statements as per the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules, 1979, another secretary present at the meeting told this newspaper.

There should be a cell to monitor whether officers are submitting their wealth statements. The cabinet division, public administration, legislative division, and National Board of Revenue will decide how the cell will function, they said.

It is common knowledge among bureaucrats that many officers do not come up with their wealth statement every five years as per the conduct rules.

There were also talks of whether such statements should be required every year, sources said.

Since Covid-19, all the ministries were asked to take steps to maintain austerity to keep the economy afloat, but no visible steps have been taken so far, said another secretary.

In a circular yesterday, the finance ministry called for lowering expenses by ministries, state agencies, and public corporations.

Briefing reporters after the meeting, Cabinet Secretary Mahbub said the conduct rules were being updated.

Flood victims need urgent support

Govt must ensure adequate food and shelter for them

It is worrying to see the flood situation in northern districts, especially in Kurigram, worsen due to continuous rainfall and onrush of water from upstream. According to a report by this daily, vast low-lying areas have been inundated due to the rise in the water levels of Teesta, Brahmaputra, Dharla, and Dudhkumar rivers. In Kurigram, along the Brahmaputra, some 450 chars and low-lying areas have been flooded, leaving an estimated 50,000 stranded. This is a fluid situation as the water level is projected to continue rising before it recedes. What this means for the affected and at-risk populations is that they have a dual crisis in hand—flooding and erosion—which demands proper attention from the authorities.

The evolving situation with the simultaneous rise and fall in water levels at different river points, and consequent erosion along their coast, is something that the authorities should be observing closely, considering the intensity of such events in recent years. But the immediate priority, of course, is to ensure proper relief efforts. Reports indicate a significant gap between the needs of the affected and available aid. Many flood victims are struggling without adequate relief supplies. Lack of shelter is another major issue, especially in parts of Lalmonirhat and Kurigram where floodwater is showing a falling trend. According to a report, erosion is active at 20 points in five upazilas of the two districts. As a result, many villagers there are taking shelter on government khas lands, roads, boats, or embankments. Ensuring that relief materials, including food, clean water, and medical supplies, promptly reach them all is imperative.

The increasingly frequent cycle of flooding and erosion in Bangladesh also demands a proper response from the higher authorities. There is a clear need for more resilient infrastructure in flood-prone areas that doesn't make people so helpless, or destitute overnight. While erosions occur every year, its growing trend, especially along the Ganges, Jamuna, Padma, and Lower Meghna rivers, highlights the urgency of more comprehensive and long-term interventions, such as enhancing drainage systems, constructing sufficient flood shelters, reinforcing embankments with durable materials, and regulating river flows.

In short, the government's approach needs to be twofold: immediate stabilisation of the most critical areas and the development of a comprehensive, sustainable plan to mitigate the impacts of future floods. For now, it must direct local authorities to improve their response to the evolving situation in northern districts. Besides ensuring sufficient relief materials in flood-hit villages, particularly those in remote locations, they should also consider deploying additional resources and personnel to manage the crisis more effectively.

We must stop abuse of public offices

Expedite justice process, apply strict measures to root out corruption

The narratives of corruption coming out of public offices nowadays would defeat any movie script. The slyness of tactics that corrupt officials often use to misappropriate public funds and then exempt themselves from legal consequences would shock anyone. The alleged shenanigans of Cox's Bazar's former deputy commissioner Ruhul Amin to exonerate himself from corruption charges is a case in point.

According to a Prothom Alo report, in 2014, Amin, along with 27 others, had been charged for misappropriating approximately Tk 20 crore in the land accusation process of a power plant project in Matarbari of Maheskhali. Taking the case into cognisance, the court ordered the Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) to investigate it. But several court officials, including the then District and Sessions Judge Sadiqul Islam Talukdar, allegedly colluded with Amin to delete his name from the list of accused in case documents and forged the plaintiff's signature before sending the documents to the ACC. When the plaintiff learned about the alleged forgery, he filed another case against Amin and seven others, including the judge and his own lawyer. The ACC found proof of forgery subsequently and filed the investigation report with the court on Monday—10 years after the case was filed.

In 2017, Ruhul Amin, suspended from office by then, was sentenced to jail in another corruption case in relation to land acquisition for the Matarbari power plant. The case was about misappropriation of compensation funds allocated for shrimp farms affected by the acquisition, which was apparently done by showing 25 non-existent shrimp farms on paper. Amin and several others were accused but they are all currently on bail in that case.

The extent of the abuse of office in Amin's story starts from the land acquisition process and climbs all the way up to the court, the ultimate place of trust for ordinary citizens. But if a DC can use his power to influence even a judge and forge case documents, who would the public turn to for justice? This fits with the ongoing trends of lack of accountability mechanisms in public institutions, lenient and protective provisions for government employees, collusion among public officers to cover up each other's wrongdoings, lengthy judicial processes, etc.—which are all equally troubling as they make a mockery of rule of law. We must break these trends. Abuse of public offices for any personal gain, legal or financial, must be prevented at any cost.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Israel's Law of Return passed

Passed this day in 1950 by the Knesset, the Law of Return granted Jews the freedom to immigrate to Israel and receive immediate citizenship, but it proved controversial when the question "Who is a Jew?" raised other issues.

'Govt should not be swayed by the opinion of an extremist minority'

In light of the recent removal of 'Sharifa's Tale' from the seventh-grade textbook, Maheen Sultan, senior fellow of Practice, Gender and Social Transformation at BRAC Institute of Governance and Development (BIGD), shares her insights with* Tamanna Khan of The Daily Star on an ongoing study on the backlash against promoting comprehensive sexuality education (CSE) in Bangladesh.

What led you to explore the resistance against comprehensive sexuality education?

All over the world, we have been noticing a backlash against the progress made by the women's movement to ensure women's rights and gender equality, and measures taken by the government to protect and promote them. Our research team is part of a regional programme which includes four South Asian countries—India, Pakistan, Nepal and Bangladesh. In each country, we have chosen different case studies in areas where we think there has been very strong opposition to what women's movements are trying to achieve. For example, we looked at the case of rape law reform, child marriage, struggle for decent wages in the RMG sector and CSE as well.

The latest controversy with the Sharif-Sharifa text shows that teaching CSE is still a sensitive matter. Opposition to CSE is always not as visible or outspoken as it was in this case. However, it is very evident that teachers do not want to teach the curriculum, parents are often resistant, and people sometimes stigmatise teachers who teach these courses. There is a collective reluctance to talk about issues which go beyond health. Most people do not want to talk about issues surrounding sexual health, sexuality or access to contraception. They keep the discussions limited to reproductive health instead of talking about sexual and reproductive health and rights.

What's your reaction to the removal of "Sharifa's Tale" from the national curriculum?

Including Sharifa's story in the curriculum, I think, was a very positive step to try and introduce the concepts surrounding gender diversity. It was a well-researched piece of text. The idea was that students should be aware of the various gender identities and be more open to others who find themselves unable to fit into the binary identities of "boy" or "girl". The hope was that that teachers would introduce the topic sympathetically and sensitively.

The government in its policies is very open to sexual and reproductive health and rights (SRHR) and is committed to including CSE in the curriculum. However, it is sometimes scared of the reaction of people that it considers extremists. And often, it is only the most conservative people who get heard on social media. They have been loud enough for the authorities to hear them, but they might still be a minority in this matter. Most people might not have any issues with the text. So, the question remains whether the government should be swayed by the opinions of a small extremist minority. People who have been opposing the text have said that it promotes homosexuality. This is a clear misrepresentation of the message of the story. Unfortunately, the government was influenced by this kind of reaction. I believe that the committee which took the final decision in this matter did not include a wide range of people with a diverse set of opinions. If more people had been consulted, perhaps the committee wouldn't have recommended removing the story from the curriculum.

Do organisations working to promote CSE receive threats of violence?

BRAC, Naripokkho, and Nagorik Uddyog are all part of the Right Here Right Now coalition that promotes CSE in schools and increased access to adolescent health services. The coalition also contributes to changing social and gender norms by developing influencers and mobilising the youth to interact with the local government authorities, teachers and schools to promote CSE. It has been very careful in not exposing the youth volunteers to any kind of risks. In their outreach programmes, they talk about reproductive health education and topics like menstrual health regulation, and access to services. They don't go around talking about sexual orientation and gender identity. Those topics are avoided because they know that they might face very strong reactions from the community, the authorities and the schools.

However, organisations that are more explicitly dealing with sexual orientation and gender identity have to be very careful. A lot of misinformation was spread on social media following the Sharif-Sharifa debacle. Both individuals and organisations were labelled and threatened for their work on sexual orientation and gender identity.

Unfortunately, there's not much legal recourse available for such hate crimes and cyber harassment, which have detrimental effects on activists' physical and mental well-being. Citizens don't usually file cases under the Cyber Security Act for fear of not protecting their privacy and personal data.

Why is it important to talk about CSE?

It is important because there is so much misinformation surrounding the issue. Adolescence is a period of life when young people are curious about their bodies. It is a period when they are discovering themselves and others, and they need to have access to the right kind of information regarding their sexuality and reproductive health. They need to know how to protect themselves. They need to understand the concept of consent and their rights to decide with whom, if and when to have a relationship, as well as the kind of relationship to have.

Another reason why CSE is so important and urgent is that we still have very high rates of child marriage. Early marriages lead to early pregnancies because young women don't have access to birth control and are discouraged from using it. Oftentimes, these pregnancies are unwanted and they resort to unsafe abortions.

When they cannot get abortions, they have to go through the process of childbirth when their bodies and minds are not ready for it. This leads to increased rates of maternal and child mortality. So, there are severe health-related consequences as well of ignoring CSE.

What is the way out?

Parents have to be involved in the process, so that they do not resist when their children receive CSE. If they understand what it is about, they are more likely to want schools to teach it. This would also lead to the eventual phasing out of the stigma surrounding the issue.

It is also important that youth leaders and volunteers with correct information and proper knowledge reach out to other young people. I think the youth are more likely to talk and listen to others in their age group. They will face fewer barriers there. Youth volunteers can also educate adults in their community to destigmatise the issue of CSE.

> There is a collective reluctance to talk about issues which go beyond health. Most people do not want to talk about issues surrounding sexual health, sexuality or access to contraception. They keep the discussions limited to reproductive health instead of talking about sexual and reproductive health and rights.

Can teachers use respect as a substitute for money?

READERS' VOICE

"You are teachers. Shouldn't you be satisfied with the respect you get from students in classrooms? Why are you on the streets, running after money?" This a common statement we are being bombarded with from people of other professions following the teachers' strike, which makes us uncomfortable and surprised at the same time.

Coming from a family where my father is a retired administrative officer of a public university, and my brother is an assistant professor at a college, my one and only dream was to be a teacher. I never sat for the BCS exams or worked in any sector except education, because all I wanted to do was spread the little knowledge I acquired from my teachers, and to learn more from my students.

I remember my father and my brother whom I never saw leading a luxurious life, driving a fancy car, or living in a bungalow; and that, I knew from childhood, is the way of life of a middle-class family. As a teacher, I started in the ninth grade, and the salary I received was barely enough to maintain a family of two. In fact, I had to ask for money from my family, even though I was living alone. That is when I realised how necessities most often become luxuries to the family of a teacher.

Many teachers from different public universities, including my friends and colleagues, are pursuing higher degrees abroad, which is needed for further promotions at their workplaces. The financial struggle a lecturer or assistant professor faces even after getting fully funded scholarships—from applying to different international universities to buying plane tickets—is almost never understood by others because, according to many, the passion for learning should be paying the bills!

The questions that come to mind are, why should we feel embarrassed for wanting a secure financial future? Why are we being trolled for asking for a salary without any deduction? Why are we being mocked for supporting the existing pension scheme?

Yes, we have already accepted that our policymakers assume that we do not need a fancy car or a bungalow with numerous domestic help. All we want is to be financially secure after our retirement and for our nominees to feel safe when the pensioner is no more. Isn't that the bare minimum we are asking for?

It shouldn't come as a surprise that the respect we receive does not pay our bills, nor does it allow us to bargain a lower fare with a CNG driver. The admiration and nobility of this profession alone cannot ensure a secure future for our next generation. And, sure, it does not suit "honourable" teachers to be on the streets month after month to regain the minimum rights they had. If it is too difficult to grant us what we deserve, may we use our "passion for learning," "respect for teaching," and "our dignity" as a substitute payment method, please?

The incredible 'goatness' of being

NO STRINGS ATTACHED

Aasha Mehreen Amin
is joint editor at The Daily Star.

AASHA MEHREEN AMIN

The saga of a Tk 15 lakh goat with an impressive pedigree, followed by the unfolding of the jaw-dropping accumulation of wealth of an NBR official, may make us rethink our derisive attitude toward this misunderstood animal. I mean the goat, of course.

After all, we cannot deny that in Bangalee culture, we often refer to people who do dumb things as a "chhagol" (goat), going as far as calling someone the offspring of a goat (chhagoler bachcha), a term lost in translation: in English, it would be calling someone a "kid" (baby goat), which does not carry the same degree of humiliation.

We may have to rethink our "goat dismissiveness".

The town is abuzz about how the astronomical price of a goat the size of a small horse led to the opening of a gigantic can of worms and, for the media, a treasure trove of sensational stories. It was the son of the mysterious NBR member who had spilled the first beans that led to the revelation of his father's enormous real estate acquisitions and piles of cash made from shares. Like a typical rich spoilt brat, he made the mistake of bragging about the Tk 15 lakh goat he had acquired at a bargain price of Tk 12 lakh. A video clip of this went viral on social media, leading to intense speculations about the source of his father's wealth. The NBR official was eventually transferred to a post in another ministry as a reprimand for the embarrassment he caused his organisation, one presumes.

The Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) is investigating allegations of corruption against the official whose basic salary was Tk 78,000 a month. According to media reports, the person under investigation and his family's wealth include luxury resorts, a shooting spot and multiple bungalows. A report by The Daily Star reveals he also has three crore shares in at least 10 companies. He even talked about his success in the stock market in an earlier TV interview, surprisingly revealing that he had inside information about these companies, which is a violation of capital market regulations.

The goat incident also sparked off quite a bit of family drama when the official against whom these allegations were made initially claimed that the young man was not his son (just like the Michael Jackson song "Billie Jean") naming only the two children from his first wife. The media reported that the young goat connoisseur was his second wife's son. While he may have reacted badly to the stupidity of his offspring for exposing him, albeit unintentionally, it cannot be denied that he has been a generous father giving him a bevy of fancy cars and enough cash to allow him to buy 50-plus lakh taka worth of sacrificial animals, which obviously he also bragged about and was gleefully reported by the media.

He is also, no doubt, a generous husband considering the queenly lifestyle of his first wife, a retired government college teacher and upazila parishad chairman who lives in a white, two-storied mansion in Raipura and has even managed to get the road that leads to her home named after herself, according to a Daily Star report.

In fact, all the highly placed public officials against whom there are allegations of acquiring illegal wealth through dubious means (corruption is such a boring, overused word these days) seem to be ultra-devoted to their families. They buy luxury flats and resorts for their wives and children and go as far as bestowing lavish "gifts" upon their in-laws. Another official the ACC is investigating bought Tk 30 lakh and Tk 29 lakh worth of saving certificates for his father-in-law and brother-in-law, respectively. Meanwhile, his mother-in-law, a homemaker, has 10 bank accounts with transactions amounting to Tk 7 crore, as detected by ACC, no doubt thanks to her charming son-in-law. Now who wouldn't want a "jamai" like that?

These individuals are also champions of local tourism, building luxury resorts in the unlikeliest of places on acres and acres of land, giving the fun-starved public a nice place to go to. Sure, some of them may have forcefully taken away the lands of the poor and marginalised, but one must look at the bigger picture and see the bigness of their hearts (and wallets) that have given us these beautiful spots to visit.

The series of reports on the unaccounted-for wealth accumulation of public officials, some being the top bosses of very important government entities, gives the impression that the state's "zero tolerance for corruption" policy is finally in action. Maybe, but one cannot help but be a little sceptical of the official repercussions these individuals have faced—transfers to a different ministry, or a slight demotion to a lower grade, which seem a mere slap in the wrist for what would be considered a serious crime. The ACC, meanwhile, seems to be the lone hero in this saga—investigating the cases, freezing assets and accounts and sharing its juicy findings with a hungry media. Oh, and of course, let's not forget the unlikely heroes like our giant, magnificent goat which has definitely given these neglected animals a far more elevated status than ever before.

Heroes and villains of the climate crisis

ZAIN OMAR ALI AND BAREESH HASAN CHOWDHURY

In Alexander Ward's book The Internationalists, there is an account of a debate between the United States Special Presidential Envoy for Climate John Kerry and National Security Advisor Jake Sullivan on how the United States should address the issue of China in climate negotiations. Kerry argues that America and China must cooperate. Sullivan disagrees—they should focus on "boxing China out" and make deals with other countries. Sullivan argues that they should instead present China as the main climate villain, and force them to the negotiating table on US' terms.

Economist Raghuram Rajan recently wrote an article for the Financial Times in the aftermath of the Indian elections, arguing that the Modi administration's focus on expanding manufacturing is misguided: "The world does not have political or climatic room for another China-sized economy exporting manufactured goods." Notably, the lack of room is both "political" and "climatic". The unspoken "political" factor here is the recent American anxiety around Chinese overcapacity—G7 economies are worried about losing advanced manufacturing capacity to competitors in all emerging markets (not just China).

The "climatic" factor brings us back to the question of climate justice.

Who is the real "climate villain?"

Historical emissions and global inequality

How can one measure climate villainy? If we were to take annual carbon emissions, then the primary villain is very clear—it is the People's Republic of China, followed by the United States of America. If we measure "climate villainy" on this scale then one can even present the US as a relative "climate hero"—it's an example of a large, high-population economy that can sustain a higher quality of life than China while producing fewer emissions. Thanks to the radical green agenda in Biden's Inflation Reduction Act (glowingly endorsed by progressives) and the visionary entrepreneurialism of Elon Musk, it will be the US that saves the world from the climate crisis, just as it saves the world from every crisis.

This is the story US progressives would like to tell—of the climate hero America saving the world from the climate villain China.

The problem with looking only at annual carbon emissions is that carbon has accumulated over time. The climate crisis is not caused by present-day emissions, it is caused by the sum total of historical emissions. Once we account for the issue of historical emissions, we confront the heart of the matter: the benefits of historical carbon consumption are restricted to a small handful of advanced economies, former Warsaw Pact countries and Gulf Arab petrostates, but the costs have to be borne by us all.

Consider the figure given, taken from a Nature Sustainability paper by climate scientist Jason Hickel:

The y-axis shows the cumulative GDP per capita from 1960-2018. The x-axis measures how much each country has overshot or undershot the global carbon budget needed to restrict warming to 1.5 degrees Celsius, relative to a hypothetical world where historical carbon consumption was divided equally according to population—a value of 1 represents a country that has consumed exactly its fair share of global carbon.

A striking pattern emerges almost immediately—almost 70 percent of cross-national differences in cumulative per capita GDP can be explained solely by differences in cumulative emissions over time. Thus, it is impossible to disentangle the issue of global inequality from historical carbon emissions. With the exception of primarily the Gulf petrostates, the entirety of the Global South is in the bottom left of the chart, coloured in green. The figure ends in 2018, rapid economic development in the intervening period has since caused China to slightly overshoot its fair share. But the main climate villain when we take historical emissions into account is very clear—it is the US.

Liability vs generosity

The solution to the problem of historical emissions is quite straightforward—Global North (red in the graph) countries owe liability payments to Global South (green) countries for exceeding their fair shares of the atmospheric commons. This would enable emissions reductions while still allowing for "catch-up" growth in the Global South, and help solve long-standing issues of global inequality. COP would be the ideal venue to negotiate these payments.

However, the topic of liability payments at COP is consistently blocked by the Western negotiating bloc, particularly the US. The concept of Common but Differentiated Responsibility (CBDR) was enshrined into international climate law in the Paris Agreement to acknowledge the issue of historical emissions but is under attack every year from Western nations. CBDR acknowledges that while all countries must act on climate change, the nature of our responsibilities is different and corresponds to our historic emissions. This framework is essential to protecting every sovereign nation's inherent human right to development. It is also essential to preserve as we pursue climate justice. Jake Sullivan's strategy for climate negotiations with China suggests that senior American policymakers have abandoned it completely, choosing instead to use climate politics to suppress economic development in Global South competitors.

Let us return to Raghuram Rajan's prescriptions for the Indian economy. "Climatic" factors are only a barrier to industrial development in India if we take the US position that only present-day emissions matter in determining climate responsibility.

A historical emissions framework gives countries in the Global South room to grow and to reach some kind of parity in economic prosperity with the advanced economies. Liability payments offer a mechanism to achieve that parity.

By now I hope the readers can fully comprehend the dark motivations behind the consistent blocking of liability payments at COP. We should recognise this for what it is—an attempt by the Global North to use the climate crisis to lock in current patterns of global inequality and maintain their position of privilege in the commanding heights of the world economy. In the context of China, it was even to be used as a way to neutralise an economic competitor.

We speak of Bangladesh in terms of "climate vulnerability". This is how the Global North would like to see us, as "vulnerable" people who exist only to be saved by their generosity and benevolence. This is the language of NGOs and aid dependency. This language also directs us away from the issue of liability payments that we are owed by the Global North. The climate crisis was not caused by Bangladesh, but the lives it claims will be disproportionately from Bangladesh. When you are not owed liability, you can only be grateful for generosity. We need to break out of this paradigm.

Look again at the figure given.Don't look at it through the lens of personal self-sacrifice and bleeding-heart activism. Don't look at it through the eyes of NGOs. Look at it through the lens of your material self-interest. The emergence of China as a peer competitor to the United States creates the scope for the formation of a counter-hegemonic Global South bloc that can exercise coercion on Global North countries to demand liability payments and an acceptance of the historical emissions framework. In the present moment, this is the clearest path forward to climate justice.

LAW VISION

Challenges and prospects of enforcing foreign decrees in Bangladesh

SHISHIR MANIR

The recognition of foreign decree is essential for fostering cross-border trade and investment and protecting the rights of foreign investors in Bangladesh. Recognition of foreign decree contributes to building confidence in foreign traders and acts as a deterrent to borrowers who attempt to dishonor their obligations towards the creditors or evade the jurisdiction upon default.

In today's globalised world order, cross-border transactions and consequent disputes have been a common phenomenon. Bangladesh as a developing country has witnessed the same in recent years. The disputes that ensue from cross-border transactions are dealt with in foreign courts. The decree thus awarded can then be executed in the native country of the parties. The Code of Civil Procedure 1908 (CPC) defines foreign court and foreign decree in sections 2(5) and 2(6), respectively. Essentially, foreign decree means a decree of a foreign court and a foreign court means a court established outside the jurisdiction of Bangladesh. This article delves into the challenges and prospects of enforcing foreign court decrees in Bangladesh taking into account the legal framework and the practical realities of the country.

Bangladesh lacks an exhaustive legislation on the enforcement of foreign decrees. At present the process is governed by the CPC. Sections 13, 14, and 44A of the CPC deal with the process of execution of foreign decrees in Bangladesh. Section 13 points out six exceptions when foreign decrees will not be conclusive. Additionally, section 14 ensures the presumption of competency of the foreign courts unless the contrary appears on the records. Section 44A stipulates the process of executing a decree of a reciprocating country in Bangladesh if it does not fall within the exceptions specified in section 13.

The rule of conclusiveness of foreign decree is founded upon the principle of sanctity of decrees. Where a foreign court of competent jurisdiction has adjudicated upon a claim, a legal obligation arises to satisfy that claim in the country where the decree needs to be enforced. The general rule is that the native court shall presume that the decree is awarded by a court of competent jurisdiction upon the production of a certified copy of a foreign decree. However, this presumption must follow two pre-conditions. First, the decree is pronounced by a superior court of the reciprocating countries of Bangladesh. Hence, the foreign decree of non-reciprocating countries is not executable in Bangladesh. Before enforcing a foreign decree, a reciprocating agreement with that country is required.

Next, the judgment must survive the exceptions outlined in section 13 of the Code. If the judgment fulfills these two preconditions, then the executing court shall presume that the judgment is given by a court of competent jurisdiction and it shall be executable in Bangladesh. The foreign decree will fall into res judicata under section 11 of CPC if the decree has been previously awarded by a Bangladeshi court.

Generally, the recognition and enforcement of foreign decrees takes place in two ways. First, by instituting an execution proceeding as mentioned in section 44A of the CPC. The party enforcing the foreign decree has to file a suit in line with the subject matter in the Court of District Judge for the execution of the foreign decree and submit a certified copy of the decree in support of an application for recognition and enforcement of a foreign decree. Second, by instituting a fresh suit on such foreign decree. Where a decree is not of a superior court of a reciprocating territory, a suit has to be instituted in a court of competent jurisdiction in Bangladesh.

The general principle of law is that any decision of a foreign court, tribunal, or any other quasi-judicial authority is not enforceable in a country unless such decision is embodied in a decree of a court of that country. Moreover, the limitation period for enforcing the foreign judgment has been specified in the Limitation Act 1908. Article 117 of the First Schedule of the Act stipulates that an action to enforce a foreign decree shall commence within six years of the date on which the foreign decree was pronounced. The decree will be executed per section 51 of the Code.

Inadequate legal framework and lack of clarity pose a great challenge towards enforcing foreign decrees in Bangladesh. Bangladesh should enact a specific legislation on this matter similar to the Foreign Judgment Enforcement Act 1933 of the UK. There are some practical difficulties too. Excessive delays, bureaucratic red tapism, and corruption beat the process and hinder efficient and timely enforcement of foreign decrees. Moreover, no specialised courts or tribunals exist on this matter in Bangladesh. The unavailability of the list of reciprocating countries of Bangladesh is another glaring example of complete disregard of the responsible authority.

In sum, the recognition of foreign decree is essential for fostering cross-border trade and investment and protecting the rights of foreign investors in Bangladesh. Recognition of foreign decree contributes to building confidence in foreign traders and acts as a deterrent to borrowers who attempt to dishonor their obligations towards the creditors or evade the jurisdiction upon default. Despite the challenges, there is still room for improvement. By reforming the legal framework, establishing specialised courts, and advancing international cooperation, Bangladesh can overcome the obstacles and create an effective and efficient system for enforcing foreign decrees.

DETANGLING LAWS

Navigating jurisdictional complexities in the Anwarul Azim murder case

FARJANA YESMIN

Recently, there has been significant press coverage in Bangladesh and India regarding the heinous murder of Bangladeshi Member of Parliament Anwarul Azim in India. The majority of the accused individuals are of Bangladeshi origin and have been apprehended in Bangladesh. However, the primary culprit, who happens to be a Bangladeshi American, escaped to the United States. Therefore, three countries are now involved with this case, prompting a discussion on jurisdiction over crimes in international context.

Section 3 of the Penal Code of Bangladesh establishes the principle of extraterritorial jurisdiction, asserting that the Code applies to any person liable, by any Bangladeshi law, who commits an offence outside the country as if the act had been committed within Bangladesh. This provision allows Bangladeshi authorities to prosecute its nationals for offences committed abroad. Moreover, the Passive Nationality principle is a doctrine that confers a state with the authority to prosecute specific crimes committed beyond its borders against its citizens by individuals who are not citizens of that state. Essentially, it grants a country the authority to pursue legal action for offences committed against its citizens, even if such offences took place beyond its borders. Bangladesh can invoke this doctrine to assert jurisdiction over the offender since the victim is Bangladeshi.

India would likely have primary jurisdiction because the crimes were committed within its territory. According to section 2 of the Indian Penal Code, anyone who performs an action or fails to perform an action that is against the rules of the code will be subject to penalty. In this context, any individual who commits an offence is held accountable for punishment regardless of their nationality, social status, caste, or religious beliefs. The sole prerequisite for incriminating an individual under this section is that they must engage in the act or omission within the geographical boundaries of India. Therefore, a non-native individual who commits an offence within the borders of the country cannot claim unfamiliarity with the legal system of India.

Again, the principle of territoriality is the dominant principle of criminal jurisdiction that allows states to exercise jurisdiction over crimes committed on their territory. Moreover, the principle of subjective territorial jurisdiction allows states to exercise legal authority over actions initiated within their territory but completed or having effects elsewhere.

The United States v Yousef (1996) is a pivotal case demonstrating the application of the subjective territorial principle in criminal law. The court upheld the conviction of Ramzi Ahmed Yousef, a mastermind behind the 1993 World Trade Center bombing and the Bojinka plot. Despite Yousef's argument that much of his planning and preparatory actions occurred outside the United States, the court affirmed US jurisdiction based on the principle of subjective territorial jurisdiction. This case is significant as it reinforced the ability of the United States to prosecute international terrorists whose actions, though initiated abroad, have direct and harmful consequences within the US borders.

Therefore, while India has clear territorial jurisdiction over crimes committed within its borders, Bangladesh may also have an interest based on the nationality of the principal accused and the victim. On the other hand, the primary assailant and alleged mastermind of the crime escaped to the United States. It is imperative to bring him and ensure his presence for trial to conduct a thorough investigation and uphold justice. Obtaining custody of him in Bangladesh will be challenging since there is no extradition treaty between Bangladesh and the USA. However, the current extradition relationship between India with the USA gives them an advantageous position in apprehending the culprit. Even if the offender flees to Bangladesh, India may request extradition under the extradition treaty between India and Bangladesh. Bangladesh would then need to decide whether to extradite or prosecute the accused under its laws.

In conclusion, the complex case surrounding the murder of Anwarul Azim in India has brought to light intricate jurisdictional challenges involving multiple countries. While Bangladesh asserts extraterritorial jurisdiction over offences committed by its citizens abroad, India maintains primary jurisdiction due to the location of the crimes. The application of principles such as the Passive Nationality principle and Subjective Territorial Jurisdiction further complicates the matter, highlighting the need for careful analysis and diplomatic cooperation.

LAW IN DENIAL

Genocide, denial, and Gaza

SADIKA NOUSHEEN

Genocide denial is deeply rooted in socio-political, and historical complexities and manifests in many forms across instances like the Armenian, Holocaust, Roman, Rwandan, Bangladesh, and Rohingya genocides, to name a few. The genocide unfolding in Gaza is live streamed before the world and yet its continuance is being vehemently denied by Israel and its allies.

Gregory Stanton, founder and President of Genocide Watch, argues that genocide is a complex process that unfolds across ten predictable but non-linear stages (often occurring simultaneously), where preventive actions at any stage can halt its progression. Even though argued as "the final stage" of genocide, "denial" is a continuous process that happens before, during, and after persecution. Understanding it is essential as it indicates that more atrocities will continue.

Genocide denialism has a deep-rooted connection with the narratives of groups that justify harmful beliefs, perpetuates prejudices, distorts historical facts, and misrepresents social realities. Stanley Cohen, sociologist and criminologist, argues that "the social conditions that give rise to atrocities merge into the official techniques for denying these realities—not just to observers, but even to the perpetrators themselves." This denial includes outright rejection of information, disputing the significance of events, minimising responsibility, shifting blame to victims, moral disengagement to justify dehumanisation, and fostering belligerent violence in disguise of defense.

The textbook example of the above is unfolding in the context of Gaza. Denial is exhibited in the Israeli government's use of jargon of International Humanitarian Law to justify genocide, as identified by Special Rapporteur Francesca Albanese. Concepts such as "human shields", "collateral damage" and "proportionality" are distorted and misused to justify actions in Gaza. Articles 48 and 52 of Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions mandate attacks to be limited to military targets. Specific military advantage must be weighed against foreseeable civilian harms. Article 51(5)(b) emphasises proportionality, disallowing attacks where civilian harm is excessive relative to military advantage. By accusing Palestinian armed groups of using civilians as human shields, Israel justified disproportionate killings and infrastructure destruction. The concept of collateral damage was misused to justify indiscriminate attacks as intentional harms. By twisting legal language, Israel blurred the distinction between civilians and combatants, portraying the entire population as legitimate military targets, and proceeded to obliterate the people of Gaza.

Following the US university protests, the US House of Representatives has gone on to pass a bill that would expand the federal definition of antisemitism potentially curtailing freedom of speech. The recent amendment to the State Department Foreign Operations and Related Programs Appropriations Act of 2025 prohibits US officials from using agency funding to cite any casualty figures provided by the Gaza Ministry of Health, which is often the sole source of information about the situation on the ground in Gaza. Hence, it can be argued that Israel's biggest ally, the US, has further institutionalised the genocide denial in the context of Gaza.

While the internet makes literal denial tough, in many instances, it intensifies the process. Big data regimes create filter bubbles, isolating individuals in ideological echo chambers, and reinforcing biases, particularly evident in narratives about Palestine. Tech companies wield immense control over content dissemination, potentially prioritising propaganda aligned with certain ideologies, leading to censorship of dissenting opinions and news, threatening freedom of speech. Among tech giants, Meta has been accused of censoring Palestinian voices through arbitrary content removal, suspension of accounts, and restriction of certain accounts' reaches and visibilities, without explanation or notification (i.e., shadow banning).

Genocide denialism constitutes a form of dehumanisation and oppression by creating conditions that coerce the narratives into silence. Questioning genocide denialism is crucial as it upholds the dominant group's narrative, affects the oppressed, and hinders both genocide prevention and justice for the victims. In Palestine, denial of genocide perpetuates systematic inequality and historical oppression through settler colonialism, continuing intergenerational discrimination since 1948.

Toughest task yet for Spain

AGENCIES

- This will be the fourth meeting between Germany and Spain at the Euros. Spain hold the edge having won in 1984 and the 2008 final, while Germany clinched the contest in the 1988 edition.
- Spain are unbeaten in their last four major tournament matches against Germany (W2 D2).
- Germany went through to the semifinals in 15 of their 19 quarterfinals at major tournaments (World Cup and Euro), including wins in all four last eight appearances at the Euros (1996, 2008, 2012, 2016).
- No host nation has ever been eliminated in the quarterfinals of the Euros.
- Spain have scored nine goals, while Germany have 10, which is already their joint-most in a single edition of the competition.
- Toni Kroos has completed 95% of his passes at the tournament (411/431), the highest by a player to attempt 300+ passes at a European Championship since 1980. He also leads this edition for line-breaking passes (125).

Spain have looked in imperious form in their four straight wins so far at Euro 2024, giving their eagerly anticipated quarterfinal match-up with hosts Germany on Friday the air of a "final before the final".

The squad have moved on from the possession-based "tiki-taka" style that helped them win the World Cup and back-to-back European Championships over a decade ago to a ferociously attacking approach over a year under the guidance of manager Luis de la Fuente.

This transformation may have surprised many fans, but players like midfielder Mikel Merino have seen it coming for almost a decade, as have many of his teammates who have worked with De la Fuente in their national academy system.

And that camaraderie is what gives Spain the edge, Merino felt.

"It is a huge advantage for us," Merino said. "It's a chemistry that I have only seen in club football."

Indeed, Spain have been playing with relentless high pressure combined with lightning one-touch moves and precise passing, giving the impression of a squad where each player has an almost instinctive feel for the positioning of his teammates.

"I have a lot of great memories about playing against Germany. Playing them it's something that make you feel your blood pump stronger in your veins," Merino said.

"We know we are going to face maybe our toughest challenge yet," Merino said.

Meanwhile, hosts Germany will be riding a wave of belief not seen in the proud football nation for almost a decade.

Germany veteran and 2014 World Cup winner Toni Kroos said Wednesday "the goal is to win the tournament".

A player with an unblemished record of success, six-time Champions League winner, Kroos believes the will to win comes "only through experience".

"You can have a winning mentality or belief, you can live it, but it's hard to convey it in conversations.

"You have to go through experiences and that's how your belief grows more and more."

Kroos will do battle against Spain, the country he has lived in for the past decade.

He said his knowledge of the Spanish players from his time at Real was no clear advantage, saying "they are all pretty well known."

"I don't think we're expecting any big surprises."

Kroos may not be expecting big surprises from Spain, but the new-look Spanish side who have somewhat shed their decade-long style of play will definitely be the biggest thorn in the hosts' way to another European glory.

Djokovic survives major scare

REUTERS

Even though Novak Djokovic was nursing a dodgy right knee, toppling him at Wimbledon was never going to be easy for a Briton ranked 277th and so it proved as the Serb huffed and puffed into the third round with a 6-3 6-4 5-7 7-5 win over Jacob Fearnley.

The wildcard, who was ranked outside the world's top 500 just a month ago before shooting up almost 250 spots after winning a second tier Challenger event in Nottingham, will take away many memorable moments from his Centre Court debut.

He is unlikely to forget the high-risk, high-reward strategy he employed in the final game of the third set, which ended with Djokovic hacking a forehand wide to surrender his serve and the set - to the delight of the hollering crowd.

But all the heroics from a journeyman Scot, who until this week had never won a main tour match or even competed at a Grand Slam, were simply not enough to tame a player chasing a record-extending 372nd Grand Slam match win.

A forehand winner sealed Djokovic his passage into round three and kept him on course to win a record 25th Grand Slam title.

Mbappe or Ronaldo: Who will come through?

AFP, Hamburg

- Portugal are the side with the most possession (69.9%) at this Euro, with Germany (66%), England (60%), Spain (59.5%), and France (59%) coming next in this aspect.
- France are yet to find a goal from open play -- they had seen two own goals and one penalty from Kylian Mbappe -- but Les Blues have had the most touches (151) in the opposition's box, followed by Portugal who have had 136 touches in the opposition's box.
- Portugal's captain Cristiano Ronaldo has mustered 20 shots at Euro 2024, the most of any player, but he's yet to find the back of the net.
- Portugal haven't scored in their last two matches -- against Georgia and Slovenia. Portugal have never failed to net in three consecutive games at a single major tournament before.
- France have kept a clean sheet in three of their four games, the most of any side at the tournament.

France and Portugal renew their European Championship rivalry on Friday night in a quarterfinal showdown in which almost all of the focus will be on the two captains, Kylian Mbappe and Cristiano Ronaldo.

The last-eight encounter in Hamburg brings together two of the most-fancied nations coming into Euro 2024, but two teams who have not been completely convinced so far in Germany.

France have reached a sixth quarterfinal in the last seven major tournaments despite not one of their players scoring a goal in open play.

Mbappe has been hindered by the broken nose he suffered in France's first match against Austria, forcing him to miss the goalless draw with the Netherlands.

He has not been at his sharpest since returning and the spot-kick he converted against Poland is the only goal he has scored in seven appearances at the Euros.

The other side of the coin for France is that they have only let in one goal.

Meanwhile, Portugal reached this stage having needed a shoot-out to beat Slovenia following a goalless 120 minutes.

Goalkeeper Diogo Costa ended up being their hero by saving all three of Slovenia's efforts from the spot, but the game will also be remembered for Ronaldo's tears after he had a penalty saved in extra time.

The 39-year-old's quest to become the oldest-ever goal-scorer at the tournament also led to him missing numerous attempts during that game.

It has all added fuel to the fire for those who feel Ronaldo is holding back a supremely talented Portugal side, but coach Roberto Martinez is likely to back the forward.

Portugal must now try to find a way through a watertight French defence, while Didier Deschamps needs to find a replacement in his midfield for the suspended Adrien Rabiot.

With France being one of the most solid defensive sides at the Euro, the question will be whether a misfiring Ronaldo will be able to help Portugal find that spark.

The margins will likely be fine again this tie and the outcome will possibly be determined by a moment of genius. For that, Portugal are likely to keep Ronaldo in place while French eyes will be firmly fixed on Mbappe finally delivering.

Erik ten Hag signs new deal at Man Utd

Erik ten Hag has signed a contract extension that keeps him at Old Trafford until 2026, the Premier League club announced on Thursday. The former Ajax manager, whose deal had been due to expire in 2025, admitted there was work to be done to close the gap on United's Premier League rivals.

Empty seats at Copa, a stark contrast to Euros

Copa favourites such as reigning champions Argentina and Brazil advanced to the quarterfinals playing in sold out stadiums but the less heralded teams have played in half-empty arenas. Games at the Euros averaged 50,000 spectators per game in the group stage.

Bruzon, Kings 'AMICABLY' SPLIT

SPORTS REPORTER

After six years of remarkable achievements and a string of titles with the country's contemporary powerhouse, coach Oscar Bruzon has parted ways with five-time Bangladesh Premier League (BPL) champions Bashundhara Kings.

Bruzon revealed the news through Facebook yesterday, while Kings president Imrun Hasan also confirmed that they would not be renewing the contract with the 47-year-old coach.

The Spaniard wrote, "Dear BK family, I wanted to express my gratitude for the positive manner in which we reached a mutual agreement to terminate our contract after 6 years of continuous success including a participation this season at the prestigious Asian Champions League. I appreciate the opportunity to part ways amicably and with full understanding for both sides."

He added, "We have contributed on developing a unique football culture in the country, key to the long-term growth and exclusively focused on excellence delivering great results including 11 Major Titles and a last season treble. Proud to have been part of the Kings dominance."

The Spaniard was successful in the domestic circuit, winning a total of 11 trophies since the Kings started their journey in the professional football league in the 2018-19 season. However, Bruzon failed to take the formidable Kings out of the group stage in the AFC Cup four times, despite having quality foreign footballers.

It has been learned that his relationship with club officials had deteriorated last season, while the foreign players were openly involved in scuffles during BPL matches. Bruzon, however, gave a hint of it in his parting post, mentioning the need for Kings officials to "put aside their personal and particular interests" to keep the success ongoing.

"Some have to understand that the only way to achieve success is to work as one team."

India's T20 World Cup winners returned home to a heroes' welcome yesterday, greeted by euphoric fans while parading on an open-top bus through the Marine Drive seafront in Mumbai. The Rohit Sharma-led team had first arrived in New Delhi from the West Indies and met with Prime Minister Narendra Modi. The team waved to fans and danced to drums at their hotel in the Indian capital before leaving for their bus parade in Mumbai where fans gathered in huge numbers.

ARREST WARRANT FOR BERA MAYOR

He was in plain sight for 33 months

Court now recalls the order

EMRUL HASAN BAPPI, AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPU and MAHMUDUL HASAN

> "His father is the incumbent lawmaker and the deputy speaker in parliament.... How do I dare to arrest him?"
> Bera Police Station OC

Police did not arrest Pabna's Bera municipality mayor SM Asif Shams for over two and a half years, even though he had an arrest warrant against him for his company's failure to pay Tk 191.63 crore it owed the state.

All the while, Asif, also the son of Deputy Speaker of Jatiya Sangsad Md Shamsul Haque Tuku, continued his mayoral activities in public and even took part in campaigns of others running for local government offices.

Yesterday, the General Certificate Officer's Court of Dhaka recalled the arrest warrant issued against Asif, also the president of Bera upazila Awami League, after he showed up in court and submitted some documents.

On May 23, 2022, a copy of the arrest warrant was sent to the officer-in-charge of Bera Model Police Station.

Md Rashidul Islam, OC of Bera Model Police Station, told The Daily Star on Wednesday, "After joining this station [on December 9, 2023], I learnt about the arrest warrant against him and informed my senior officials. Then I verbally told him to pay the government dues.

"His father is the incumbent lawmaker and the deputy speaker in parliament. He is the incumbent municipality mayor and also the president of the upazila Awami League. How do I dare to arrest him? I only told him verbally, several times."

In January 2014, the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) filed the case against the International Gateway (IGW) operator Vision Tel Ltd chairman Asif; managing Labour landslide expected as millions vote

AFP, London

Millions of Britons voted yesterday in a general election that polls predict will hand the opposition Labour party a landslide win and end nearly a decade-and-a-half of Conservative rule.

The first national ballot since Boris Johnson won the Tories a decisive victory in 2019 follows Prime Minister Rishi Sunak's surprise call to hold an election six months earlier than required.

His gamble looks set to backfire spectacularly, with polls throughout the six-week campaign -- and for the last two years -- pointing to a heavy defeat for his right-wing party.

That would almost certainly put Labour leader Keir Starmer, 61, in Downing Street, as leader of the largest party in parliament.

Centre-left Labour is projected to win its first general election since 2005 by historic proportions, with a flurry of election-eve polls all

PENSION SCHEME

Univ teachers carry on strike as meeting with Quader cancelled

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association yesterday said it is hopeful of having a meeting with government representatives regarding their demand for reinstating teachers' pension scheme.

A scheduled meeting between the federation and Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader was cancelled yesterday, said Prof Nizamul Hoque Bhuiyan, secretary general of the FBUTA.

He said, "Minister Obaidul Quader told us that he has to sit with Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to discuss some other issues. As a result, he has decided not to hold the meeting with the teachers today [Thursday]."

Prof Nizamul said, "We are still hopeful of a meeting with the government. At the same time, we will continue our protest."

The teachers under the banner of Dhaka University Teachers' Association (DUTA) continued their strike for the fourth straight day.

Teachers of other public universities, including Buet, Rajshahi university, Ruet, Jahangirnagar University, Jagannath University, Chittagong University, Barishal University, Begum Rokeya University, and Hajee Mohammad Danesh University also observed the strike.

Hezbollah rains rockets on Israel

UN chief warns of wider ME conflict as Israel retaliates with strikes; gun battles rock Gaza

AGENCIES

Lebanon's Hezbollah said it launched more than 200 rockets and explosive drones at Israeli military positions yesterday as tensions have soared amid the almost nine-months-old offensive raging in Gaza.

The Iran-backed group said its latest attack, which followed the launch of over 100 rockets the previous day, came in response to Israel's killing of a senior Hezbollah commander in south Lebanon.

Israel did not report any deaths in its northern border area, where most communities have been evacuated, but quickly said it had responded with strikes on targets in southern Lebanon.

Israel and Hezbollah, an ally of Palestinian group Hamas, have exchanged near daily cross-border fire since the Gaza offensive began on October 7, stoking fears the clashes could escalate into all-out war.

UN chief Antonio Guterres is "very worried about the escalation of the exchange of fire", his spokesman Stephane Dujarric said, warning of the risk to the wider Middle East "if we were to find ourselves in a full-fledged conflict".

The Gaza offensive at the heart of the regional tensions has meanwhile raged on, and gun battles, air strikes and artillery shelling rocked Gaza City for an eighth day yesterday.

Gaza's civil defence agency said at least five people were killed in a strike that hit a Gaza City school, reports AFP.

Fears of renewed heavy fighting have also surged in Gaza's southern

Messi, Ronaldo and plenty more

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Football fans in Bangladesh will wake up bright and early today and stay up way past their usual bedtime, enjoying three mouthwatering knockout matches across two continents in a dream weekend of international football.

Football-loving officegoers and students, who usually get a few extra hours of sleep on Friday mornings, will set their alarms earlier than they do on weekdays, gluing themselves in front of a screen, preferably with a hot beverage in hand, to catch Lionel Messi's Argentina take the field in their Copa America quarterfinal clash against Ecuador.

The match, taking place at the NRG Stadium in Houston, Texas, will start at 7:00 am Bangladesh time.

However, this sacrifice of sleep could go in vain for Messi fans, as there is uncertainty whether the Argentine maestro will turn up on the field.

LIFE IN THE CITY

A troop of rhesus macaques on the hunt for some food in a residential area in the capital's Gulshan-2. Rhesus monkeys account for a large portion of the country's urban wildlife. Even in metropolitans like Chattogram or Dhaka city, they can be spotted in certain areas, roaming comfortably among humans. Their adaptability to human-dominated landscapes has earned them the title of "commensal primates". However, more often than not, this hunt for food in urban spaces has proven to be not beneficial for them as their desperation can lead them to raid or snatch, which can put them in the face of the wrath of humans. Rhesus macaques, though hardy and adaptable, are often persecuted as "menaces" and can become victims of violent abuse. Some good Samaritans though always find some bread to hand out to the primates in need. PHOTO: PRABIR DAS

Fun trip turns fatal for 5 friends

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

At least five people were killed as a car hit a roadside tree in Pabna's Ishwardi upazila last night.

The deceased are Jihad, Bijoy, Shishir, Sifat and Shaon. The injured are Shahid and Nayeem.

Residents of Azampur village of the upazila, all the deceased and injured were friends and aged between 20 and 22.

The accident took place at the Pabna Sugar Mill area on the Pabna-Rajshahi highway around 9:30pm, Rafiqul Islam, officer-in-charge of Ishwardi Police Station, told The Daily Star.

Police said Nayeem used to work as a drive of a ride-sharing service in Dhaka.

EXPORT DATA

BB finds 6 types of wrongdoing

Sends clarification to govt agencies after shocking statistical correction

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and SOHEL PARVEZ

The central bank discovered six types of statistical wrongdoing that inflated export data, a development that led to a multibillion-dollar correction.

Anomalies range from serial duplication errors to miscalculations of the value of fabrics to repeated miscounts of sample items as exports.

Bangladesh Bank sent a note to government agencies, explaining the rationale for the correction. The document seen by The Daily Star offers shocking glimpses into the extent of data inaccuracies with serious implications for the economy.

Discrepancies were covered last year by several media outlets, including this newspaper, but the massive correction by the central bank on July 3 in a balance of payments update came as a surprise to economists and business leaders.

To eliminate the anomalies, the central bank obtained export data from scheduled banks in the July-September period last year and verified them against statistics provided by the National Board of Revenue.

Labour back in power with huge mandate

Starmer sworn in as UK PM ending 14 years of Conservative rule, pledges to fix country

"Now, our country has voted decisively for change, for national renewal and a return of politics to public service. The work of change begins immediately, but have no doubt, we will rebuild Britain."

KEIR STARMER

".... first and foremost, I am sorry. I have given this job my all, but you have sent a clear signal that the government ... must change. And yours is the only judgement that matters."

RISHI SUNAK

AGENCIES

Britain's new Prime Minister Keir Starmer yesterday pledged to use his massive electoral majority to rebuild the country, saying he wanted to take the heat out of politics after years of upheaval and strife.

Standing outside his new office and residence at Number 10 Downing Street, Starmer acknowledged the scale of the challenge after his party's landslide victory in a parliamentary election ended 14 years of often tumultuous Conservative government.

He warned that any improvements would take time, and he would need to first rebuild faith in politics.

"This lack of trust can only be healed by actions, not words. I know that," he said.

"Whether you voted Labour or not, in fact, especially if you did not, I say to you directly - My government will serve you. Politics can be a force for good. We will show that."

Standing behind a lectern, he said he understood that many Britons were disillusioned with politics after years of scandal and chaos under the Conservatives, who were roundly rejected in Thursday's election, suffering a historic loss.

Starmer said the rejection signalled that Britain was ready for a reset: "Because no matter how fierce the storms of history, one of the great strengths of this nation has always been our ability to navigate away to calmer waters."

MASSIVE MAJORITY

The centre-left Labour won a massive majority in the 650-seat parliament, prompting Rishi Sunak's resignation yesterday morning, before Starmer went to meet King Charles and be formally named prime minister.

He said he would fight every day to rebuild trust, saying Britain would have a "government unburdened by doctrine", underlining something he had repeated during the campaign - that he would put country first, party second.

"To defy, quietly, those who have written our country off. You have given us a clear mandate, and we will use it to deliver change."

The election result has upended British politics. Labour won more than 410 seats, an increase of 211, while the Conservatives, the western world's most successful party, lost 250 lawmakers, including

Onion price jumps up to Tk 120 a kg

SHAHEEN MOLLAH and MD ABBAS

Ruma Akhter, an employee of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University, could not believe her ears yesterday when a trader at the capital's Karwan Bazar asked Tk 104 for a kilogram of onions.

"The price shocked me when I heard it," she said.

She bought onions for Tk 70 per kg a month ago.

"How come the price of onions went up by Tk 34 per kg in a month?" said Ruma, the only breadwinner of her three-member family.

Visiting Karwan Bazar, Shewrapara, Ibrahimpur, Kochukhet, and Mirpur-11 kitchen markets yesterday, The Daily Star found that the retail prices of onions have surged by Tk 10 to Tk 20 per kg within a week.

The essential cooking ingredient was sold for Tk 100-120 a kg yesterday, up from Tk 90-100 last week.

Traders claimed that the prices increased due to supply shortages.

Sajib Sheikh, proprietor of Matri Bhander at Karwan Bazar, said they are getting small supplies from Faridpur and Pabna, two major onion producers.

"The drop in supplies are leading to the price hike," he said, adding that he is now being forced to sell Indian onions.

Mohammad Majed, general secretary of Shyambazar Onion Traders' Association, said the prices of all varieties of local onions increased over the last one week due to the supply crunch.

"We are currently importing onions from India where the prices are high," Majed, also an onion importer, told The Daily Star.

Flood in North to continue for another week

STAR REPORT

The flood situation in several northern districts, including Kurigram and Gaibandha, is likely to linger for another week.

"The water level of the Brahmaputra will continue to rise for the next two to three days and after that, it will start declining," said Sarder Udoy Raihan, executive engineer of Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre.

However, the situation in the Sylhet region has improved slightly as the water level of the Surma is decreasing, he said.

According to reports of our district correspondents, several lakh people, especially those living in low-lying areas, in Kurigram, Gaibandha, Jamalpur, Sirajganj, and Sylhet are marooned in floodwater.

Many schools have been closed in the flood-affected areas.

Several flood victims told The Daily Star that they are in dire need of food and pure drinking water as relief assistance distributed by the government is not enough.

Rezia Begum, 30, of Hatia village in Kurigram's Ulipur upazila, said she and her family members have shelter on a WDB dam as water entered their home on Thursday afternoon.

According to Kurigram district administration and relief and rehabilitation offices, 55 unions out of 72 in the district have been hit by flood, causing suffering to over 1 lakh people.

The flood situation in Gaibandha and Bogura is worsening as the low-lying areas have been flooded for the last four days.

Dhaka's tea trade

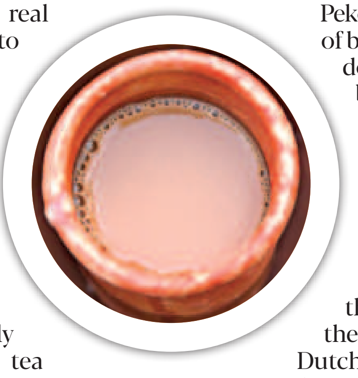
RBR

"Cha ar biskoot" (tea and biscuits) is Bangalee's favourite quick grab. And strong and flavoursome tea is our favourite. Looking for premium tea in Dhaka can be a tad difficult now but once the city boasted dedicated shops that sold different grades and blends of local tea.

We get blended tea in plastic packets from our bazaar or local grocers but CTC (crush, tear, curl) pellets of orange pekoe in brown paper packets, tied with thin jute ropes are not a common sight anymore.

Despite a robust domestic tea market, we have very few specialised tea stores in Dhaka selling exclusive products. The Halda Valley Tea Lounge offers exclusive silver tips and orthodox black tea. However, before all these, New Market's kitchen market had a lone store selling loose tea.

The big wooden chests of tea lots were stacked inside the shabby shop. There were rows of tin boxes the sides of which were made of transparent glass to facilitate the buyers to pick their choice; the boxes were lined with different grades of teas. The containers were arranged according to the tea categories, which a real tea lover would be able to appreciate.



The narrow by-lanes of Kaptan Bazar also have some tea shops selling loose tea. They buy tea lots from Chattogram tea auction and boast that they supply tea to most of our local tea stalls, namely the roadside tongs or tea canteens, famous tea spots in Chawk Bazar, Nazira Bazar -- even to reputed restaurants.

Long ago there used to be a famous tea store in Shantinagar Bazar that sold different grades of tea and a variety of loose tea powders like orange pekoe, orthodox, fanning orthodox tea, and premium blend tea; I picked the name orange pekoe from that store and thus began my tea adventures impressed with the complexity of the taste.

Pekoe is a particular grade of black tea made from the downy tips of the young buds of the tea plant and does not have an orangey flavour or colour, just so that you know. The story goes as far as the Dutch coming to India and introducing the best black tea to the royals. Now, the Dutch royal family belonged to the House of Orange, so naturally when tea came down to the commoners, they nicknamed it orange pekoe to isolate the kind from other variants and blends.

Today, Dhaka's tea scene is going strong with exclusive tea bars offering premium loose tea. In the city's evolving tea scene, the legacy of teas persists despite challenges in the industry, highlighting a market coming to terms with new norms and preferences.

The reason why the tea industry is not doing well from a trader's perspective is primarily because there are no rules and regulations in the industry to monitor ethical trading practices. Some suppliers are directly procuring tea from gardens and distributing it to the retailers at a lower price compared to the ones bought from the auction. This prompt selling, that too on credit, has become a major risk factor in this industry.

The loss of the export market has also reduced the profitability of the tea industry as now all the traders are competing in the domestic market. Nevertheless, our thirst for a cup of good tea remains as strong as ever! Specially so when the rains come pouring.

3 Bangladeshis die in factory fire in KSA

UNB, Naogaon

Three Bangladeshis from Naogaon's Atrai upazila have died in a factory fire in the Musaasa neighborhood of Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

The fire incident occurred around 5:00pm local time on Wednesday.

The victims have been identified as Faruk Hossain, 40, from Tejnanandi village; Enamul Hossain, 25, from Shikarpur village; and Shukbar Ali, 40, from Digha Schoolpara village.

A pall of doom descended on Faruk's home in Tejnanandi village on Thursday. Relatives, neighbours, and well-wishers gathered to offer their condolences as Faruk's wife and two children remained inconsolable.

Faruk's nephew, Pintu Ali, said his uncle had been working in the garment industry before moving to Saudi Arabia six years ago. Faruk had faced numerous challenges and recently joined a sofa manufacturing factory eight months ago.

Biddut Hossain, the son-in-law of Shukbar Ali, said Shukkur, who worked as a farm labourer, had sold his only piece of land to fund his trip to Saudi Arabia two and a half years ago. Despite his efforts, he had not been able to repay the debts.

Shukbar's family will now struggle without their sole breadwinner. He left behind two sons, one of whom is physically challenged, and a daughter.

Enamul's uncle, Zahidul Islam, said Enamul had gone to Saudi Arabia with hopes of earning enough to repay his debts and build a better future. Enamul had almost completed the construction of a brick house and planned to return home next year to get married. The news of his death has left his parents devastated.

The families of the deceased have appealed to the government for immediate assistance in repatriating the bodies.

Atrai Upazila Nirbahi Officer Sanchita Biswas expressed deep sorrow over the incident and said that the authorities are in touch with the bereaved families.

She pledged support to facilitate the return of the dead bodies and any other government assistance available.

Onion price jumps

He said the cost of imported onions stands at Tk 90-95 a kg after calculating import taxes, transportation and other costs.

Md Shamsur Rahman, senior agricultural marketing officer in Pabna, said the supply of onions is not adequate.

"Farmers have adequate stocks of onions, but they are selling in small quantities, causing the prices to go up," he added.

Meanwhile, the prices of almost all vegetables have also increased by Tk 10-40 per kg in the capital's kitchen markets over the last one week.

Traders attributed this price hike to supply shortage due to incessant rains.

Yardlong beans were sold for Tk 100-120 per kg yesterday, up from Tk 70-80 last week.

Bitter gourd was sold for Tk 80-100 per kg yesterday against the previous week's price of Tk 60, spiny gourd Tk 100 per kg against Tk 80 a week ago, and aubergine Tk 80-120 per kg against last week's price of Tk 60-100.

The prices of sponge gourd, papaya, snake gourd, bottle gourd and ash gourd have surged by Tk 10 per kg during the same period.

Suman Miah, a vegetable trader at Karwan Bazar, said crops were damaged in different parts of the country due to incessant rains in the last few days. This led to a fall in supplies, causing the prices to rise, he added.

BB finds 6 types of wrongdoing

Bangladesh Bank found multiple entries, equivalent to 20 percent of the total dataset. The ratio of multiple entries to total exports in the previous months was 14 percent.

"So, the dataset did not give a true picture of the country's exports," the central bank concluded, explaining why it corrected data in the BoP for the July-April period.

As the document indicates, both the NBR and the Export Promotion Bureau (EPB) mishandled the export data.

The statistical revision, while it was necessary, raised questions about the country's economic performance and the policy that revolved around it.

Actual exports in the July-April period of fiscal 2023-24 were nearly $14 billion below the shipment value of goods published by the EPB earlier, according to the central bank. The difference between export figures has been persisting for at least 12 years, with the gap crossing $12 billion in fiscal 2022-23.

The BB said multiple entries of shipments by customs officials at the NBR were the main reason.

In the case of garment orders under a manufacturing process known as cutting, making and trimming (CMT), the Export Promotion Bureau calculated the prices of fabrics and all accessories, although it was supposed to take into account the making charge only. That was another reason behind inflated data.

On many occasions, sample items shipped abroad for buyers were counted as exports, which means a certain value was assigned to those items with no export value.

The central bank said sales by companies inside the Export Processing Zones (EPZs) were counted twice -- first during shipment from the EPZs to local firms and second during shipment from the ports by the exporters.

The document also said actual proceeds usually fall below the initial value mentioned in the letters of credit. The EPB did not adjust the discrepancy later.

Losses stemming from stock-lot sales, discounts and commissions were not adjusted by the EPB either, according to the BB.

The central bank arrived at these findings in its inquiry into the reasons behind the increase in net trade credit, the gap between reported shipment values and actual money flowing into Bangladesh.

Bangladesh Bank prepares the BoP, which reflects a nation's transactions with the rest of the world, regularly based on data gathered from scheduled banks, the EPB, the NBR and other agencies.

GDP GROWTH MAY BE LOWER THAN GOVT ESTIMATE

Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist at the World Bank's Dhaka office, said the central bank's latest data on the BoP has remarkably altered the narrative on the drivers of external stress without changing the signal on the overall stress.

"The bottom line on persistent external imbalance remains pretty much the same but the composition is palpably different. The corrections made by the BB were long overdue," he said.

"Hopefully, BB would appropriately correct the entire historic series to make sure the BOP data remains comparable over time. It appears BB has finally made a laudable attempt to present export values plausibly close to reality."

Hussain said the most pressing implication of the correction of the shipment value of exports is for the GDP growth estimate.

He said the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS) has projected GDP growth at 5.8 percent for FY24. In making this calculation, they projected a 5.63 percent growth in the real exports of goods and services.

Following the correction, economic growth may be about one percentage point lower than the government's preliminary estimate.

Thus the 5.8 percent GDP growth could be 4.8 percent due to the shortfall in actual export growth relative to the export growth projected, other things equal, Hussain said.

4 Bangladesh-origin MPs reelected

MP in the UK parliament, has been reelected from Bethnal Green and Stepney, bagging 34.1per cent of the vote. Rushanara got a total of 15,896 votes, followed by Ajmal Masroor, an Independent candidate who received a total of 14,207 votes. She has won this seat for the fifth consecutive time since 2010.

Labour Party candidate Dr Rupa Huq has been re-elected as MP for Ealing Central and Acton with 46.8per cent of the vote. Rupa Huq, first elected as MP in 2015, got 22,340 votes beating Conservative candidate James Windsor-Clive who got 8,345 votes. She has been elected as a British MP for the fourth consecutive time.

Apsana Begum won from Poplar and Lime House constituency by getting 18, 535 votes. She secured 43.1per cent of the vote.

Bangladeshis account for less than 1 percent of the UK's total population.

According to reports by local UK news outlets, Rushanara Ali, Tulip Siddiq, and Rupa Haque, all of whom have previously served as shadow ministers, have the chance to assume ministerial roles in the new cabinet.

Keir Starmer yesterday became Britain's new prime minister after his centre-left opposition Labour Party swept to a landslide general election victory.

Rishi Sunak conceded defeat in the poll, which brings an end to 14 years of right-wing Conservative rule.

a record number of senior ministers and former Prime Minister Liz Truss.

Sunak's Conservatives suffered the worst performance in the party's long history as voters punished them for a cost of living crisis, failing public services and a series of scandals.

"To the country, I would like to say first and foremost I am sorry," Sunak said outside Downing Street, adding he would stay as Conservative leader until the party was ready to appoint his replacement.

"I have given this job my all, but you have sent a clear signal that the government of the United Kingdom must change, and yours is the only judgment that matters. I have heard your anger, your disappointment and I take responsibility for this loss."

TOUGH ROAD AHEAD

Despite Starmer's convincing victory, polls suggested there was little enthusiasm for Starmer or his party. Thanks to the quirk of Britain's first-past-the-post system and a low turnout, Labour's triumph was achieved with fewer votes than it secured in 2017 and 2019 - the latter its worst result in terms of seats won for 84 years.

The pound and British stocks and government bonds rose marginally yesterday, but Starmer comes to power at a time when the country is facing a series of daunting challenges.

Flood in North to continue for another week said 28,938 families in Gaibandha Sadar, Phulchari, Sundarganj, and Saghata upazilas have been affected.

In the four upazilas, classes have been suspended at 80 primary schools as water entered the institutions, said Shahidul Islam, Gaibandha district primary education officer.

Fifteen secondary schools were closed on Thursday, said Rokshana Begum, district education officer.

Golam Kibria, district relief and rehabilitation officer, said the flood has affected 78,332 people in Sariakandi and Sonatola upazilas of Bogura.

In Sirajganj, more than 100 villages of 34 unions in five upazilas of the district have been flooded.

According to the Water Development Board in Sirajganj, the Jamuna was flowing above the danger level at Sirajganj and Kazipur points at 6:00am yesterday.

In Jamalpur, the situation has worsened due to onrushing water from upstream.

The Jamuna was flowing 93cm above the danger mark at Bahadurabad Ghat point around noon yesterday, according to WDB officials.

Flood has forced the authorities concerned to suspend classes at 50 primary and 17 secondary schools in the affected areas.

Around 42 unions in six upazilas and five municipalities of Jamalpur have been hit by flood, said Alomgir Hossain, district relief and rehabilitation officer.

A good number of people have taken shelter in their relatives' houses, on roads, dykes, and high grounds, he added.

In Sylhet, due to the rise of the water level of the Kushiyara, four dykes in the Zakiganj upazila were breached in the last two days, flooding 87 villages in the upazila.

Citing the deeds, the court order says Enamul bought six katha of land in Bashundhara Residential Area in 1999 for Tk 61,000.

He later built a nine-storey building with 3,200 square feet floors on the land at G Block, considered one of the most expensive neighbourhoods in the city.

According to an ACC report submitted to the court, Enamul in 2017 purchased the 3rd, 4th, and 5th floors and three car park spaces in Aftab Tower on Ring Road for Tk 2.14 crore.

The floors -- 4,000 square feet each -- are rented out to different commercial entities.

In 2020, Enamul bought the 2nd and 4th floors of Sara Sandhani Life Tower at Mohammadpur Housing Society and eight car parks for Tk 2.35 crore. The two floors -- over 10,965 square feet in total -- are used as commercial spaces.

In 2015, Enamul bought two flats at Bhuiya Trade Centre in Kakrail: a 1,900 square feet one on the 1st floor and another 3,800 square feet one on the 5th. The record shows he paid just about Tk 2.08 crore for both.

In 2014, he bought an 1,835 square feet flat at Iris Noorjehan building in Kakrail for Tk 51.29 lakh. In the previous year, he purchased another 1,170 square feet flat at the same building for Tk 28.3 lakh.

In 2019, he bought a 2,428.81 square feet flat in Glydia Shahida building in Banani for Tk 72 lakh.

In 2020, he purchased a four-katha plot in the Badda area for Tk 14.55 lakh and in 2008, a 33-decimal one in Khilkhet for Tk 7.84 lakh.

Enamul also owns a five-katha plot in Chandana, Gazipur. He informed the court that the land worth Tk 62.4 lakh was a gift from someone.

The ACC started investigating Enamul in November 2022. In July last year, it sued him for acquiring assets worth Tk 9.76 crore through questionable means.

ACC lawyer Mosharraf Hossain Kajol told the court on Thursday that the properties should be seized immediately.

Since September 5 last year, Enamul has been the customs and VAT commissioner in Sylhet.

Grandmaster Zia breathes his last doing what he loved rushed to the Ibrahim Cardiac Hospital in Shahbag but was declared dead by the duty doctor.

"Zia bhai and I were playing when suddenly he fell down," GM Razib told The Daily Star.

"Zia bhai had shown no signs of discomfort. He fell down to his right side and I thought he was picking up a bottle of water. When I called him, he did not respond. Everyone rushed to him. He was senseless. He was immediately taken to the hospital but he was no more," Razib recalled the events.

Zia, who in 2002 became the second chess player from Bangladesh to become a GM after Niaz Murshed, was the only chess player of the country who took chess as a profession.

He earned a living by competing locally and internationally in chess tournaments, unlike other top chess players of the country who have other sources of income.

His only child -- FIDE Master Tahsin Taswar Zia -- also plays chess and the father-son duo represented Bangladesh in the Chess Olympiad in 2022. His wife Tasnim Sultana also played chess at an amateur level.

In 2020, during the Covid-19 pandemic, Zia told this reporter that despite all the hardships he has gone through, he never strived for any other occupation as he loved the game of chess.

After GM Zia fell to the ground, the other players also abandoned their respective matches and came to the hospital, which turned into a place of mourning.

"I think Zia bhai had been the best chess player of the country. What he did was unachievable for other chess players including me whether it was in the national chess championships or international competitions," Razib said.

"As a human being, he was excellent, he had no bad habits. He even offered his prayers during the games. During the Asian Games in China last year, he was not performing well and he felt bad. But he was more concerned about my performance rather than his."

Having played in many local and international competitions over the years, Zia devoted himself to coaching in the last few years but continued playing chess for the club and Bangladesh.

Razib believes Zia is irreplaceable.

"It is a big loss for Bangladesh chess because he could have served the nation for few more years. We always relied on Zia bhai when we competed the Chess Olympiad because we knew there was no one other than Zia bhai to play against the strong opponent in board-1."

IGP Mamun's tenure extended for second time

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday again extended the tenure of Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, this time for one year under contract.

The public administration ministry issued a circular, signed by its deputy secretary Bhaskar Debnath Bappi, in this regard.

On January 9 last year, his tenure as IGP was extended for a year and a half under contract.

Police sources said it was the first time that an IGP was given two extensions.

According to the circular, he will serve as IGP for one more year under conditions of the contract mentioned in the previous circular that extended his tenure last year.

Keep your phone safe, or it may end up in India

Transnational phone smuggling gangs active

MUNTAKIM SAAD

If you lose an iPhone in Bangladesh, chances are it has already been sold at an unbelievably cheaper price in one of the many states of India.

Likewise, smartphones stolen in the neighbouring country make their way to Bangladesh and are sold at far below the market price.

On November 7 last year, Ferdous Miah, a deputy jailer from Dinajpur, was robbed in Dhaka's Dhanmondi area, losing his Samsung S23 Ultra mobile phone.

After filing a GD and using a tracking app, he located the phone months later in Gujarat, India.

Following coordination with Indian authorities, he received news of its recovery on March 1 and the phone was returned via parcel shortly thereafter.

Meanwhile, Religious Affairs Minister Md Faridul Haque Khan's mobile phone was stolen in Jamalpur on April 30, but was found in Malaysia a month later. Detectives investigating the incident busted a gang and seized 63 stolen mobile phones from their possession.

There are transnational rackets active in Bangladesh and India that are smuggling stolen and unauthorised mobile phones between the two countries, law enforcers found.

The issue re-emerged on June 30 when Dhaka Metropolitan Police recovered a stolen iPhone belonging to a Kolkata resident from Keraniganj, Bangladesh.

Moutusi Ganguly, an Indian resident, lost her phone in Kolkata's Park Circus area on July 26, 2023.

Her daughter, Ashmita Ganguly, tracked the phone to Bangladesh by using technology.

Nearly a year later, Shahjahanpur Police recovered the device.

Ashmita submitted a general diary to the Bangladesh Deputy High Commission in Kolkata and communicated with Sub-inspector Milton Kumar Deb Das of Shahjahanpur Police via WhatsApp.

"I tried to track the phone 25-30 times over the last year before finally recovering it from Keraniganj. A man had purchased the iPhone for only Tk 17,000," said SI Milton to The Daily Star.

A corrupt taxman and his 'blessed' in-laws

Faisal, his relatives undervalued their properties in official documents, claims ACC

DIPAN NANDY

"When you rise, lift others [read in-laws in this case] with you"-- even if it means bending a few rules along the way.

Quazi Abu Mahmud Faisal, former first secretary of the National Board of Revenue (NBR), seems to have lived up to these words.

Faisal, who was recently transferred to the Bogura office of NBR, has been under the spotlight recently for allegedly amassing a staggering Tk 1,000 crore illegally, as claimed by the ACC.

But it's not just Faisal whose fortune has risen exponentially thanks to his government job; his in-laws too seem to have hit the jackpot.

Faisal has purchased a 2,990-square-foot flat in Siddheshwari and 10 katha of land in Meradia, Dhaka, in the names of Ahmed Ali, his father-in-law, and Momtaz Begum, his mother-in-law.

The values of these properties were strategically undervalued in official documents.

Although the Siddehshwari flat was purchased in the name of Ahmed Ali on paper, in reality, it's Faisal and his family who have been living there for a year, according to locals.

The flat, located on the 10th floor of one of the four buildings in Rupayan Swapno Niloy in Siddheshwari, was shown to be bought for Tk 95.50 lakh.

The market value of the 2,990-square-foot flat is Tk 1 crore, according to an ACC document submitted to the court. The Daily Star has a draft copy of the document.

Bazlur Rahman, who has been living in the area over the past three decades, also finds the official valuation "unbelievable".

In police, 'benefits are for seniors'

Say disgruntled junior cops who haven't been promoted for years, and even decades

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

Thirteen years ago, Md Halim (name changed) was promoted to police inspector.

Since then, he has served as officer-in-charge at various police stations in Dhaka.

His name was enlisted for promotion to assistant superintendent of police (ASP) in 2017, but six years later, he is still waiting for the call.

"It seems the authorities do not think we are capable, or else they would have given us the promotion," he told The Daily Star recently.

"All benefits are for seniors. Why shouldn't we get the promotion after working 10 to 12 years in the field? It's embarrassing for me and my family."

According to the Police Headquarters database, around 655 inspectors and 115 Traffic Inspectors were listed for ASP promotion in 2017, and 291 inspectors and 72 TI were listed in 2016. Additionally, at least 515 inspectors were listed in 2012 and 2014.

These officers, who joined between 1991 and 1999, have completed 25 to 33 years of service and will retire soon.

Over the past year, junior officers have met with the home minister, inspector general of police, and other top officials to address the promotion crisis.

In response, PHQ in a recent letter informed the home ministry that no ASP posts are currently available.

Although ASPs were supposed to be promoted to additional SPs after five years, 113 officials of the 36th BCS and 97 officials of the 37th BCS are still waiting after six and five years, respectively. Promotions for the 35th and 36th BCS batches won't be possible until 2027, and the 37th BCS until after 2030.

While some ASP posts will be vacant by 2028, they are insufficient for the large number of awaiting officers.

PHQ requested the ministry to create 300 supernumerary (officials who hold the same position and perform the same duties after their elevation) ASP posts.

Both inspector and ASP ranks are grade nine, so no additional salary would be required.

The Daily Star has obtained a copy of the letter.

Mazharul Islam, general secretary of the Bangladesh Police Association, said, "We have placed our demands to the government several times. It is our legal demand and we hope the government will address our demands soon."

The PHQ letter also requested the creation of 350 supernumerary Additional SP posts, as officials of the 35th BCS have not been promoted despite serving as ASPs for about seven years.

There are around 114 ASPs in the 35th BCS.

Although ASPs were supposed to be promoted to additional SPs after five years,

MoUs with India one-sided

Speakers tell Ganatantra Mancha rally

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The recently signed memorandums of understanding (MoUs) between India and Bangladesh are one-sided and unbalanced, said leaders of Ganatantra Mancha, an alliance of several opposition parties, yesterday.

They said these deals favoured India's dominance over Bangladesh's economy, security, and governance.

During a rally in front of Jatiya Press Club, they also said the people of Bangladesh have rejected the MoUs with India that go against the country's interests, said a press release by the platform.

The leaders criticised the deals signed during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's recent visit to India, which

'On this journey, no one cares if you live or die'

Migrants face violence, rights violation on journey through Mediterranean, says UNHCR report

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Refugees and migrants, including Bangladeshis, continue to face extreme forms of violence, human rights violations, and exploitation on land and sea routes through the African continent towards its Mediterranean coastline.

The information was disclosed in a report titled "On This Journey, No-one Cares If You Live or Die" (volume 2), which was released by UNHCR, International Organisation for Migration and Mixed Migration Centre yesterday.

Risks and abuses reported by refugees and migrants include torture, physical violence, arbitrary detention, death, kidnapping for ransom, sexual violence and exploitation, enslavement, human trafficking, forced labour, organ removal, and robbery, alongside collective expulsions and refoulement, said the report.

It also said at least 1,180 people died while crossing the Sahara between January 2020 and May 2024, but the number could be much higher.

During the same period, around 7,115 people were reported to have died or gone missing in the Mediterranean Sea, it adds.

The report states that the Central Mediterranean route starts in East and West Africa and the Horn of Africa, leading to the Mediterranean.

At least 1,180 people died while crossing the Sahara between January 2020 and May 2024, but the number could be much higher.

It also said people from many countries, including Bangladesh, travel through Dubai, Istanbul, or Cairo to reach the route's North Africa section, which leads through the desert to and through Maghreb countries, where people reach their destination or move towards the European Union, crossing the sea.

The report builds on data collected by IOM, MMC, and UNHCR from January 2020 to March 2023, for which refugees from a total of 59 different countries were interviewed.

Also, 66 percent of respondents who were interviewed in or transited through Libya reported the country to be risky, followed by Ethiopia (62 percent), Algeria (55 percent), and Guinea (33 percent), among other countries.

The report says the main departure points to cross the Mediterranean Sea include the coastal cities of Zuwara and Misratah in Libya and Sfax in Tunisia.

People traditionally start their sea voyage from Libya to go to Italy, but during the first half of 2023, people departed from Tunisia more, with a 137 percent increase from 2022.

In 2022, the most common nationalities entering Europe through the Northern Africa region were Egyptian, Tunisian, and Bangladeshi.

For January-August 2023, the main nationalities arriving in Italy were Guinean (14 percent), Ivorian (13 percent), Tunisian (11 percent), Egyptian (7 percent), Bangladeshi (7 percent), and Pakistani (6 percent).

Among the top ten nationalities arriving in Italy through the Central Mediterranean route during 2018-2022, Syrians had a 95.23 percent asylum application acceptance rate, followed by Sudanese (83.25 percent).

By contrast, the "protection rate" of Bangladeshis was lower (13.40 percent).

In a joint statement, the organisations called for concrete, route-based protection responses to save lives and reduce suffering, as well as a push to address the root causes of displacement and drivers of irregular movements.

Met office predicts rain across country

UNB, Dhaka

Bangladesh Meteorological Department (BMD) has predicted rain or thundershowers in all divisions including Dhaka over the 24 hours from 9:00am yesterday.

"Light to moderately heavy rain or thundershowers accompanied by temporary gusty wind is likely to occur at most places over Rangpur, Rajshahi, Dhaka, Mymensingh, Khulna, Barishal, Chattogram and Sylhet divisions with moderately heavy to very heavy at places over the country," said Met office.

The highest 54mm of rainfall was recorded in Chandpur yesterday.

Day and night temperatures may remain nearly unchanged over the country. The country's highest temperature was recorded in Chuadanga at 33.5 degrees Celsius yesterday while the lowest was in Teknaf at 23.7 degrees Celsius.

Ctg hospital shut over irregularities

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS) has directed to close Central City Hospital at Parbartak Intersection in Chattogram city due to various irregularities.

The DGHS issued a notification on Wednesday, signed by its Director (Hospitals and Clinics) Abu Hussain Md Moinul Ahsan, in this regard.

According to the notification, the hospital has been operating without a licence from the health directorate and without clearance certificates from the Department of Environment.

Additionally, the hospital lacks adequate and qualified doctors and nurses, as well as necessary equipment.

Speaking to reporters yesterday, Chattogram Civil Surgeon Mohammad Ilias Chowdhury said, "As per the direction of the health directorate, we issued instructions to stop all operations of the hospital yesterday [Thursday]."

He also mentioned that if there are any admitted patients in the hospital, they must be referred to an appropriate hospital by Monday.

They make jute braids to send their kids to school

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

Women from Rajpur, Khuniagach, and Gokunda unions along the Teesta river in Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila have been crafting jute braids for the past five years to supplement their family incomes.

Facing impoverishment exacerbated by recurrent floods and erosion, approximately 60 percent of families in these unions have lost their lands and homes, relying on government lands and dykes for shelter.

Tulsi Rani, 27, took matters into her own hands in Madhuram village, and inspired around 3,000 women along the way to weave jute braids during their free time after household chores.

"I started making jute braids to earn some money to help my family. Later, I engaged some other women to work with me," said Tulsi Rani.

"Different handicraft establishments provide me jute fibres. I weigh and deliver the fibres to women, and they make braids and submit those to me. I would then weigh and send the braids to the establishments," she added.

Different other jute products, including bags, floor-mats, and rugs are also made by them.

Through their craftsmanship, these women have transformed adversity into opportunity, showing resilience and entrepreneurial spirit in challenging circumstances. With the money these women are earning, they are now able to send their children to school and meet the expenses, they added.

Each woman earns between Tk 24 to Tk 90 per braid, depending on its thickness, producing an average of 3-4 kilogrammes of braids daily.

Karla Rani, for instance, earns Tk 100-150 daily. She has recently used her savings for her daughter's wedding.

Meanwhile, the income has helped women like Mina Rani and Jannati Begum send their children to school. They praised Tulsi Rani for leading the way.

Keep your phone safe

Earlier on March 7, DB arrested 10 Indian nationals linked to a cross-border smuggling group allegedly involved in trafficking Indian goods, including stolen mobile phones.

Last December, Indian authorities dismantled a syndicate smuggling stolen mobile phones into Nepal and Bangladesh, recovering 153 devices from a mobile repair shop in Ghaziaba.

The gangs primarily target high-priced cell phones in Bangladesh and smuggles them to India, Malaysia, and Thailand.

High-end phones like iPhones, known for their hard-to-alter IMEI numbers, are risky to sell locally, so criminals smuggle them to a different country.

Besides, there is a significant demand in Bangladesh for unauthorised mobile phones that evade customs duties and taxes upon entry.

Recently, Rapid Action Battalion arrested four members of an unauthorised mobile phone dealing gang during a raid in Narayanganj, recovering over 800 mobile phones.

Abu Taher, one of the arrestees, supplied over 2,500 mobiles to the market through his organised gang in the last one and a half months, said Rab-3

Meanwhile, State Minister for IT Zunaid Ahmed Palak, on June 13, directed the National Board of Revenue to track and take action against users of high-value unregistered mobile phones.

Sheikh Rafiqul Islam Bablu, a freedom fighter and convener of Bhasani Anusari Parishad; Mahmudur Rahman Manna, president of Nagarik Oikya; Saiful Haque, general secretary of Biplobi Workers Party; Zonayed Saki, chief coordinator of Ganosamhati Andolan; Hasnat Quaiyum, coordinator of Rastra Sangskar Andolon; and Tania Rob, vice president of Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal (JSD), spoke at the rally.

They held the PM responsible for signing these MoUs to maintain power without holding proper elections.

They criticised the PM's statement, "What's the harm if India is given transit?", claiming that the government is compromising national interests for its own benefit.

The speakers condemned the recent statement by the foreign minister, who said, "India has no objection to PM's visit to China."

They said the PM of a sovereign country should not need permission from other nations to visit a country.

Asma Abbasi passes away

CITY DESK

Asma Abbasi, an educationist, TV personality, and writer, passed away at her residence in Dhaka on July 4, at the age of 83, said a press release.

She left behind her husband, Mustafa Zaman Abbasi, a musician, artist, and folklorist; two daughters, Samira Abbasi and Sharmini Abbasi; and four grandchildren, Armaan, Shaiza, Sarina, and Alvi.

Asma Abbasi was the niece of the renowned writer Mujtaba Ali.

She completed her honours and master's degrees in Bangla literature from Dhaka University.

Throughout her career until retirement, she taught at Purana Paltan Girls' College.

She was also a leader at the Inner Wheel Club and the Ladies Club in the capital.

She was laid to rest in her mother's grave at Banani graveyard yesterday.

"It's a real miracle," Rahman said, adding that the per square foot price in Siddheshwari ranges from Tk 10,000-15,000, and the actual market value of Faisal's flat is at least Tk 3 crore.

Besides, at least Tk 25 lakh more is required for parking space, he added.

Meanwhile, Momtaz Begum's fortune turned bright in February 2022 when she acquired 10 kathas of land in Meradia for Tk 52 lakh.

ACC believes the actual market value of the property is Tk 4.5 crore.

Besides, Faisal's father-in-law purchased a flat for Tk 1 crore from Rupayan Housing Estate in the city's Ramna area.

These are just the tips of the iceberg. The story goes even deeper.

For example, Faisal and his 11 relatives conducted transactions worth crores through 87 accounts across 19 banks and one non-bank financial institution.

The largest volume of transactions, amounting to Tk 11.57 crore, was found in the account of his father-in-law, a retired bank officer, who has eight bank accounts.

Faisal's mother-in-law Momtaz Begum, a homemaker, has 10 bank accounts, and transactions amounting to Tk 7 crore were spotted in these accounts.

ACC is now investigating how Faisal's father-in-law acquired so much wealth.

But Faisal didn't forget his wife Jesmin. She owns five kathas of land in Boro Kathaldia Mouza in Bhatara area, "valued" at Tk 18.17 lakh.

However, during the investigation, the ACC found the market value of this land to be Tk 75 lakh.

Moreover, there is also land "worth" Tk 7.5 lakh in Purbachal New Town, but the ACC has not disclosed its true value yet.

As for Faisal himself, he owns approximately 15.5 kathas of land spread across five places in Dhaka and Narayanganj, which he valued at Tk 40.29 lakh.

However, the ACC's investigators have stated that these land values have been significantly undervalued.

Faisal and his wife had also bought a five-katha plot from the Jolshiri Housing Project in Khilgaon, while his wife bought another five-katha plot for Tk 75 lakh from East-West Development.

Faisal has six accounts, which had transactions amounting to Tk 5.21 crore. Jesmin, a homemaker, has five bank accounts where transactions worth Tk 2.25 crore took place.

The Dhaka Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court ordered the seizure of Faisal's assets, including plots, flats, and bank accounts, which include 19 bank accounts and 87 financial institution accounts held by 11 of his relatives.

The seized assets, both movable and immovable, are valued at approximately Tk 17 crore as shown in official documents by Faisal and his family members.

However, ACC officials claimed in court that those properties were undervalued and they amount to no less than Tk 20 crore.

Faisal also purchased savings certificates worth Tk 2.55 crore between June 2019 and November 2023 in his and his family's names.

The allegations against Faisal include taking bribes for transferring income tax officials, intimidating taxpayers, and other irregularities.

ACC decided to investigate Faisal last year.

Faisal joined NBR in 2005 as a BCS cadre in the post of assistant tax commissioner.

113 officials of the 36th BCS and 97 officials of the 37th BCS are still waiting after six and five years, respectively. Promotions for the 35th and 36th BCS batches won't be possible until 2027, and the 37th BCS until after 2030.

Creating these posts would cost an additional Tk 2.71 crore.

Officials of the 35th and 36th BCS have held several meetings with the home minister, IGP, and top police officials to demand promotions.

"We were supposed to be promoted after five years, but we are not getting it even after seven years of service. The officials of 35th and 36th BCS, who joined other cadres like admin, foreign, and even Ansar, got promotions at least a year back," said an official of 35th BCS police.

Abul Fazal Mir, joint secretary (police-1) of the public security division of home ministry, said, "Creating supernumerary posts is a policy-level issue. It requires approval from other ministries like public administration, so nothing can be said right away about the application."

According to PHQ, there are around 3,146 cadre posts in the police. This includes one IGP, two additional IGPs (grade-1), 20 additional IGPs (grade-2), 87 DIGs (grade-3), 201 additional DIGs (grade-4), 596 SPs (grade-5), 1,008 additional SPs (grade-6), and 1,231 ASPs (grade-9).

Last year, PHQ sought 529 supernumerary posts for IG, DIG, additional DIG, and SP promotions.

But public administration ministry created 342 such posts, causing dissatisfaction among cops.

On September 19, the home ministry applied for more posts, leading the public administration ministry to approve eight additional IGP and 15 DIG posts on October 23.

IGP Mamun

As per the two circulars, Mamun's post-retirement leave and related-benefits have been suspended as per Section 49 of the Public Service Act-2018 and his tenure as the IGP has been stretched for one year on a contract from July 12 or the date of joining.

On September 30 in 2022, Mamun became the IGP. He was the Rab director general when the US on December 10, 2021, imposed sanctions on him and six other current and former Rab officials and the force itself.

sitting arrangements, restrooms, lighting, a fountain, iron pergolas, a kids' zone, and sports facilities.

Improved drainage is also planned to prevent waterlogging.

DELAY AND RESIDENTS' FRUSTRATION

Despite the promising plans, the delay in completing the renovation has frustrated the city dwellers.

"There is no other park for the residents of Panchlaish, Katalganj, Chawk Bazar, Kapasgola, Badurtola, Shulakbahar, Mirzarpool, Parobarttak, Sugandha, and Muradpur areas. The park has been in a sorry state for around six years, depriving us of its facilities," said Miltan Das from Katalganj.

A recent visit to the site revealed that the area had been covered with corrugated sheets, and around 20 workers were found working.

The ground has been elevated with earth-filling to prevent waterlogging, and the boundary wall and walkway have been constructed. Workers are currently excavating land to construct a swimming pool.

However, it is unlikely that the project will be completed by the end of this month as scheduled, as confirmed by Kamrul Islam Khan, executive engineer of PWD, Chattogram (Div-1).

"Around 90 percent of the project work has been completed so far. We had to wait for the monsoon to plant around 3,000 saplings to ensure they thrive in favourable weather, causing some delay," he said.

Khan said they expect to complete the project by August this year.

Anti-quota demos continue

STAR REPORT

Hundreds of students from three universities yesterday rallied against the reinstatement of the quota system in government jobs.

The universities are: Chattogram University, Hajee Mohammad Danesh Science and Technology University in Dinajpur, and Mawlana Bhashani Science and Technology University in Tangail.

In Chattogram, CU students blocked Sholosohor road for one and a half hours, starting at 4:00pm, causing significant traffic disruptions.

They gathered earlier at Shaheed Minar to voice demands for the abolition of the quota system.

In Dinajpur, HSTU students defied rain to protest in front of the university gate, demanding quota reforms and shouting slogans like "No place for discrimination in Golden Bengal" and "Merit, not quota!"

In Tangail, students from Mawlana Bhashani Science and Technology University formed a human chain at the university gate.

Meanwhile, students of other institutions including Dhaka University said they will bring out processions today and boycott classes and exams on Sunday if their demands are not addressed.

Man held over rape of 6-year-old girl

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

Police arrested a man in Ghoraghat, Dinajpur, on Thursday night on charges of raping a six-year-old girl.

The arrestee is Saju Mia, 25, from Loharband Uttarpara area.

Md Asaduzzaman Asad, officer-in-charge of Ghoraghat Police Station, said the incident occurred on Tuesday afternoon when the girl went to a nearby shop to buy some snacks.

On her way back home, Saju Mia allegedly raped her while brandishing a sharp weapon, said the OC.

Traditionally, by the first week of Ashar (monsoon), farmers prepare Aman paddy seedbeds. However, due to a lack of rain, farmers are yet to prepare seedbeds this time around. The photos were taken at Tetultala beel and Batiaghata upazila recently.

Aman farmers worry over lack of rain

June saw 250mm less rainfall than normal; no seedbeds prepared yet

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

Paddy farmers in Khulna division are worried as a lack of rainfall on the onset of Aman season threatens to adversely affect cultivation.

This staple crop is crucial for over 10 lakh farmers in Khulna, Bagerhat, and Satkhira districts, who rely on monsoon rain for irrigation due to water salinity during the rest of the year.

Traditionally, by the first week of Ashar (monsoon), farmers prepare Aman paddy seedbeds.

However, this year, June recorded 250mm less rainfall than usual, leaving canal and river waters unsuitable for irrigation due to high salinity.

After visiting 15 villages in Batiaghata, Dumuria, Paikgachha, Dacope, and Rupsha upazilas, this correspondent saw no seedbeds were being prepared.

Agricultural lands lie fallow, covered with grass and used for pasture. In Batiaghata, two canals were found dried up.

"I haven't been able to prepare Aman seedbeds due to inadequate rain, which hasn't lowered canal salinity, making the water unsuitable for irrigation," said Proshad Roy from Khalashibunia Kachhari Bari.

"Last year's delayed cultivation due to a lack of rain led to pest attacks and a poor harvest. This year looks worse," he added.

Approximately 930 farmers from Proshad's village share his predicament.

Abdur Rob of Pankhali village in Dacope upazila echoed similar concerns, adding that the Bhadra river's water remains too salty for irrigation and groundwater is also highly saline.

"Rainwater is our only hope," he said.

Environmental experts attribute the situation to disrupted weather patterns and erratic monsoons due to climate change.

In recent years, Khulna division has seen a decline in precipitation during crucial Aman cultivation months, intensifying the hardships for the farming community.

According to the Department of Agricultural Extension in Khulna, 84,810 hectares are designated for Aman cultivation with a target production of 291,563 tonnes of paddy, involving 317,274 families.

"It rained 305mm in May, much more than the usual 175mm, but it was too early to benefit the farmers. Till June 27, only 46mm of rain was recorded, 250mm less than the usual June rainfall," said Md Amirul Azad, senior meteorologist at Khulna Meteorological Office.

Md Mosaddek Hossain, senior monitoring officer of DAE's PARTNER programme, expressed concerns about the delayed seedbed preparation, which could lead to lower yields.

He added that the lack of rain is damaging Aus paddy cultivated in the region.

Farmers remain hopeful for timely rainfall to salvage the Aman cultivation season and mitigate the looming agricultural crisis.

UPAZILA HEALTH COMPLEX

Patients suffer for shortage of doctors

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jamalpur

The 50-bed Sarishabari Upazila Health Complex, serving over four lakh residents across Jamalpur and Sirajganj, is facing a severe shortage of medical staff.

Operating with only four medical officers and two consultants, well below the required 29, the facility struggles to meet the basic healthcare needs.

Dr Rabiul Islam, resident medical officer, said essential departments like surgery, gynaecology, cardiology, and others lack dedicated doctors and staffers.

The absence of a gynaecologist for six months has particularly hampered maternity care, while an equipped, but unused operation theatre due to surgeon shortage symbolises the facility's underutilisation.

With only one cleaner instead of the required seven, the hospital remains unhygienic.

Visiting the health complex recently, this correspondent found only one doctor busy working, while a huge rush of patients was seen in the emergency room.

Meanwhile, middlemen were seen taking advantage of the situation and taking patients to private clinics.

Saddam Hossain, a resident from Kumariabari of Kazipur, said he had been waiting in the hospital's corridor for an hour, but no doctor was available in the emergency room.

Instead, he saw a medical assistant attending patients.

Shahin Miah, a resident from Adra village of Sarishabari upazila, said he went to the hospital after an accident and waited for half an hour, but found no doctor till that point.

Dr Rabiul said, "Over a hundred patients are currently admitted to the health complex.

However, the hospital only has 50 beds, so half the patients are on the floors."

Sarishabari upazila Health and Family Planning Officer Dr Md Shafiqul Islam said, "The issue of doctor shortage has already been informed to the authorities."

Local lawmaker Abdur Rashid, president of the hospital management committee, said he has been trying his best to solve the matter.

Jatisangha Park remains off limits

First bureaucratic tangle, now renovation keeps visitors away

ARUN BIKASH DEY

Residents of port city are currently unable to use Jatisangha Park in Panchlaish due to delayed renovation work.

The port city lacks sufficient parks and open spaces for its residents. Jatisangha Park, established in 1964 and spanning 2.17 acres, is one of the few parks in Chattogram with free public access.

The park has been off limits to city dwellers for over a year now due to a renovation project.

Earlier, a tug of war over the park between the Chattogram City Corporation and Public Works Department led it to utter disarray, neglect and abandonment for six years, alongside a wastage of around Tk 5 crore of public money.

PARK HISTORY AND DECLINE

Originally established by the PWD and later handed over to the Chittagong Municipal Corporation in 1969, the park was named Jatisangha Park in 2002.

"It used to be a beautiful park with various trees and a walkway around an artificial lake," said local resident Shahedul Azam.

In 2012, the Chattogram City Corporation constructed two swimming pools and a boundary wall in the park at a cost of Tk 4.80 crore.

However, following a child's drowning in one of the pools, they were abandoned.

In 2016, CCC attempted to lease the park to a private organisation for 25 years, but this was opposed by the then minister for housing and public works, Mosharraf Hossain.

Consequently, a dispute ensued, leaving the park abandoned for six years until it was handed back to the PWD in 2020.

RENOVATION PROJECT

The PWD began a Tk 12.62 crore renovation project for the park in January last year, scheduled for completion by June this year. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina laid the foundation stone for the project on December 4.

Babar Associates and Coronation Corporation, a joint venture, is responsible for the renovation.

The project aims to develop a green garden with attractive greenery, a boundary wall with iron grilles, a walkway,

Biden seeks reset with high-risk TV interview

AFP, Washington

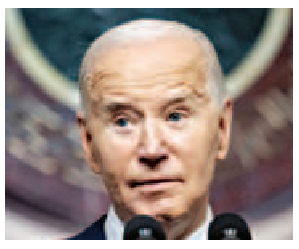
With his reelection bid on the line, US President Joe Biden sits down Friday for a crucial TV interview to persuade doubters of his physical and mental fitness for a second White House term.

The one-to-one with the ABC network has been hyped as the most consequential of the 81-year old's long career, after a disastrous campaign debate with Donald Trump triggered panic within his Democratic Party and calls for him to pull out of the race.

The Biden campaign has pushed back hard on any suggestion he may withdraw, and just hours before the ABC interview it released an aggressive campaign travel schedule for the rest of July.



At least three of his party members in Congress have called on him to step aside, as have several major newspaper editorial boards and a raft of Democratic-supporting political commentators.

The president has said that he is "not leaving" and is "in this race to the end," but post-debate polls have shown Trump's lead widening.

Biden has also not yet spoken publicly without a teleprompter since the debate, other than some brief remarks.

Friday's interview with ABC presenter George Stephanopoulos, set to be recorded during a campaign trip to Wisconsin. With soaring anticipation for the interview, ABC has switched up its original plan of airing excerpts through the weekend, and will instead broadcast it in full Friday at 8:00pm (0000 GMT Saturday).

As Europe turns right, UK steers to centre

REUTERS, London

The centre-left Labour Party's crushing victory in the British election stands in stark contrast to recent gains by the far right across Europe.

But the party's triumph was not so much a rejection of populism by voters, but rather an echo of the same disenchantment with their political leaders.

Keir Starmer swept to power yesterday winning a large parliamentary majority and condemning Rishi Sunak's Conservative Party to its worst defeat in history.

The victory comes days after Marine Le Pen's far-right National Rally (RN) party scored historic gains to win the first round of the parliamentary election in France.

That followed similar advances by populist parties in last month's European Parliament elections where German Chancellor Olaf Scholz's Social Democrats recorded their worst result ever.

Before his poll triumph, Starmer said progressive politicians had to demonstrate that they had learned the lessons from the rise of nationalism and populism.

But rather than a bulwark against a European populism wave, Starmer's success was built on the same voter desire for change and to punish perceived incompetence by incumbent governments that is driving support for the far right.

Britain, once renowned for political stability, has lurched from crisis to crisis since the 2016 vote to leave the European Union, through the Covid-19 pandemic, increasingly stretched public services and a cost of living crisis.

The Conservative Party, in power for 14 years, had increasingly followed a more populist agenda with a focus on immigration, including a plan to send asylum seekers to Rwanda, promising to tackle immigration and to reshape the economy, but its credibility was shattered by years of economic stagnation and the failure to stop tens of thousands of asylum seekers arriving in small boats.

"The Tories were populist, but it hasn't gone very well so people are fleeing," said Professor Geoffrey Evans from Oxford University.

"I wouldn't say that is a reaction against populism. I would just say that is a reaction against the perceived incompetence of the party and generally bad economic circumstances that the country finds itself in."

The strong performance of Reform in the British election, where it won four seats and four million votes, would appear to bear that out.

Labour's likely foreign minister David Lammy said: "The truth is when we see the tide of nationalism across Europe and in other parts of the world, he (Starmer) knows if he doesn't deliver for the working people, then populists and those with a different account of how you deliver will be coming back and will be biting at our heels."

Meanwhile, Britain's Labour Party suffered significant election setbacks in areas with large Muslim populations yesterday amid discontent over its position on the war in Gaza, despite a landslide victory in the parliamentary vote.

Pro-Gaza independents also won in Blackburn, and Dewsbury & Batley, beating Labour into second in both. Labour also failed to win in Islington North, where its former leader, veteran left-winger and ardent pro-Palestinian activist Jeremy Corbyn won as an independent.

Corbyn resigned as Labour leader in 2019 after the party suffered its worst election defeat since 1935, and Starmer threw him out of the parliamentary party less than a year later, accusing him of undermining efforts to tackle anti-Semitism.

While Labour has said it wants the fighting in Gaza to stop, it has also backed Israel's right to defend itself, angering some among the 3.9 million Muslims who make up 6.5% of Britain's population.

Russian strikes kill 2, wound 15 in Ukraine

AFP, Kyiv

Russian attacks killed two and wounded more than a dozen others in the eastern Donetsk region of Ukraine yesterday, regional officials said.

Moscow has centred its firepower on the industrial region, which it claims to have annexed and has been partially controlled by Kremlin-backed forces since 2014.

"A village council employee was killed and 14 of her colleagues were wounded during hostile shelling in the Volnovakha district," prosecutors said in a statement.

The head of the region said one person was killed and another was wounded in a Russian Smerch rocket attack on the town of Ukrainsk.

"The Selydivska community is constantly under enemy attack -- it is dangerous to stay here, as well as in the rest of Donetsk region," said governor Vadym Filashkin.

Russian forces are pushing towards the hilltop settlement of Chasiv Yar in the Donetsk region. Images distributed by Ukrainian forces of the town show rows of destroyed and smouldering Soviet-era housing blocs.

Russian President Vladimir Putin told Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban that Ukraine must abandon four regions in the east and south -- including Donetsk -- that Moscow claims as its own if Kyiv wants peace.

PRESIDENTIAL RUN-OFF

Iranians vote amid apathy

REUTERS, Dubai

Iranians voted yesterday for a run-off presidential election that will test the clerical rulers' popularity amid voter apathy at a time of regional tensions and a standoff with the West over Tehran's nuclear programme.

The final result will be announced today, although initial figures may come out sooner.

The run-off follows a June 28 ballot with historically low turnout, when over 60 percent of Iranian voters abstained from the snap election for a successor to Ebrahim Raisi, following his death in a helicopter crash. The low participation is seen by critics as a vote of no confidence in the Islamic Republic.

The vote is a tight race between low-key lawmaker Masoud Pezeshkian, the sole moderate in the original field of four candidates, and hardline former nuclear negotiator Saeed Jalili, a staunch advocate of deepening ties with Russia and China.

While the election is expected to have little impact on the Islamic Republic's policies, the president will be closely involved in selecting the successor to Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, Iran's 85-year-old Supreme Leader who calls all the shots on top matters of state.

attempted an audacious 'Panenka' chip to outwit the goalkeeper. However, his shot clipped the crossbar, leaving fans and teammates stunned.

Yet, Argentina's No.1 quickly turned the tide once again, making crucial saves on consecutive penalties, demonstrating his unwavering nerve in pressure situations and redeeming Messi's earlier miss.

Reflecting on Martinez's impact, Messi remarked, "When we're at this stage, that's an advantage."

Coach Lionel Scaloni emphasized Martinez's pivotal role in the penalty shootout, stating, "The team has complete faith in our goalkeeper. Even with Leo missing, we knew something positive would happen."

Despite Messi's penalty miss, Argentina's shooters remained composed throughout the shootout, scoring four in a row to secure their place in the semifinals, where they await the winner of today's match between Venezuela and Canada.

Put an end

July 2 was issued by Senate Majority Whip Dick Durbin and senators Jeff Merkley, Tim Kaine, and Peter Welch.

"For more than a decade, Professor Yunus has faced more than 100 unsubstantiated cases brought against him in Bangladesh. The harassment campaign against Professor Yunus has been denounced by more than 100 Nobel Prize winners, including former President Obama," reads the statement.

The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Türk and Amnesty International have identified irregularities in the proceedings against Prof Yunus. This includes a recent six-month prison sentence for allegedly violating the country's labour laws and another indictment on embezzlement.

"These reputable organisations argue that the speed and repeated use of various criminal proceedings are indicative of politically motivated judicial abuses. Moreover, the repeated and sustained harassment of Professor Yunus mirrors what many Bangladeshi civil society members also face in an increasingly restrictive environment," reads the statement.

While the US values its longstanding relationship with Bangladesh, the failure to end this seemingly personal vendetta against Professor Yunus will negatively impact that partnership, it reads.

"We again call for the immediate end to the harassment of Professor Yunus..."

On January 22, 12 senators including Durbin, Merkley, Kaine, and Welch sent a letter to Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, calling for an end to the harassment of Professor Yunus.

The other signatories were senators Todd Young, Dan Sullivan, Jeanne Shaheen, Ed Markey, Sherrod Brown, Sheldon Whitehouse, Ron Wyden, and Cory Booker.

Six lives lost as bus hits truck

Farid Hossain said, "A bus of Nabil Enterprise was traveling from Dhaka to Ranisankail upazila in Thakurgaon. Around 6:00am, as the bus approached Chawkrampur village, the driver lost control and collided with a speeding truck coming from the opposite direction."

Upon receiving the emergency call, police and the rescue response team from Dinajpur Fire Service and Civil Defence promptly arrived at the location.

They rescued 30 people, mostly passengers of the bus, and rushed them to M Abdur Rahim Medical College Hospital. Three of them died at the hospital.

The accident damaged the truck's cockpit and the front of the bus. Police had to cut through the mangled wreckage of both vehicles to recover the bodies. It took police an hour to clear the wreckage and restore road communication on the highway.

In a separate incident, later in the afternoon, a collision between a truck and a cattle-laden three-wheeler in Phulbari upazila resulted in two fatalities and four injuries.

The incident occurred around 2:00pm on the Dinajpur-Gobindaganj regional highway, near the Phulbari Upazila Health Complex in North Sujapur, said Phulbari Police Station Officer-in-Charge Mostafizar Rahman.

The deceased were identified as three-wheeler driver Menhazul, 40, and cattle trader Aman, 45, both from Joypurhat's Panchbibi upazila.

According to police and local sources, a truck was heading towards Dinajpur while the three-wheeler, carrying nine cattle, was travelling from Amabari Hat towards Panchbibi. As they reached the road bend near North Sujapur on the Dinajpur-Gobindaganj highway, a head-on collision with a truck severely damaged the front parts of both vehicles. Menhazul and Aman died on the spot.

Police and fire service personnel, along with locals, rescued the injured and took them to the health complex.

Efforts to secure Gaza

Gaza health authorities say more than 38,000 Palestinians have been killed in the Israeli offensive launched since last Oct 7.

The war has displaced hundreds of thousands of Gazans and caused a humanitarian crisis. It has also fuelled tension across the region, triggering exchanges of fire across Israel's northern border with the Iran-backed Hezbollah group in Lebanon.

Hamas said it had told Hezbollah it had agreed to a ceasefire proposal in Gaza and that the Lebanese group's leader had welcomed the step, two sources familiar with the matter said.

"If there is a Gaza agreement, then from zero hour there will be a ceasefire in Lebanon," said one of the sources, an official in Hezbollah, which says its rocket and drone attacks on northern Israel are in support of the Palestinians.

Turkey's president, Tayyip Erdogan, was quoted by Turkish media as saying he hoped a "final ceasefire" could be secured "in a couple of days", and urged Western countries to put pressure on Israel to accept the terms on offer.

Some far-right partners in Netanyahu's governing coalition have indicated they may quit the government if the war ends before Hamas is destroyed. Their departure would probably end Netanyahu's premiership.

for penalties, Olmo lofted a cross for Merino, who headed Spain into the semi-finals and on course for a record-breaking fourth Euros crown.

Germany's exit brings to an end the hosts' hope of a summer fairytale Euros victory after a decade of poor performances at major tournaments, while also lowering the curtain on Toni Kroos' stellar career.

The battle between the two most successful Euros nations, with three titles apiece, was billed as a final come early, with the in-form Spaniards against Nagelsmann's reborn hosts.

Spain nominated Kroos as Germany's most dangerous pre-match but the midfielder had a huge, even if unintended impact early, colliding with Pedri, who was then subbed off with a leg injury for Olmo.

Germany, with the oldest squad at Euro 2024, struggled with Spain's speed during the first half, frequently coming into duels a fraction too late, but the two best chances of the opening half fell to the hosts -- and both to Kai Havertz.

The Arsenal forward leapt highest to head a cross directly at Unai Simon early and then scuffed a tame shot at the goalie later in the half with just the 'keeper to beat.

After a goalless first half, Nagelsmann took off surprise starter Emre Can for the pink-haired Robert Andrich, while the ineffective Leroy Sane was hooked in place of Wirtz.

The substitution who would make his mark however was Olmo, who gave Spain the lead six minutes into the second half, slicing through the sleepy Germany defence to perfectly place a Yamal pass past Manuel Neuer in the bottom left corner.

The goal kicked Germany into gear with Wirtz particularly dangerous.

The Bayer Leverkusen starlet linked with Fuellkrug on the counter with a quarter of an hour remaining but the striker, under heavy attention from the Spanish defence, could only hit the post.

With 10 minutes remaining Nagelsmann made his final substitution, bringing veteran Thomas Mueller from the bench.

But it was Wirtz -- 13 years his junior - who made the difference, skimming a Joshua Kimmich header across the grass and in at the far post in the final minute, sending the game to extra time.

Mikel Oyarzabal, on for Williams, curled a 104th-minute shot just wide of the post and Wirtz did the same a minute later with the goal beckoning.

Germany appealed strongly for a penalty in the second period of extra time, after a goal-bound Jamal Musiala shot clearly connected with Marc Cucurella's outstretched hand.

After the penalty drama, Olmo curled in a cross for Merino, who leapt high to head the ball past Neuer and put Spain into the Euros semi-finals.

Padma Bridge a source of huge pride with pride in the international arena... This is the biggest achievement," she said.

Hasina was addressing a rally in Mawa marking the closing of the Padma Bridge construction work.

She said that the mindset of those who used to show an attitude towards Bangladesh that it cannot dowithout their support has changed.

"This Padma Bridge is the structure of our pride....Now the people honour Bangladesh in the international arena..."

The PM said the country would be transformed into a developed, prosperous and Smart Bangladesh by 2041 through socio-economic development.

"We will continue to move forward at an irresistible pace overcoming all obstacles, no matter how many arein the way. We will take Bangladesh forward by implementing the ideals of the Father of the Nation."

Hasina said the Padma Bridge has opened the door for socio-economic advancement of the southwestern region.

She said Bangladesh's independence, which came at the cost of tens of thousands of martyrs, has not gone in vain.

The premier thanked the consultants, workers, and others involved in the Padma Bridge project. She also expressed her gratitude to those local families who gave up their land for the project.

Hasina recalled the contribution of late Dr Jamilur Reza Choudhury, an eminent civil engineer who served as the chair of an international committee of experts, and late communications minister Syed Abul Hossain.

Criticising the role of Dr Muhammad Yunus in the withdrawal of the Word Bank's offer of funds for the Padma Bridge project, the PM said she never got the answer as to why a Nobel laureate is so obsessed over the mere post of the managing director of a bank.

Now the people can know what kind of honey was in the MD post when they see the labourers filing lawsuits and cases being lodged for tax evasion and corruption (against Dr Yunus), she said.

"More information will come out when the auditor's report on Grameen Bank is revealed."

On her arrival at the rally venue at 3:50pm, Hasina was received by Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader.

Former cabinet secretary Khandker Anwarul Islam, Bridges Division Senior Secretary Monjur Hossain and Project Director Shafiqul Islam also spoke at the event, with Quader in the chair.

The Bridges Division secretary said the project was completed on June 30 at a cost of Tk 30,770.13 crore.

A documentary on the Padma Bridge was screened at the programme.

On June 25, 2022, Hasina inaugurated the 6.15-km Padma Bridge which directly connects the country's 21 southern and south-western districts with the capital.

PM PAYS HOMAGE TO BANGABANDHU

In the afternoon yesterday, the prime minister travelled to her ancestral home at Tungipara of Gopalganj by road.

She paid tributes to Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman there and offered prayers at his mausoleum.

Hasina joined a prayer seeking eternal peace of the departed souls of Bangabandhu and his family members who were killed on August 15, 1975.

ARTCELLISM LIVES ON

In the dim light of a cosy studio, the air thick with anticipation, I found myself face-to-face with the rock legends of our country. The members of Artcell, clad in their iconic black band t-shirts, lounged before me with an air of casual camaraderie that belied their status in Bangladesh's rock pantheon.

MAHIYA TABASSUM

As I was preparing for the camera to roll, a humbling realisation struck me—this band had been crafting sonic masterpieces before I had even mastered my mother tongue. Their creations, like— Oniket Prantor, Onno Shomoy, Obosh Onubhutir Deyal, Amar Poth Chola, Dhushor Shomoy—had become the soundtrack to a generation's hopes, dreams, and rebellions.

Twenty-five years. A lifetime for some, a blink of an eye for others. For Artcell, it represented a journey etched in power chords and poetic lyrics, a reflection of their enduring impact on Bangladesh's musical landscape.

As four members from the current lineup—George Lincoln D'Costa, Kazi Faisal Ahmed, Kazi Asheqeen Shaju, and Iqbal Asif Jewel—graced The Daily Star studio, they talked about their 25-year celebration, recent tour, future projects, and more.

To mark their silver jubilee, Artcell embarked on an ambitious international tour. Lincoln shares, "We kicked off our celebration with a tour starting in Australia, followed by performances across nine Canadian provinces."

The Canadian leg proved particularly significant, with shows in major cities like Toronto, Vancouver, and Winnipeg. Notably, Artcell made history as the first Bangladeshi band to perform in St John's, Newfoundland, and Regina, Saskatchewan. Band member Saef Al Nazi Cezann, currently residing in Australia, rejoined the group for this tour.

Shaju highlights the unique connection experienced during these performances. "We reconnected with fans from our RCC days, many now settling into careers or pursuing PhDs. It's a rare opportunity to engage so intimately with our audience, something we don't often experience during larger gigs back home."

Twenty-five years. A lifetime for some, a blink of an eye for others. For Artcell, it represented a journey etched in power chords and poetic lyrics, a reflection of their enduring impact on Bangladesh's musical landscape.

The tour, organised by Toronto-based MNC Entertainment, allowed Artcell to showcase a broader repertoire. Jewel explains, "In Bangladesh, mixed concerts often limit us to our greatest hits. In Canada, we had the freedom to play extended sets, as long as two hours, including deeper cuts like Rahur Grash, Otritio, Bhul Jonmo, and Dhushor Shomoy."

"Bhul Jonmo wasn't even on our list. The crowd started chanting it and we had to play it on the spot," shares Faisal.

In 2023, Artcell released Otritio, their third album, following a 17-year hiatus since the massively successful Oniket Prantor. "Conceived over a decade ago, it explores the destination, something that we search for. The destination may seem incomprehensible, miraculous, or unreal at first, but it can be the only truth, to be comprehended in the future," says Lincoln.

"Lincoln is being cryptic with the answer," interrupts Jewel with a playful smile. He then goes on to elaborate, "This is a concept album, there's a lot of room to think for the listener. This is a story set in the future, blending science, fiction, as well as spirituality."

The band acknowledges that Otritio hasn't resonated as strongly with audiences as their earlier work. Shaju explains, "We deliberately departed from our conventional approach. As a progressive rock album, we knew it might not immediately appeal to younger listeners. Our goal was to create a conceptual album and make a statement as a band, that would remain in history."

Discussing the current state of local music industry, the band reflects on the challenges of creating timeless classics in today's fast-paced, content-saturated environment. Shaju notes, "It's too early to say we're not getting enduring hits. Oniket Prantor was released in 2006. It was around 2012-2013 when it became a hit or achieved its classic status."

The band also discusses the double-edged sword of digital platforms, which have democratised music distribution by labels but led to content oversaturation. "People are constantly looking for dopamine hits, even videos are becoming too long for their attention span. So, they are switching to reels with a shorter duration. This way, it has become difficult to find that space to grow a loyal fanbase for a song or band. But quality songs are being made, tons of them. We need to listen to them sincerely," he adds.

Jewel further emphasises the collective responsibility to promote quality, "Instead of making low-quality content viral, we must promote quality ones. Otherwise, not just the music industry, art, film, and every other form of media industry will suffer."

On the topic of AI in music creation, Jewel expresses measured scepticism. "While AI has its uses, like restoring old recordings, it can't replicate the emotional depth of human-created music. It's a tool, but not a substitute for genuine creativity."

Artcell hints at several upcoming projects, including a corporate collaboration featuring a music video. Jewel reveals, "We're developing six or seven new tracks and have plans for more. Our creative process is organic; we don't rush to meet external demands."

Reflecting on their enduring success, Lincoln attributes it to "perseverance, consistency, dedication, and passion for music."

'Maamla Legal Hai': Legal realities from diverse lens

The courtroom drama of Netflix's Maamla Legal Hai owes its entertainment value entirely to the whole cast. Directed by Rahul Pandey and written jointly by Kunal Aneja and Saurabh Khanna, it cleverly blends real-life cases through each of its episodes—offering insights into the courts of the Indian heartland and their challenges.

Actor Ravi Kishan shines brightly in his role as advocate VD Tyagi. The show takes an engaging approach to depict the lives and challenges of various lawyers belonging to different social classes: some in their chambers, others seated on benches in the court's parking area, and some under trees. Most importantly, all of them face genuine struggles, including those in positions of judicial authority.

In Maamla Legal Hai, the lawyers are portrayed as complex characters with shades of grey, rather than simply black or white. While Ravi Kishan leads the cast, every character plays a significant and equally important role, making each one a unique hero in their own right.

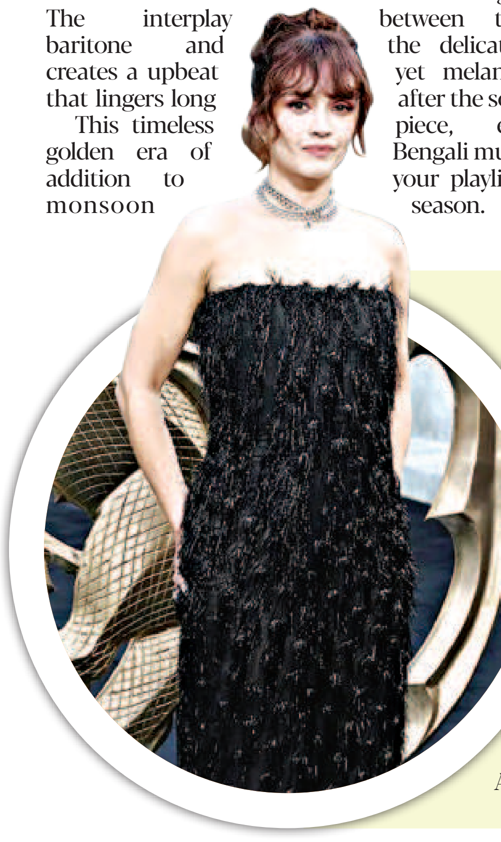
WHAT'S PLAYING

Ami Jharer Kachhe Rekhe Gelam

Ami Jharer Kachhe Rekhe Gelam, sung by the legendary Hemanta Mukherjee, is a haunting Bengali melody that showcases the artiste's deep, mellifluous voice. The song, composed by Salil Chowdhury, evokes a profound sense of longing and separation. Hemanta's emotive rendition perfectly captures the poignant lyrics, which speak of leaving one's beloved in the care of a storm.

The composition's gentle, flowing rhythm mimics the ebb and flow of emotions, while the orchestration subtly enhances the mood without overshadowing Hemanta's vocals. The interplay between the singer's rich baritone and the delicate instrumentation creates a upbeat yet melancholic atmosphere that lingers long after the song ends.

This timeless piece, exemplifying the golden era of Bengali music, can be a perfect addition to your playlist to celebrate this monsoon season.



OLIVIA COOKE

Olivia Cooke, the leading lady of Team Green in the ongoing HBO Max series House of the Dragon, showcased a remarkable look during the show's London premiere.

Decked out in an all black Stella McCartney gown, embellished with glittering black tassels, the strapless piece gave the actress an edgy and moody look. Her understated makeup was accentuated by nude pink lipstick, and she finished off the look with a high-up curly bun.

Olivia's fluffed face-framing bangs, alongside the silver vintage-esque necklace, give her the overall regal flair—reminiscent of her character Alicent Hightower in the series.

Don't dismiss human rights violations

ASK report paints disturbing picture of first six months of 2024

We are disturbed by Ain O Salish Kendra's (ASK) report on the human rights situation in Bangladesh in the first half of 2024. According to one of the leading human rights organisations—which prepares the report every year based on news published in national dailies, alongside its own findings—political killings have tripled, and custodial deaths doubled this year compared to the same period in the previous year. At least 250 women were raped across the country from January to July this year, 631 children became victims of killings, torture, and repression, 35 people were lynched by mobs and 21 temples and 25 Hindu homes were vandalised. If this is how the first six months of the third term of the Awami League government has played out, can citizens be blamed for worrying about what the future holds?

At least 41 people were killed in incidents of political violence in the first six months of 2024. The alarming increase in political violence can be traced back to the general election on January 7, city corporation elections, and upazila polls held in four phases across the country. Although the polls were boycotted by the main opposition parties, including BNP, it is unfortunate that we still witnessed untoward killings and violence, mostly among supporters of Awami League candidates and independent AL candidates or, in the case of local elections, among AL-affiliated candidates. We have not seen any acknowledgement from the government, its law enforcement agencies and the Election Commission about its failure in preventing intra-party violence and an intimidating election-time environment. Instead, in a controversial move, the home ministry deleted all data relating to 1,524 complaints of electoral violence and breach of electoral code of conduct received between December 19, 2023 and January 10 this year.

Meanwhile, at least eight individuals, including two women, died in custody during this period. Again, we have not seen any meaningful action to hold accountable law enforcers involved in allegations of torture and extrajudicial excesses, despite repeated appeals from national and human rights bodies. In fact, there has only been one conviction for custodial death over the past decade, though ASK documented at least 138 deaths that have been allegedly caused by physical torture by law enforcement agencies.

Over the years, we have observed a concerning dismissal or downplaying of human rights abuses by the government, even when presented with compelling statistics. Will the third term of the Awami League government be more of the same, or will it finally realise that no amount of economic growth and infrastructural development can make up for gross human rights violations, and that it is ultimately in its best interests to address them? For the sake of citizens, we hope it is the latter.

Stop ignoring militancy threats

Focus more on deradicalising ex-militants in prison

A recent police intelligence report has confirmed what we have been warning about in this column for years: militants in prisons, far from being rehabilitated and deradicalised, are continuing their communications with members of militant outfits outside of prisons, possibly gathering strength and reorganising. This indicates that the soft power approach being pursued by the authorities in prisons are not working at all.

Militants in prison, like all other prisoners, need to be rehabilitated and shown a better path. But because of the way our prisons are presently operating—with prisoners crammed beyond prison limits, inadequate resources allocated for them and very little focus on their rehabilitation—they are doing the exact opposite. Only a year ago, this newspaper reported on how militant leaders have been taking advantage of gaps in surveillance to form new outfits and recruit members inside and outside prisons. By intercepting communications, intelligence officers also managed to learn that Neo JMB leader Saiful Islam Khaled, now on death row at Kashimpur High Security Prison for the 2016 Holey Artisan cafe attack, was contacting Bangladeshi IS militants in Afghanistan, asking for financial support to reorganise the militant group in Bangladesh. This, of course, should seriously concern the authorities. Unfortunately, it seems that has not been the case as surveillance gaps continue to persist in our prisons, according to police report.

What is further concerning is that militants in prisons have apparently been able to smuggle cell phones into the jails with the help of some prison guards. Due to such neglect, even militant leaders living abroad are regularly communicating with jailed members in Bangladesh. With that being the case, it is difficult to imagine that the jailed members will ever become deradicalised. What then, will be the outcome when they finally get out of prison? Will they not again bolster the ranks of different militant groups? It seems that the government has no plan on what to do with these people. And the militant outfits are taking full advantage of that.

Hence, we once again reiterate the importance of cutting off the communication of these prisoners with outside militant forces. Authorities must put greater focus on deradicalising and rehabilitating them, and also increasing surveillance in prisons to ensure that these measures are actually working. After all, militancy poses one of the greatest threats to our national security, as well as our secular social fabric—and strongly contradicts the religious values held by the majority of our citizens.

The paradox of whitening black money while fighting corruption

Kamal Ahmed
is an independent journalist. His X handle is @ ahmedka1

KAMAL AHMED

Bangladesh is often described as a "paradox"; it excels in crucial social indicators while scoring poorly on the quality of governance. This paradox was evident when two contrasting news stories emerged from the same session of the Jatiya Sangsad on June 29: one about the prime minister's vow to crack down on graft, and the other about retaining amnesty for possessors of black money. How does one reconcile such contradictions? Has the government redefined corruption by excluding proceeds from illegal transactions, graft, and tax evasion, commonly known as black money?

Critics argue that the definition of black money varies depending on who holds it. This money seems less problematic if the holder is connected to the ruling party. Despite loud proclamations of "zero tolerance," government efforts rarely make a lasting impact on curbing corruption.

Currently, the country is abuzz with complaints about bureaucratic corruption. Previously, there was noise about traders' excessive profits and syndicates. A few years ago, Awami League embodied the zero-tolerance mantra when it tackled illegal wealth from casinos, gambling, and extortion. There was no shortage of theatrics when alleged casino kingpins were arrested in raids, which included quite a few Jubo League leaders, such as Ismail Chowdhury Samrat, Khaled Mahmud Bhuiyan, Kazi Anisur Rahman, and AKM Mominul Haque. Now, however, prosecutors seem to have forgotten about pursuing conviction for the accused, with all of them out on bail.

Considering the slew of unresolved large-scale financial crimes such as fraud and embezzlement of bank loans, insider trading, and manipulations in the stock market involving thousands of crores, one may wonder why there is even talk of a crackdown on corruption.

In the past decade and a half, the stock market has experienced at least three major manipulations. Those who looted investors' wealth faced no significant consequences. Similarly, fraud and embezzlement of bank loans have been long-standing issues. In 2012, the late Finance Minister Abul Maal Abdul Muhith downplayed Hallmark's Tk 4,000-crore fraud, saying, "It is not a big sum." At the time, his words seemed incredible, but now, with the scale of corruption being uncovered, his statement appears less mistaken or humorous. Banks being used to break rules and create precedents for anonymous loans in the billions is now commonplace.

Despite the noise about corruption, the corrupt seem largely unaffected. Government measures, like transfers or demotions after grand corruption allegations, suggest a "hate the sin, not the sinner" approach. Thus, criminals have no trouble withdrawing money or transferring assets before fleeing abroad. Critics of the government or opposition members, however, struggle to secure court permission just to travel.

Everyone wants corrupt bureaucrats tried, but the belief that they will face justice is almost nonexistent. This scepticism arises from the long-standing patronage they receive from political authorities, reflecting a partisan state apparatus. This is evident from the various medals and awards given to administrative and police officials for suppressing political opposition and overseeing one-sided elections. The Suddhachar (integrity) Award, intended as part of the anti-corruption drive, ironically has been bestowed upon record-setting corrupt individuals like former police chief Benazir Ahmed.

The one-sided election on January 7 has probably faded from many of our memories, along with the asset lists of candidates. Since the election was boycotted, and most candidates were from Awami League, the wealth disclosures in their affidavits highlighted how lucrative politics is. Transparency International Bangladesh found that the assets of the top 10 wealthiest MPs multiplied by up to 55 times in five years. The wealth of the richest MP's wife increased about 35 times, and over 15 years, his wealth surged 2,436 times. Many of these politicians are businessmen, yet such business growth is rare even in the West. Transparency's analysis of ministers' and state ministers' wealth also found up to eleven-fold wealth growth and 22 times income growth in five years.

Transparency identified 18 billionaires among candidates. Despite laws limiting single ownership to 100 bighas of land, affidavits revealed many own agricultural and non-agricultural land far exceeding this limit. The top 10 landowners possess 1.5 to 20 times the legal limit.

On January 11, Transparency called for verifying candidates' affidavits, analysing their assets and income statements, and confiscating any illegal asset through proper legal processes. They also recommended seizing land exceeding legal limits, which was not too difficult as these disclosures came in their affidavits. None of this happened. Had politicians' illegal land been confiscated, bureaucrats might have been deterred from pursuing dreams of becoming zamindars.

It has already been proven that raising alarm bells about the corruption of various professionals and groups will achieve little if the political sponsors of corruption are kept out of the reckoning. What's happening now is best described as mega-corruption, and at the rate at which complaints are heard, corruption has become decentralised. Whoever has the power, the maximum of it is being used for corruption. There is no solution to this problem unless there is a change in politics and a return to accountable democracy and the rule of law.

Why Macronism failed

JanWerner Mueller
Professor of Politics at Princeton University, is the author, most recently, of Democracy Rules

JAN-WERNER MUELLER

Following his party's decisive loss to the far-right National Rally in the European Parliament election, French President Emmanuel Macron shocked everyone by dissolving the National Assembly and calling a snap election. He has justified his decision by claiming that an election will "clarify" the political situation, but his compatriots do not share this view.

As Édouard Philippe, Macron's prime minister from 2017 to 2020, put it, the president has needlessly "killed the presidential majority." A hung parliament with National Rally as the largest party is now considered the most likely outcome. Still, Macron's decision has clarified one thing: his strategy to create a powerful centrism in France has failed. Other European leaders should take note.

Legend has it that the first question Napoleon would ask about a military officer was not whether he was talented, but whether he was lucky. In 2017, Macron was extraordinarily lucky. The incumbent was so unpopular that he did not even bother to run for a second term, and the likely conservative winner was felled by a scandal. Macron seized the moment to offer what one might call a Second Coming of the "Third Way." Just like Tony Blair, the British Labour Party leader who came to power in 1997, Macron held that the old ideological cleavage of left and right was dépassé, and that centrists should simply pick the policies that "worked best."

Macron appealed to both socialists and conservative Gaullists, on the assumption that all reasonable people could unite happily in the moderate middle. For a while, this approach had traction, because Macron's seemingly ever-expanding was flanked by Marine Le Pen's National Front (now National Rally) on the far right and by the firebrand Jean-Luc Mélenchon's France Unbowed on the far left. But the technocratic approach—"if you're not with us, you're unreasonable"—ultimately failed to transform the political landscape.

The far right, far left, centre left, and centre right each still tend to win at least a fifth of the vote in the first round of French presidential elections, on average. But the centre-right Republicans have been hemorrhaging votes to National Rally, prompting the party's leader, Éric Ciotti, to endorse an alliance with the far right. This matters, because Macron's overwhelming support in the second round of the 2017 and 2022 elections—when he was facing off against Le Pen—was largely due to voters' hostility to the far right, not burgeoning enthusiasm for Macron-style technocracy.

Macron's haughty style—already in 2017, he let it be known that he wanted to rule like "Jupiter"—certainly did not help. But quite apart from the personal failings of a man who fancies himself a philosopher-king, a centrist project aimed at taking the best from the left and the right was always more likely to alienate both than to harmonise their contradictory agendas.

Once Macron had lost control of the National Assembly in 2022, his prime minister, Élisabeth Borne, heroically tried to cobble together ad hoc majorities to advance the president's agenda. But on more than 20 occasions, she resorted to constitutional shortcuts to ram through measures that clearly lacked popular support.

Macron's haughty style—already in 2017, he let it be known that he wanted to rule like "Jupiter"—certainly did not help. But quite apart from the personal failings of a man who fancies himself a philosopher-king, a centrist project aimed at taking the best from the left and the right was always more likely to alienate both than to harmonise their contradictory agendas.

Macron's centrism not only looked increasingly authoritarian; it also acquired a rightward tilt. Hence, his hardline interior minister went so far as to accuse Le Pen of being soft on Islamism, and Borne introduced an immigration law that seemed to legitimise the claims made by the far right. Constantly shift rightward, and you eventually will reach a point where you can no longer blackmail voters with the argument that you are the only thing standing in the way of right-wing extremism and the end of the Republic.

Some commentators speculate that Macron wants the National Rally to govern until the 2027 presidential election so it will prove itself incompetent and set the stage for a triumphant shift back toward the centre. But this kind of quasi-pedagogical project—with the headmaster showing his pupils that the substitute teacher doesn't know how to do the job—is misguided for several reasons.

For starters, not all far-right populists have overly simplistic policy ideas or are amateur administrators. In cases where they do prove themselves incompetent, their fortunes can recover. When Austria's Machiavellian Christian Democratic chancellor, Wolfgang Schüssel, brought Jörg Haider's far-right Freedom Party into government in 2000, the populists descended into infighting and revealed their incompetence and corruption. But after splitting up and licking its wounds, the Freedom Party sailed to victory in last month's European elections.

Moreover, since the French system allows for "cohabitation"—when the president and the prime minister belong to opposing parties—an incompetent-seeming governing party can blame the other side for tying its hands. Wielding the extraordinary powers of the French presidency, Macron will doubtless find an outlet on the international stage. But it is sobering to see that his vision has been downgraded from a "revolution" in 2017 to a "renaissance" in 2022 to what it is today. Macron failed to transform the movement he started into a proper political party that is not dependent on a charismatic leader. His charisma gone, the centre's prospects for 2027 look bleak.

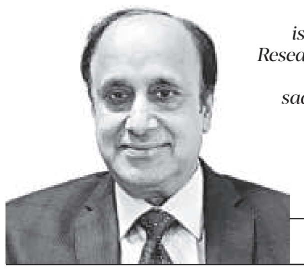
The large cracks in Bangladesh that IMF missed



Dr Sadiq Ahmed
is vice-chairman of the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh (PRI). He can be reached at sadiqahmed1952@gmail.com.

SADIQ AHMED

In January 2023, Bangladesh entered into a $4.7-billion IMF programme, spanning over 42 months, to fight the pressures on the macroeconomy and arrest the associated economic downslide. These pressures, triggered by a series of external shocks emerging from Covid-19, global inflation and the Ukraine War, had accumulated over a number of years owing to weak economic management. The policy corrections, therefore, involve macroeconomic adjustments, structural reforms and institutional strengthening.

The core IMF programme was broken down into six reviews, and the associated policy reforms were designed to become progressively more challenging. The government should take some comfort in successfully negotiating the release of the second review on June 24. While the government succeeded in ticking many of the conditionalities for the first and second review and convinced the IMF to be more flexible on some others, in substance, the two most important policy reforms implemented so far are the flexibility of the exchange rate and interest rate. However, fiscal correction has not happened, and the structural reforms in taxation, subsidies, state-owned enterprises, trade policy, and the banking sector have not made adequate progress.

Against this backdrop, the IMF has identified nine specific risks and uncertainties that could jeopardise progress with implementation of the IMF programme and constrain the ability of Bangladesh to successfully stabilise the macroeconomy and resume the growth process on a sustainable path. Five of these risks are global in nature and four are domestic.

The global risks include intensification of regional conflicts, commodity price volatility, abrupt global slowdown, systemic financial instability, and deepening geoeconomic fragmentation. The domestic ones relate to failure to maintain a market-based flexible exchange system, failure to address banking sector reforms, insufficient international support in resolving the Rohingya crisis, and higher frequency and severity of natural disasters related to climate change.

The global risks are well identified. It is hard to quarrel with them. Regional conflicts and deepening geoeconomic fragmentation are of particular concern. Yet, it is fair to say many of these risks have prevailed over the decades. The main policy implication of these risks is to make an all-out effort to stabilise the macroeconomy and resume the momentum of sustainable growth as quickly as possible. Growing economic resilience is the best way to absorb external shocks and take corrective actions in the future.

VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

The list of domestic risks is way too conservative and misses out some big-ticket items. Regarding the Rohingya crisis, this is more in the nature of an external risk. Bangladesh is doing its best to drum up international support. Progress with fiscal reforms will help create more space to fund Rohingya needs.

Concerning climate-related natural disasters, this is more a long-term challenge, although admittedly, Bangladesh's response in instituting policies and programmes to build greater climate resilience so far has been weak. It is not clear whether the IMF programme's $1.4-billion climate resilience component has been very effective in strengthening this policy response, especially in regards to mainstreaming climate change policies in planning, budgeting, incentives and institutional capabilities. I would like to throw the ball back at the IMF's court and ask it to reassess this component to see if the programme design was adequate to secure substantial climate reforms with potential long-term benefit.

The two remaining domestic risks are both very relevant and fall in the high risk category. It has now been 18 months since the IMF programme was approved, and little progress has been achieved in the banking sector. If anything, downside risks have increased. The volume of non-performing loans and distressed assets continues to increase, and there is little sign that a reversal is coming anytime soon. Without meaningful progress on banking reforms, the overall quality of the IMF programme will suffer.

On the exchange rate, an encouraging beginning has been made with the reform on May 8. The unification of the exchange rate and adoption of the interim crawling peg regime is a sound reform. Steps must be taken to quickly move to a fully flexible market-based exchange system. The risk of slippage is high, but the IMF must remain vigilant in monitoring this risk and engage with the government to stay on track.

Several substantial domestic risks have not been identified in the IMF risk matrix. These risks are not only high but present more immediate adverse consequences for the macroeconomy and resumption of growth momentum than the seven other risks noted by the IMF (the five global, the Rohingya, and the natural disaster ones).

First and foremost is the weakness of fiscal policy. This is the Achilles heel of Bangladesh's development strategy, and progress has been faltering for a long time. The 18 months of the IMF programme has brought in some marginal progress, but most of the institutional and structural aspects of the tax reform programme have not been addressed.

A big missing item in the budget is the absence of reform of the state-owned enterprises (SOEs). The financial return on investments in SOEs is very low and net budgetary transfers to sustain these poorly performing SOEs are way too high. Reform of SOEs is an easy win and surprisingly not emphasised in the IMF programme.

Of immediate concern is the consistency of the FY2025 budget with monetary policy for inflation control. At 4.6 percent of GDP, the budget deficit is way too high to allow the credit tightening that is needed to control inflation. There is a high risk that the budget will either crowd out private credit or cause a loosening of monetary policy thereby jeopardising inflation control.

A big missing item in the budget is the absence of reform of the state-owned enterprises (SOEs). The financial return on investments in SOEs is very low and net budgetary transfers to sustain these poorly performing SOEs are way too high. Reform of SOEs is an easy win and surprisingly not emphasised in the IMF programme.

On the spending side, the budget subsidy target is too high while the allocations for health, education, training, agriculture, water, and social protection are too low. At a time when job creation is constrained, the economy is slowing down, and inflation is high, the low level of spending on social protection (0.8 percent of GDP excluding civil service pensions) is very disturbing and must be corrected.

Another major structural reform where very little progress has been made concerns trade protection. This again is a long-standing challenge. The tax revenue's excessive dependence on customs duties, including supplementary and regulatory duties, has prevented any meaningful progress with trade reforms even after 18 months of the IMF programme. Consequently, the anti-export bias of trade policy prevails, which constrains export diversification and growth of non-RMG exports. Indeed, the slowdown in export growth to a mere 2 percent in FY2024 is a hugely worrisome development for both the sustainable management of the balance of payments and recovery of the growth momentum.

The final missing risk area is governance and institutions. The high incidence of corruption, some of which have erupted openly in the public domain, especially at a time when inflation is high and the economy has slowed, is a huge threat to social and economic stability. The government has adopted a policy of zero tolerance for corruption. This is comforting to know but it must now act decisively to implement its policy of zero tolerance. It must dig down to the root causes of corrupt practices and implement the required institutional and regulatory reforms that eliminate/minimise the scope for rent seeking.

PENSION WARS AND QUOTA PROTESTS:

The manufactured divide

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza is professor of English at Dhaka University.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

How does it feel to live in a society that seems to be melting from the bottom up, as well as from the top down? On one end of the pendulum, you see one of your country's biggest loan defaulters, aka one of the "Crazy Rich Asians," throwing a lavish wedding party in the Middle East. Then you witness common people groaning in front of the fish market, unable to afford anything except the throwaway guts and bones.

The "division bell" is responsible for creating a toxic climate in which our resentment for one another grows while our compassion for one another declines. Polarisation, rife with mutual fear and rage, is on the rise. Something dark and sinister is occurring. Our long-term sense of solidarity is fading; we are seeing a rise in isolationism and hostility. The problem is sociological. People blame rotten politics, social media, and moral or spiritual degradation for the venom's spread. It seems each group is on its own. We hardly give each other any thought until the issue flares close by.

Public university teachers are on strike, calling for the protection of their pension rights.

PHOTO: STAR

Many divisive problems that pit one group against the other clearly show how our society is disintegrating. Public university teachers are on strike, calling for the protection of their pension rights. Students and job seekers have taken it to the streets, seeking an end to positive discrimination under the quota system that looms over half of government jobs. The court has overturned a previous decision to end quotas for the offspring of freedom fighters. The time is tough. A troubling pattern emerges that masks the deeper systemic issues through a calculated orchestration of conflict. In the process, the focus shifts from the real culprits who have brought our economy to a halt.

Why change the existing scheme and create a system through which incoming colleagues receive a different and disadvantageous payoff? Why separate the state-affiliated autonomous bodies from the state schemes? Why then, delay the pension scheme for civil servants by a year while maintaining secrecy about its details? The striking teachers have reason to believe that the intended parity and inclusivity promoted by the universal pension scheme are not universal after all.

What do I mean by orchestration? The government's handling of the pension reform offers a case in point. Everyone welcomed the government's announcement last year of a universal pension package under four categories: Probash for expatriate Bangladeshis, Progoti for private service-holders, Surakkha for self-employed nationals, and Samata for those below the poverty line. The inclusion of Prottoy, a contributory pension scheme that affects new teachers joining from July 1, 2024, triggered the issue. This scheme is for all autonomous entities, among other bodies, funded by the government.

Once the details were revealed, the stakeholders found that they would be getting the short end of the stick. Why change the existing scheme and create a system through which incoming colleagues receive a different and disadvantageous payoff? Why separate the state-affiliated autonomous bodies from the state schemes? Why then, delay the pension scheme for civil servants by a year while maintaining secrecy about its details? The striking teachers have reason to believe that the intended parity and inclusivity promoted by the universal pension scheme are not universal after all.

The administration has made no secret of its intention to limit the scope of the teachers. Without consulting the teachers, authorities decided to implement a contributory pension scheme for new teachers, which does not include the existing one-time lump sum gratuity. This unilateral approach has not only sparked widespread outrage but has also further exacerbated the divide between the state and the educators who have long been the backbone of our society.

The policymakers have completely ignored the demands of the striking teachers. The finance minister, in charge of introducing a new contributory pension programme, called the protest "irrational." The education minister echoed the government's stance, stating that his office has nothing to do with it and that all new teachers have to follow the universal programme. Assigned to hear the teachers' side of the tale, the minister for road, transport, and bridges called off his planned meeting on Thursday, saying he had to first speak with the prime minister. The government is well aware that these teachers are not like those battery-rickshaw pullers who created mayhem to press home their demands. Given their lack of support, the teachers are likely to eventually yield. They are unlikely to get public support as they have failed to publicly oppose numerous other social injustices. They are on their own.

So much so, there is no communication between the teachers holding sit-in demonstrations inside the campus and the students staging protests at Dhaka's Shahbagh, each man for himself. Adding fuel to the fire, we see the civil servants creating a new list of perks and benefits: scholarships for higher studies, allocation of land and provision for housing societies, car loans, and selection grades. Their constant disregard for the teachers' community, whom they perhaps hate for their academic freedom, was evident when they requested a university of their own. Already, we have seen military professionals create their own universities to rehabilitate their officers or provide them with degrees for post-retirement job opportunities. The current socio-political landscape is characterised by a perilous game of division and control.

Teachers are now pitted against students, students against the government, and the mainstream media against anyone who dares to speak out. This coordinated conflict serves two purposes: it deflects attention from the rampant abuses of private entrepreneurs who use tax holidays and other incentives to launder money, and it diverts attention from the shortcomings of civil servants and military officials who are often involved in corruption scandals. It muffles the voice of civil society, which has the ability to speak.

In this climate of division, public anger and frustration have become palpable. This pervasive distrust has tainted our interactions with one another, whether on the road, in public spaces, or in our daily lives. A sense of betrayal and helplessness is increasingly driving us, unravelling the societal fabric.

As we navigate through this turbulent situation, it's crucial to understand the underlying issues: the systematic manipulation of social tensions to uphold the status quo for a select few, leaving the rest of us to bear the consequences. The consequences fall on the rest of us. The solution to these problems depends on a democratic climate that promotes openness, inclusion, and sincere communication.

When will Hathurusingha take responsibility?

SHABAB CHOWDHURY

A lack of ambition has clearly surmounted the lack of ability in the Bangladesh national cricket team setup.

The team, evidently, is striving to maintain the mediocre status quo is an environment where no real ambition can pierce through, with the major stakeholders having no vision to reach excellence.

Exhibit A in this regard is how Bangladesh fluffed an opportunity to reach the semifinals of the T20 World Cup for the first time in their history.

Bangladesh needed 116 runs in 12.1 overs against Afghanistan in their last Super Eight contest to guarantee qualification. However, after losing a few wickets, the Tigers abandoned their attempt at fulfilling that equation and instead played for the win.

The reason behind that questionable approach that reeked of a mediocre mentality was later revealed by the skipper in a statement which most took as utter buffoonery, as Shanto said that after Bangladesh lost three in the first three overs, they focused on only winning the game, a victory that would be of no benefit to them.

While Shanto has been copping a lot of flak for this statement, with even the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) president Nazmul Hassan Papon criticising the skipper for it, the person who got the ball rolling in this mediocre path, head coach Chandika Hathurusingha, has seemingly got off scot-free.

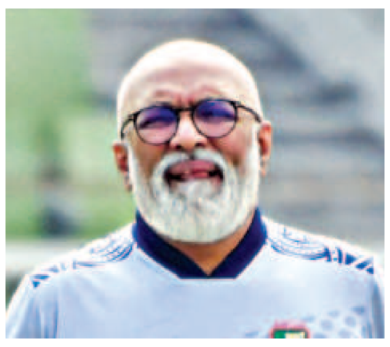
After Bangladesh qualified for the Super Eight for the first time since 2007, Hathurusingha stated that the Tigers had achieved their goal in the tournament and whatever came after would be a bonus.

The players' performances in the next two matches reflected the coach's statement, where they surrendered against Australia and India without even putting up a fight.

And when circumstances presented them with an opportunity that every team could only dream about, the Tigers did not even go all out at taking it, perhaps already satisfied with their 'bonus' phase of the competition.

Since Hathurusingha's re-appointment at the beginning of last year, Bangladesh have played two World Cups– the 2023 ODI World Cup in India and this year's T20 World Cup in North America.

He was brought in to streamline a path to the semis in last year's World Cup but instead under his tutelage Bangladesh had one of their worst ever campaigns. In the T20 World Cup, other than a few match-winning efforts from the bowling unit, there wasn't anything to get excited about.



With another major ICC tournament – the 2025 Champions Trophy – ahead, one would have to be overly optimistic to believe that Bangladesh would fare better with Hathurusingha at the helm.

However, these underwhelming displays have hardly mattered as Hathurusingha's job seems to be secure and much like the BCB, his role seemingly demands very little accountability.

In every sport, the coach has to take responsibility along with the players for disappointing campaigns but Hathurusingha seems to be an exception in this regard.

Papon, who is serving his third term as the BCB boss, expressed his satisfaction with the team reaching the Super Eight and with the team ending their campaign with three wins overall – the most ever by Bangladesh in a campaign.

He hardly said a word about Bangladesh's appalling batting display, head coach Hathurusingha's role in allowing the team to slip into such mediocrity and the failure of batting coach David Hemp to get the batters out of their slump.

Hathurusingha's evolution as the Bangladesh coach also provides an interesting insight on how a culture of mediocrity effects everyone that's part of it. When he was first appointed as Bangladesh coach in 2015, it seemed that Bangladesh had brought in a top coach who was astute in planning successful campaigns. And impressive results did follow.

Almost a decade later, and into his second stint with Bangladesh, it seems that the Sri Lankan has clothed himself in mediocrity and the once result-oriented and stubborn coach has settled himself well into Bangladesh's culture of playing it safe and doing the bare minimum.

BCB has always lacked in long-term vision and when the coach at the helm shares the same attitude, it's a recipe for an unsustainable future filled with uninspiring showings and inevitable mediocrity.

In the T20 World Cup, Bangladesh shook the very foundation of why professional sports is played by consciously choosing to ignore a shot at excellence. It won't be a stretch to assume that the 19 other teams that played in the tournament would go out of their way to achieve excellence if they were presented with the opportunity Bangladesh received.

With another major ICC tournament – the 2025 Champions Trophy – ahead, one would have to be overly optimistic to believe that Bangladesh would fare better with Hathurusingha at the helm.

Now, will the BCB finally demand accountability from Hathurusingha or will they maintain the status quo as raising questions will bring them directly into the firing line?

MARTINEZ
the shoot-out 'animal'

It will be tough for Argentina goalkeeper Emiliano Martinez to top his penalty shoot-out heroics from the run to World Cup glory in Qatar in 2022 but that certainly won't stop him trying.

The keeper, known as 'El Dibu' by his adoring fans, produced two brilliant diving saves in the shoot-out to earn his team a 4-2 win on penalties against Ecuador in the Copa America quarter-finals on Thursday.

The game had ended 1-1 in normal time and with no extra time in the Copa, until the final, the game went straight to penalties.

When Lionel Messi chipped the opening attempt against the top of the bar, the almost 70,000 fans in NRG Stadium could have been forgiven for thinking Argentina's title defense was about to end.

But Martinez had other ideas.

"Dibu is an animal. The truth is that what he is doing is crazy. He deserves it. He loves to wear these colors. He gives us a lot of security and peace of mind. We try to do the same for him, but in these important moments he's always there, he's always there," said midfielder Rodrigo De Paul.

Just as he had done against Colombia, in the Copa semi-final in Brazil in 2021 and then against the Netherlands in the quarter-final of the World Cup when he saved two Dutch spot-kicks, the Aston Villa keeper turned the game in his team's favor.

"Dibu is an animal. The truth is that what he is doing is crazy. He deserves it. He loves to wear these colors. He gives us a lot of security and peace of mind. We try to do the same for him, but in these important moments he's always there, he's always there," said midfielder Rodrigo De Paul.

"I knew that 'Dibu' would come good, he loves those moments, he rises to them," said a relieved Messi. "He had faith in himself. Even before the game he was joking that if it went to penalties, we should relax."

His most famous performance of all, of course, was in the World Cup final against France when not only did he save from Kingsley Coman but his mind games put added pressure on Aurelien Tchouameni who missed his kick as Argentina won the shoot-out 4-2.

This time there was no dancing on his line, no indication of his chatter with opponents or other mind-games -- although he certainly made clear his joy at the saves with his gestures to the fans.

"I told the guys before the penalty shootout that I wasn't ready to go home. This group deserves to go all the way to the final," Martinez told Argentine television.

Martinez dived to his left to deny Angel Mena and then to his right to keep out Alan Minda's spot-kick, celebrating his saves wildly.

It also extended the 31-year-old's penalty record with Argentina to an astonishing 50%. Of 24 penalties faced for the national side, Martinez has saved nine with three off target.

"I got a bit full on with the crowd. I had all the Argentinians here, my family close by. So these are special moments," he said.

Martinez, who won the Golden Glove at the World Cup and was voted FIFA's Best Goalkeeper in 2022, has come through plenty of tough battles in his career, having moved to England as a teenager, joining Arsenal.

While he dreamt of making his mark in the Premier League and with the national team, there was little glamour in his early years with the Gunners as he was loaned out to lower-league clubs.

He had spells at Oxford United, Sheffield Wednesday and Rotherham United before stepping up to Wolverhampton Wanderers and eventually getting a chance with Arsenal.

He was sold to Aston Villa in 2020 and saved a penalty in his first game for his new club against Sheffield United.

He has established such a rapport with the Argentine team and produced such vital saves from the spot and in open play that coach Lionel Scaloni said he had ensured an ultra-confident mood for his team-mates in the shoot-out.

"In the penalties I think the team felt a blind trust in their goalkeeper and for us that is fundamental. Even if Leo missed I think the team knew that something positive was going to happen. That is so important," he said.

GM Murshed, Niaz
GM Rahman, Ziaur

Zia 'Bangladesh's best' with legacy unparalleled

Bangladesh's fourth GM Abdullah Al Rakib shared his experience and memories with Ziaur Rahman, who passed away from a heart attack while competing in the National Chess Championship in Dhaka yesterday. Here are the excerpts:

"I have been playing for the national team since the age of 14 and from the beginning, I had a good personal relationship with Zia bhai; someone who always treated me as a younger brother. I have numerous memories with him during our chess journey. A friendly, big-hearted person, his simplicity, strong ethics and sincerity always inspired us. When we came into the scene, Niaz [Murshed] bhai had already passed his prime. We didn't see much of his playing before he became Grandmaster, but Zia bhai and Rifat [Bin Sattar] bhai had seen him at work.

I think Zia bhai's dedication and contribution to the sport is unmatched. After Niaz bhai, Zia bhai got the first GM norm and then I achieved the landmark in 2001. After that, Zia bhai told me that my GM norm has made him excited to seek another GM norm.

Actually, we were not jealous about others' success. We have become Grandmaster nearly at the same time. We played so many tournaments as teammates and also as opponents. I can't describe all these words. I think his contribution to the sport and Bangladesh will be remembered for a long time. I can say that, performance-wise, he was the best chess player for Bangladesh."

Paris-bound archer Sagor 'confident of bringing home Olympic medal'

Archer Sagor Islam, at just 18 years old, has made history as the youngest athlete from his country to earn a direct spot in the Olympic Games, following in the footsteps of golfer Siddiqur Rahman and archer Ruman Sana who achieved the same in previous editions. Overcoming poverty with unwavering support from his widowed mother, BKSP, and the Bangladesh Archery Federation, Sagor, a high school student in the 11th grade, has reached this milestone. While he has not yet won an individual event medal in either domestic or international competitions, Sagor surprised many by securing a direct Olympic entry and even clinching a silver medal in last month's Final Olympic Quota tournament. The lad from Rajshahi discussed his career, passion for archery, and future aspirations with The Daily Star's Anisur Rahman in an exclusive interview, the excerpts of which are as follows:

ANISUR RAHMAN

The Daily Star (DS): How did you feel talking to your mother from Turkey after securing a direct entry to the Paris Olympic Games?

Sagor Islam (SI): It took me nearly four hours to reach my mother by phone from the hotel in Turkey because I had no network during the competition. When I asked her if she knew about my achievement, she replied positively and blessed me, hoping for even better results in the Olympics. At that moment, I felt like the most successful son in the world; I felt like I was number one. My mother's happiness is my happiness because she raised me without my father, fulfilling as many of my demands as she could. I have come this far because of her.

DS: What were your expectations going into the Final Olympic Quota tournament in Turkey?

SI: We started to believe that our hard work and continuous practice could lead to something significant. Others also supported us in achieving our goals. I personally believed that this year, with seven months of relentless training, we had become really strong.

DS: There were high expectations for the men's recurve team to secure a quota place, but they were eliminated in the quarterfinals, and you outshone them in the individual events as the youngest team member.

SI: Yes, we had hoped for a lot from the team event, but things didn't go as planned. Sometimes, despite our best efforts, we cannot control the outcome. We approached the competition in our own way, but unfortunately, we didn't succeed.

DS: What was going through your mind when you entered the quarterfinals following the elimination of two teammates in previous rounds?

SI: I started with a positive mindset. I focused solely on my performance without worrying about others because I had nothing to lose. I was confident that if I performed to the best of my ability, I could secure a direct quota place for the Paris Olympics.

DS: You will be competing against the world's top archers in the upcoming Paris Olympics, although they were absent from the Final Olympic Quota tournament in Turkey. How confident are you in your ability to compete with them?

SI: Korean archers and other top archers qualified directly. I achieved the same qualification as they did, so I never considered myself inferior to them. I believed I am on their level because I competed against archers from all over the world, not just Asia.

DS: What kind of training are you undergoing now under German coach Martin Fredrick in Tongi, following your qualification for the Paris Olympics?

SI: Previously, the coach focused on all members of the national team, but now he is solely guiding me for the Olympics. I continue to train by shooting over 320 arrows every day, similar to what I did during national camp. Fredrick and others are inspiring me greatly to boost my confidence and provide mental motivation so that I can perform well in the Olympics.

DS: What are your thoughts on the Paris Olympics?

SI: It's hard to predict my own performance at the Paris Olympics, but I am confident that if I perform naturally, I can compete with anyone and bring a medal home for the nation. The biggest challenge for me is to stay composed during critical moments and maintain my focus, as archery is as much a mental game as it is physical.

DS: How do you feel about the discussion to potentially send Hakim Ahmed Rubel instead of you to the Paris Olympics?

SI: I think it's normal because I earned the quota for the nation, and the coach and federation have the right to decide what's best for the country. I didn't feel upset about it because I would have accepted whatever decision the coach and federation made. Nevertheless, I am grateful to finally represent the nation at the Paris Olympics.

DS: What are your expectations from the other athletes – Imranur Rahman, Robiul Islam, Samiul Islam, and Sonia Akter – participating in the Paris Olympics?

SI: It's a rare opportunity to compete in the Olympics, so I hope they will give their best efforts to achieve something for the nation. In sports, there are no guarantees that even a talented athlete will succeed. As for archery, anything can happen.

Southgate under pressure as England face Swiss test

REUTERS, Weimar

England's European Championship campaign looked dead and buried before it was salvaged by a remarkable last-gasp goal from Jude Bellingham in the round of 16, but they have barely made their presence felt in Germany.

Gareth Southgate's men take on in-form Switzerland in the quarterfinals on Saturday in Duesseldorf, and the Swiss underlined their credentials by beating defending champions Italy in the last 16.

A couple of weeks ago, England would have relished facing Switzerland -- a team they have lost to only three times in their 27 meetings and most recently in 1981.

Murat Yakin's team, however, have played with a consistency and confidence that has eluded England.

Yakin even said he sympathised with Southgate, who has been lambasted in Germany for not getting more from his talented squad.

"I know this myself from last year a little bit, just focus on the football game, not what we read in the newspapers, that's the only thing we can do as a coach," Yakin said.

Southgate has been criticised for not making many changes to his team but that could be about to change as they practised a back three in training, with Kyle Walker moved to the right of centre three and Bukayo Saka potentially playing as wing-back.

- This will be Gareth Southgate's 100th international match in charge of England, becoming only the third manager to hit the milestone.
- England have lost just one of their last 24 meetings with Switzerland in all competitions (W17 D6), and are unbeaten in 13 (W9 D4) since a 2-1 loss in a World Cup qualifier in May 1981.
- England also aim to become the sixth European side to earn 50 victories at major tournaments – after Germany, Italy, France, Spain and the Netherlands.
- Granit Xhaka has created more chances (8), completed more passes (254) and made more line-breaking passes (51) than any other Switzerland player in this tournament.

Of concern to Southgate is the fact that defender Marc Guehi, who has been solid on his major tournament debut, is suspended for Saturday's match, John Stones has been training with his leg heavily bandaged and Luke Shaw has not played since February due to injury.

While England have not played with three at the back since finishing runners-up to Italy at Euro 2020, it would allow Southgate to employ his wing-backs higher up the pitch.

Yakin, meanwhile, will rely on the experience of Manchester City's Manuel Akanji and Newcastle United's Fabian Schar to anchor the back line, with Granit Xhaka acting as the midfield playmaker.

Xhaka, who played a pivotal role in Bayer Leverkusen's Bundesliga victory last season, was delighted by Switzerland's win over Italy which was sweet revenge for their 3-0 thrashing by them at Euro 2020.

"I have never seen the Azzurri in such difficulty on the field as against us," Xhaka said. "We won even before going on the pitch, just as they did with us three years ago. They were scared."

England are bidding for their first European Championship title in 11 appearances while a Swiss victory would put Yakin's team into the semifinals for the first time.

Spotlight on Guler, Gakpo in Dutch-Turkey clash

AFP, Berlin

Cody Gakpo and Arda Guler endured frustrating seasons but both have established themselves as their teams' vital players as the Netherlands face Turkey in a Euro 2024 quarterfinal clash on Saturday in Berlin.

"Gakpo is our star," former Netherlands international Pierre van Hooijdonk said on Dutch channel NOS.

Overshadowed by Mohamed Salah at Anfield, where he has played inconsistently, Gakpo has burst into life in Germany as a constant threat coming in off the left.

Half of the forward's 12 goals for his country have come at major tournaments, with three at the World Cup two years ago.

With another he will match compatriots and former stars Ruud van Nistelrooy and Arjen Robben on seven.

"He is a great player who is solid on the ball... and super important for us," said Koeman after the 3-0 last 16 win over Romania, in which Gakpo scored and also brilliantly teed up Donyell Malen.

At the other end, Real Madrid attacker Guler is Turkey's main weapon.

After months of injury problems and struggling to earn a chance in the Spanish capital, Guler burst into life in the final weeks of the season.

With the Spanish title won, Carlo Ancelotti let Guler loose and he blossomed at the perfect time to take the creative controls for Turkey this summer.

The 19-year-old scored a stunning effort against Georgia in Turkey's thrilling opening win and created both of his team's goals against Austria in the 2-1 last 16 win with set pieces.

- The last two matches between the Netherlands and Turkey have featured 13 goals (6.5 per game). Turkey won 4-2 in March 2021 and the Oranje won 6-1 later that year.
- Arda Guler is one of just three teenagers to score and assist at a single Euros, after Wayne Rooney (4 goals, 1 assist) and Cristiano Ronaldo (2 goals, 2 assists), both at Euro 2004.
- While this is set to be the 15th international meeting between Netherlands and Turkey, this tie is the first fixture between these teams to come at a major tournament.

It is only the fourth time Turkey have reached the quarterfinals of a major tournament and the first since 2008. They are boosted by the return of captain Hakan Calhanoglu and defender Samet Akaydin from suspension.

In the stands at the vast Olympiastadion Turkey have the advantage, despite Oranje fans taking over every city they have visited in their vibrant shirts.

"It will be an away match," Netherlands defender Daley Blind warned his team-mates on Thursday, with around three million Turks living in Germany, many supporting their team fervently.

However, Turkey will be held back in one aspect as defender Merih Demiral will miss this quarterfinal clash after UEFA suspended him for two games on Friday for making an alleged ultra-nationalist salute when he scored his second goal in their 2-1 last-16 win over Austria on Tuesday.

The ban is a signficant blow for Montella's side, already missing the suspended Orkun Kokcu and Ismail Yuksek -- by contrast the Netherlands have their full complement available.

And that is what Koeman's men, who, according to Gakpo, "are not yet where we (they) want to be", will be hoping to capitalise.

If Netherlands can get through their Turkey test then fans can start dreaming of a second Euros triumph, with England or Switzerland awaiting in the semifinal in what has been dubbed the "easier" side of the draw.

Tigers brace for challenging Test fixtures

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh are all set to brace the Test challenge from next month after competing mostly in the T20 format for the last couple of months in the buildup to the T20 World Cup, which concluded on June 29 in the USA and West Indies.

The challenge will start with a two-match series against Pakistan which will be followed by series against India, South Africa, and the West Indies respectively in the coming five months where the Tigers will compete in a total of eight Tests, two each against these four strong opponents.

India and West Indies had already confirmed the itinerary of the full-fledged Bangladesh tours, scheduled for September-October and November-December, respectively, while on Friday, Pakistan Cricket Board (PCB) officially announced the fixture of their home series against Bangladesh.

According to the itinerary, Bangladesh will play the first Test in Rawalpindi on August 21-25 while Karachi will host the second Test between August 30 and September 3.

In between the India and West Indies tours, Bangladesh will host South Africa on home soil, although the itinerary of the series is yet to be confirmed.

BANGLADESH TOUR OF PAKISTAN

- First Test in Rawalpindi from August 21-25
- Second Test in Karachi from August 30-September 3

Bangladesh haven't been in a Test mood since their last home series against Sri Lanka in March-April where they showcased an underwhelming performance in both matches to lose the series.

The poor batting display of the batters had significant impact on Bangladesh's performance in the series as they failed to cross the 200-run mark in three of their four innings. Apart from Mominul Haque and Mehidy Hasan Miraz, none of the batters could score any fifty in the series.

Although the Bangladesh national team were mostly occupied with T20 assignments, a number of Test players have been involved in camps across multiple venues of the country under the 'Bangladesh Tigers' banner.

Bangladesh, who have a disastrous record against Pakistan in Tests as they lost 12 out of 13 matches with six of those being innings defeats, toured Pakistan last in 2020 where they lost the opening match in Rawalpindi by an innings and 44 runs.

The tourists were scheduled to fly to Pakistan again to play another Test but the surge of Covid-19 saw that fixture abandoned.

Bangladesh's current Test skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto, who was part of the Rawalpindi Test and made 44 and 38 runs in two innings respectively, admitted that they need to provide their A game in Pakistan to do well against the hosts.

"As a team, we are looking forward to returning to Pakistan for the ICC World Test Championship," Shanto was quoted in a PCB press release on Friday.

"Playing in Pakistan is always a challenging but exciting prospect, and we will have to be at our very best to compete against a formidable side in their backyard," he concluded.

The series will also give a clear indication where Bangladesh are actually heading into the ongoing ICC Test Championship 2023-25 cycle in which they are currently placed eighth among nine teams with one win in four matches.

A lot to fix for Brazil against in-form Uruguay

STAR SPORTS DESK

Coming up against Uruguay, the standout performers of this Copa America so far, Brazil, missing their key player Vinicius Jr, will have a lot to fix in this heavyweight quarterfinal clash at Allegiant Stadium in Las Vegas on Sunday morning.

Uruguay have shown that they have the credentials to go all the way this year, though, and can be optimistic of success on Sunday as they secured a 2-0 victory over Brazil in their last competitive meeting in 2026 World Cup qualifying in October last year.

Brazil have reached the knockout rounds of the Copa America for the third successive tournament, but they missed the chance to secure top spot in Group D after they were held to a 1-1 draw by Colombia.

What would see Brazil coach Dorival Junior, who is yet to taste defeat since taking the charge of the Selecao in January, scratch is head is the fact that he would have to go without his star player Vinicius for this clash. The Real Madrid forward, who scored twice in their 4-1 win over Paraguay in the group stage, will be missing this game due to a suspension for receiving two yellow cards in the group stage -- against Paraguay and Colombia.

Dorival could swap Arsenal winger Gabriel Martinelli directly in the left-wing or he could go for fitting in the young prodigy Endrick alongside his soon-to-be Real Madrid teammate Rodrygo and Barcelona's Raphinha in the right flank.

With Brazil already struggling to find their way into opposition's defence in this tournament, Dorival will know he is up for his toughest challenge so far in this Copa against a Uruguayan side that have not only racked up nine goals – most by any team so far – but have also been defensively solid as they let in just one in stoppage time in a 3-1 win over Panama in the first game.

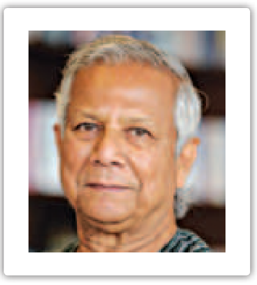
Put an end to harassment of Prof Yunus immediately

4 US senators urge Bangladesh govt



STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Four US senators, including the Senate majority whip, issued a statement demanding an immediate end to what they said was harassment of Prof Muhammad Yunus, adding that the "seemingly personal vendetta" against him will negatively impact the US-Bangladesh partnership.

They also urged the Bangladesh government to respect democratic values and institutions.

Six lives lost as bus hits truck

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

At least six people, including two children, were killed and some 28 others injured in a head-on collision between a bus and a fruit-laden truck in Dinajpur Sadar upazila yesterday morning.

The incident took place on the Dinajpur-Phulbari regional highway in Chawkrampur village adjacent to Panchbari Bazar around 6:00am.

Most of the victims were on the bus, said police.

The deceased were identified as truck driver Hasu Mia, 28, of Thakurgaon's Pirganj; bus supervisor Rajesh Bahadur, 30, of Dinajpur's Bochaganj; bus driver's assistant Md Ali, of Pirganj; Jyna 5, daughter of Mominur Rahman of Dinajpur's Chirirbandar, Bibha Akhtar, 10, daughter of Jahid Hossain of Bochaganj, and passenger of a paddy-laden van Swadesh Chandra Roy, 30, of Chirirbandar.

Bangladeshi shot dead by BSF

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Thakurgaon

A 28-year-old Bangladeshi man was gunned down by the Indian Border Security Force (BSF) along the Baliadangi border in Thakurgaon early yesterday.

The deceased was identified as Raju Islam, son of Habib Ali of Gariali village under Boro Palashbari union of the upazila.

"BSF members opened fire on a group of Bangladeshi cattle smugglers near the Nagarbhita border pillar 376/5-S. Raju got shot and died on the spot," said Baliadangi Police Station Officer-in-Charge (OC) Firoz Kabir.

After the incident, BSF members took custody of Raju's body, he added.

In this regard, a flat meeting was held with the BSF in the afternoon, according to sources at the Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB)-50 Battalion.

BSF claimed that their members opened fire in self-defence as they came under attack, they said.

MIGRANT SHIPWRECK

89 migrants dead at sea off Mauritania

AFP, Nouakchott

89 migrants bound for Europe perished when their boat capsized earlier this week off the coast of Mauritania, the state news agency and a local official said Thursday, while dozens more remain missing.

"The Mauritanian coast guard recovered the bodies of 89 people aboard a large traditional fishing boat that capsized on Monday July 1 on the coast of the Atlantic Ocean" about four kilometres from the country's southwest city of Ndiago, the state news agency said.

The coastguard rescued nine people, including a five-year-old girl, it said.

The agency quoted survivors saying that the boat had set sail from the border of Senegal and Gambia with 170 passengers on board, bringing the number of missing to 72.

Mauritanian coastguard rescued nine people, including a five-year-old girl.

A senior local government official gave AFP similar information, on condition of anonymity.

The Atlantic route is particularly dangerous due to strong currents, with migrants travelling in overloaded, often unseaworthy, boats without enough drinking water.

But it has grown in popularity due to increased vigilance in the Mediterranean.

The number of migrants landing at Spain's Canary Islands in 2023 more than doubled in one year to a record 39,910, according to the Spanish government.

Efforts to secure Gaza truce gain momentum

Hamas makes fresh proposal on ceasefire deal as Israel says it is resuming stalled negotiations

AGENCIES

Efforts to secure a ceasefire and hostage release in Gaza gathered momentum yesterday after Hamas made a revised proposal on the terms of a deal and Israel said it would resume stalled negotiations.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu told US President Joe Biden on Thursday he would send a delegation to restart negotiations, and an Israeli official said his country's team would be led by the head of the Mossad intelligence agency.

Biden welcomed the move and a source in Israel's negotiating team, speaking on condition of anonymity, said there was now a real chance of achieving agreement.

The Israeli remarks were in sharp contrast to past instances in the nine-month-old war in Gaza when Israel said conditions attached by Hamas were not acceptable.

A Palestinian official close to the internationally mediated peace efforts said the latest proposal by the militant Islamist group could lead to a framework agreement if embraced by Israel.

He said Hamas was no longer demanding as a pre-condition an Israeli commitment to a permanent ceasefire before the signing of an agreement and would allow negotiations to achieve that throughout a first six-week phase.

"Should the sides need more time to seal an agreement on a permanent ceasefire, the two sides should agree there would be no return to the fighting until they do that," the official told Reuters.

Hamas later said it rejected the presence of foreign forces in Gaza, signalling its opposition to any plan to send an international contingent to the Gaza Strip to help keep the peace in the Palestinian enclave.

The Popular Resistance Committees (PRC), a group allied with Hamas, said separately that it would consider any international or other forces in Gaza as occupiers.

Martinez saves Messi's blushes

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In a tense quarterfinal encounter of Copa America 2024 yesterday (Bangladesh time), defending champions Argentina narrowly overcame a feisty Ecuador in a penalty shootout after a 1-1 draw in regulation time at a packed NRG Stadium in Texas, thanks to their reliable goalkeeper, Emiliano Martinez.

The match provided a thrilling finish and a surprising twist involving the winning captain Lionel Messi, who remained subdued throughout the 90 minutes while his teammates sporadically sparked in offensive transitions.

Argentina's title defense was threatened when Ecuador's Kevin Rodriguez scored a late equaliser, cancelling out Albiceleste's 35-minute lead through defender Lisandro Martinez's goal against the run of play, pushing the game into a decisive penalty shootout; as extra time is reserved only for the final.

The spotlight then fell heavily on Messi, who stepped up to take the first shot of the shootout. Known for his composure and precision, Messi

Carpenter ants perform amputations to save lives

CNN ONLINE

Humans aren't the only ones capable of performing amputations to save lives.

Florida carpenter ants have been observed biting off the injured limbs of nestmates, depending on the location of the wounds, to help their counterparts survive, according to a new study published Tuesday in the journal Current Biology.

About 90 percent to 95 percent of the ants receiving amputations make it through the process and continue with their duties within the nest just fine despite losing a leg, researchers found.

Reddish-brown Florida carpenter ants, which reach about 1.5 centimeters in length, can be found nesting in rotting wood throughout the southeastern United States. They have to defend their nests against rival ant colonies, which can result in injuries.

Lead study author Erik Frank, a behavioral ecologist at the University of Würzburg in Germany's state of Bavaria, said he doesn't think the ants consciously know what to do. Instead, it may be more instinctual, similar to how humans bring their fingers to their lips after a paper cut.

AFP, Stuttgart

A Mikel Merino goal in the final minute of extra time took Spain to a 2-1 win over Germany and into the Euro 2024 semis.

After a fiery yet goalless first half, Spain's Dani Olmo latched onto an inch-perfect pass from Spanish wunderkind Lamine Yamal to give La Roja the lead on 51 minutes.

Niclas Fuellkrug struck the post with 14 minutes remaining but with the hosts staring at an early exit, Florian Wirtz slammed in a Joshua Kimmich knock-down in the 89th minute to take the game to extra time.

Embracing the old-world charm, one antique at a time

If you pass through Gulshan DCC 2 market, the shops selling antiques just grab your attention; an old dresser or a bureau in teak wood would make a beautiful foyer table or an entryway table. With lace curtains drawn on the mirror, the dresser can serve as a writing table for guests, who missed you for being out.

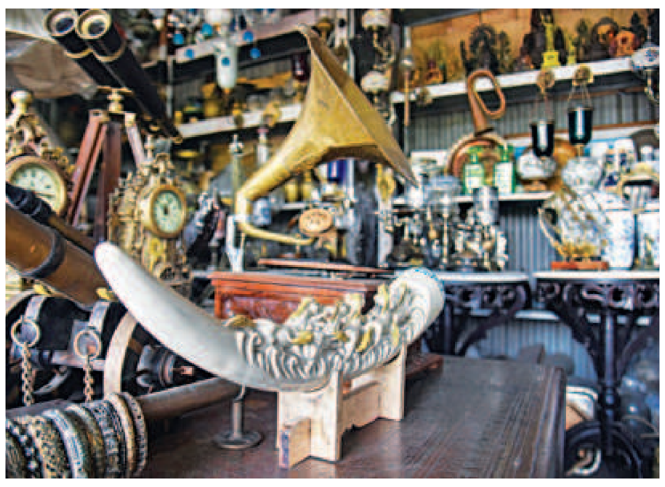
RAFFAT BINTE RASHID

There is a certain drama in being mystified with all things retro and vintage. You are always in your world of imagination and creativity, fleeting from one era to another, flying on wings of yellow butterflies, which symbolises transformation, rebirth, and personal growth. And for people being hopelessly attached to the old-world charm, the renaissance of giving antiques a new lease of life by transforming and upscaling the old classics in current context is all about being retro-chic.

We have categories of antiques in our open market, there are the real products dating 100 to 150 years back, then there are chemically treated antique looking items hog washing buyers and there are also collectibles from ship-breaking; selling scraps from ship breaking is a very robust industry in the country.

THE BHATIARI PULL

Collecting old artifacts is a hobby and sometimes old ship wreckage is the best place to look for retro vibes. In Bhatiari, Chattogram the entire street situated near the highway N1 is dotted with stores selling antiques from old ships.



"People do flock to Bhatiari to search for unique items that would add a statement to their home of collectibles. For example, marine sextants in wooden boxes are a collector's delight. The shops have shelves of ornamental wooden boxes of intact sextants, used in navigation to determine latitude and longitude," starts Mizanur Rahman Yousuf, a journalist by profession and a former antique dealer.

In fact, they are the hottest items on sale on the online shopping platforms, he adds.

"Now, before putting them up for sale, the business experts buy in lots at the source, which are then brought by marine stores and sold to retailers. There are separate lots for marine items, brass items, furniture, kitchenware, tableware, so on and so forth. It is said that 96 percent of ship scrap is recycled. Though, in terms of antiques, these items are only 30 years old maximum, because it is mandatory to scrap a ship after 30 years of running; but they attract local and foreign tourists equally," Yousuf explains.

Brass favourites, an old coal iron, oil lamps, bells, and dongs are bought by weighing their weight in kilogrammes, then they are polished and resold. Ceramic and porcelain ware with a web of tiny cracks over its surface are very sought-after pieces for repurpose, as well. These bowls add a tag of charm to table décor as fruit bowls or floating candle holders.

Lifeboat oars are a collector's item, if you want to believe it. People paint them in happy pastel colours or intricate geometric designs and many upcycle them by using them as nameplates near the main entrance or as kitchen hook hangers or even as eccentric garden accessories.

"Tourists and collectors are drawn to Chattogram's ship breaking industry collectibles. It is an industry with a market value exceeding Tk 10,000 crore, but currently it is going through a stagnation due to the rising dollar price and margin rates imposed by banks," says Yousuf.

Every object is reusable and value adds to the economy. A mere example of the fact that the re-usage of 5,000 tonnes of ship furniture proves how it impacts the economy and environment. We do not need to cut down trees for making furniture," he says.

The ship-breaking industry in Bangladesh holds the top global position, but the industry faces a challenge in converting all ship recycling yards into green yards by 2025.

UPSCALING ANTIQUES

Not just the collectibles from ship breaking yards, Dhaka has its fair share of shops boasting antiques.

"If you pass through Gulshan DCC 2 market, the shops selling antiques just grab your attention; an old dresser or a bureau in teak wood would make a beautiful foyer table or an entryway table. With lace curtains drawn on the mirror, the dresser can serve as a writing table for guests, who missed you for being out. It can have a fountain pen, an ink pot, blue letter pads and envelopes and an old brass vase of freshly cut flowers, setting a décor tone for your home," says Nasira Mansoor, an interior consultant.

This vintage dresser with a mirror can be a versatile piece of furniture and can also be used as a statement piece in your drawing room with adopted styles of periods past. Just like an old easy chair with criss cross cane back support, adds a grand look to your wide veranda, rewinding you to the days when your great grandfather would sit in his quiet corner and listen to dramas and Rabindra sangeet on shortwave radio programmes.

An ornate palonka or zamindari antique bed, that has steps to get up on and is tightly tucked up with croquet or hand embroidered bedsheet and pillow cases will lend your bedroom an air of romantic period play theme.

With such antique pieces you can let your ideas run wild. The antique markets are like treasure-troves for people who love the time-worn period look. From tableware like old English porcelain bowls, plates and cups to cut glass candle holders, oil lanterns, door charms that protect from evil eye to rusted and dusty brass idols, dolls, decoration pieces; the shops are stuffed with antiquated things.

You cannot walk from one aisle to another without stepping on some fragile objects. Tea pots and chinaware dating back to the British rule that are stamped with Made in England or Holland labels and various sizes of cooking pots and other belongings of a lost generation are on display here.

"Though Dhamrai boasts bell metal products, very rarely you will find an antique there. Their products are given an antique look but the area can be great for finding lower-end antiques and it's always worth a rummage," says Mansoor.

"The shops in Gulshan do carry some fine vintage stuff dating back roughly a hundred years or so after the British period ended. Rarity also factors in pricing, especially if it's a collectible in a particularly active market like antique coins, lamps, and glassware that sell regularly for surprising sums at such stores. These beautiful pieces of history are collected from zamindars who fell on bad patches, or old family heirlooms where the new owner is not interested in their new windfall, sell off," Mansoor talks from an experienced antique bargain hunter's point of view.

FROM THE ONE IN BUSINESS

Fahim Metal Handicraft, a traditional business selling brass, copper, bronze items in Rayerbagh, Jatrabari claims to be in this line of business for five generations now.

"I am one of the biggest antique dealers in business and I can say that it is very easy to be double crossed in buying such antique products. The market is full of new products that are washed in chemicals to achieve that antique, rusted look. Having said that, we do get hold of real vintage items collected from excavation sites or sold off by current owners," says NM Fahim Rahman, the current business head of the shop.

"We do not have products made of real copper in Bangladesh, we mostly used the alloy called bell metal or kasha to make kitchenware and dining ware. These were considered an investment in bygone times. Our markets of antique products are also selling Indian or Pakistani handicrafts in the guise of archaic heirloom products. Selling old items is a collector's game and before it goes to the real buyer, you must remember that it has changed a minimum of four to five hands. When a client asks us to collect something for them, we search for it within our commercial network or circle, thus this involvement of different stakeholders," he explains.

Mitford in Old Dhaka is the biggest hub of collectibles both imported and local. Recently a buzz has been created in the antique business, by people who can afford it, and they are opting for old-world aristocracy, as Fahim feels.

When upscaling is trending with a go green sticker on it, these items, holding aesthetic and old family significance, can be re-used in many ways. Antiques add grandeur to your home if used in an artistic way. You do not have to turn your home into a museum rather highlight a period piece for that subtle grace.

BEGUM ROKEYA

A redoubtable Muslim feminist and educationist

MOHAMMAD A. QUAYUM

Rokeya Sakhawat Hossain (1880-1932), fondly known as Begum Rokeya, was an autodidact who became a formidable champion of women's rights and education when women in South Asia, especially Muslim women, were forced to live in subhuman conditions, almost like animals, or even worse than animals (Rokeya's analogies). She was brought up in an environment that was brutally indifferent to women and often viewed them, following the teachings of the legendary first man and lawgiver in Indian mythology, Manu and his influential "laws", as embodiments of "untruth, sin and darkness" and comparable to "dogs" and "cows." Rokeya's mission was to root out such primitive, pejorative, and gynophobic ideas from society and make women equal to men, or even outshine them, through their education, empowerment, and emancipation.

Born in a rich but ultraconservative Muslim family on December 9, 1880, in the village of Pairaband, Rangpur, Rokeya did not enjoy parental love or freedom in childhood, only because of her gender identity. In her dedicatory note to her novel Padmaraag, she admits, "I have never experienced the love of a father, mother...or a teacher" (All excerpts in the article are from my translation of Rokeya's work in The Essential Rokeya). Moreover, in Aborodhbashini, she scornfully recounts how she had to live in an extreme purdah system from the age of five, which segregated her not only from men but also from women outside their family circle.

Her androcentric father, Zahiruddin Muhammad Abu Ali Hyder Saber, was wealthy enough to marry four times, including a European woman, and send his eldest son, Ibrahim Saber, to England for higher study. Yet, he had no interest in sending Rokeya and her elder sister, Karimunnesa, to school. He also prohibited them from learning English and Bangla, considering them "non-Islamic" languages that could corrupt the minds of young girls, but not so much of boys, as Rokeya's two elder brothers were both brought up in English-medium schools in Calcutta (Kolkata).

However, Rokeya's eldest brother, Ibrahim Saber, was progressive and supported women's education. Rokeya once likened his affection for her to "Kausar", the heavenly stream of nectar mentioned in the Quran. It was Ibrahim Saber who taught English and Bangla to Rokeya, often in the dim light of a candle after their authoritarian patriarch had retired for the night. Another significant figure in Rokeya's emotional and intellectual growth was her husband, Khan Bahadur Syed Sakhawat Hossain. Like Ibrahim Saber, Sakhawat pursued his education in England and believed in women's empowerment and emancipation. He inspired Rokeya, who was childless, to dedicate her life to this cause. Their unwavering support was pivotal in motivating Rokeya to challenge the regressive practices of her time and spearhead the charge of rescuing women from what she called their "shipwrecked" state.

Rokeya's mission of bolstering the status of South Asian women, especially of her own faith community, began with her essay "Strijatir Abanati", first published in the ladies' magazine, Mahila, in 1903 and then in a Muslim magazine, Nabanur, the following year. This was followed by a slew of publications in several other newspapers and popular magazines, such as Nabaprabha, Bharat Mahila, Bangeya Muslim Sahitya Patrika, Saugat, Sadhana, Dhumketu, Indian Ladies' Magazine, The Mussalman, to name a few.

In her essays, Rokeya launched stringent attacks on men for depriving women of their inherent rights and subjecting them to various forms of oppression and exploitation. However, she also expressed disdain towards women for internalising society's male-centred values and thoughtlessly surrendering their dignity and femininity to men. She argues that men have cunningly manipulated women under the guise of love, reducing them to the status of "bonded slaves", "domesticated animals", and "feckless mannequins". In turn, women have accepted their subjugation and embraced lives of passivity and ignorance in the vein of "opium addicts".

In her essay "Subhasadeq", she instigates women to rise from their "addictive" state of dehumanising serfhood: "Wake up, mothers, sisters, daughters; rise, leave your bed and march forward...Say, mother, pounding your chest, we are not animals! Say, sister, we are not objects for possession! Say, daughter, we are not items of ornament to be locked away in an iron safe. Say, all in unison, we are humans!" In "Griha", Rokeya dissects the general perception that men rule the world and women command the home by showing how South Asian women, irrespective of their class, colour, cast, or creed, are all homeless, forced to live within their four walls, at the whim and mercy of men. "For those who live in subjugation and do not have the right to consider the house of their 'keeper' as their residence, home is like a prison," she argues stridently and concludes in a more blistering tone, "Therefore I say, we do not even have a little hut to call our home. No other creature in the animal world is destitute like us. Everyone has a home—only we do not."

Rokeya's literary repertoire encompasses not only explosive essays but also a plethora of poems and short stories vehemently condemning toxic masculinity. In her work "Biye-pagla Buro", she offers scathing criticism towards elderly men who engage in the inappropriate practice of marrying young girls, exploiting the allowance of polygamy in Islam. The way she makes fun of the selfishness and sexual obsession of septuagenarian men in the story is darkly comic and virulent.

In "Nurse Nelly", she portrays the dire consequences that can befall an entire family due to a woman's lack of education. The story revolves around Nayeema, an uneducated Muslim girl who succumbs to the manipulative tactics employed by a group of British Evangelical missionaries, leading her to convert to Christianity and become "Nelly". Tragically, this decision not only results in her own demise but also claims the lives of her mother-in-law and her two children. Rokeya's underlying message in the story foregrounds the paramount significance of educating and empowering women, as they play an indispensable role in upholding the stability of both family and society. By keeping women uninformed and susceptible to manipulation, the fabric of cultural and religious values can unravel, as Rokeya poignantly depicts in this narrative.

Rokeya's most famous story is "Sultana's Dream", in which a young Muslim girl, Sultana, visits Ladyland in her dream, where women run the state and men are confined indoors or in the "mardana". In this seriocomic utopian story, Rokeya shows how beautiful and morally as well as socially prosperous a country can be when women are given their rights and opportunities, and are allowed to act according to their potential, unimpeded by male bias or misogynous policies. Ladyland is not only neat and clean, well-maintained like a garden, but also free from violence, corruption, and crime; people here have tamed nature and tapped its energy for the good of the community; they do not fight over ideological differences or fritter their time away smoking and chatting; child marriage is banned and female education is actively encouraged; and their only religion is adherence to Love and Truth, without the traditional rituals that divide society and induce intercommunal riots and war. This is Rokeya's blueprint for a future when humanity learns to shun male hegemony and treat all human beings as equals.

Knowing that education was the only way forward for women, Rokeya decided to start a school for girls with the money bequeathed by her husband before he died in 1909. She began the school in Bhagalpur, Bihar, Sakhawat's hometown, with only five students. But unable to cope with Sakhawat's dogmatic daughter by his first marriage (Rokeya was Sakhawat's second wife), she moved the school to Calcutta, starting with eight students this time and naming it after her husband—Sakhawat Memorial School for Girls. When Rokeya founded her school in 1911, there were only two other schools for Muslim girls in Calcutta: one established in 1897 under the patronage of Begum Ferdous Mahal, the Begum of the Nawab of Murshidabad, and the other in 1909, under the patronage of Khojesta Akhtar Banu, mother of the well-known Bangali Muslim leader, Huseyn Shaheed Suhrawardy. This speaks volumes about how Rokeya, who had never stepped into a school compound in childhood, became a trailblazer in her adult life in the education and modernisation of South Asian Muslim women.

Rokeya struggled throughout her life to run and expand the school. Her biggest challenge came from religious chauvinists who were fiercely opposed to the education of Muslim girls despite the prophet's injunction that education was obligatory for all Muslims. Unable to break Rokeya's iron will, they started spreading hideous rumours that she was a "whore" whose only intention was to make money by using the school as a façade. They also accused her of being a Christian behind her purdahnashin Muslim disguise, determined to convert the Muslim girls to Christianity. Referring to her essay "Strijatir Abanati", where Rokeya advises women to toss aside all jewellery as insignias of their slavery, one critic asked notoriously, slandering Rokeya, "But could she be truly civilised without getting rid of her clothes as well and becoming naked?"

A second problem was getting students, as Muslim girls in those days were not allowed to step out of the house without purdah. To convince the mothers, Rokeya went from door to door to explain how education would enrich their daughters' lives and assured them of using covered transports to protect the girls from the male gaze. She also experienced untold financial hardships as rich Muslim men refused to support her mission of educating girls, which violated the norms of Islam in their view. Notwithstanding such mounting hurdles, Rokeya went ahead with her feminist-cum-educational vision and mission till the very end of her life, for which she is now regarded as one of the most admirable icons in South Asian history—deserving of a university and a university hall in Bangladesh, and two schools and a library in India named after her.

Mohammad Quayum*'s books on Rokeya include* The Essential Rokeya (Brill, 2013) and A Feminist Foremother (Orient Blackswan, 2017; with M.M. Hasan).

Rokeya's most famous story is "Sultana's Dream", in which a young Muslim girl, Sultana, visits Ladyland in her dream, where women run the state and men are confined indoors or in the "mardana". In this seriocomic utopian story, Rokeya shows how beautiful and morally as well as socially prosperous a country can be when women are given their rights and opportunities, and are allowed to act according to their potential, unimpeded by male bias or misogynous policies.

POETRY

Colours

KASHFIA NAHREEN

I see colours everywhere–
I see hues of crimson scattered across the pages of my books,
The splashes getting darker by the second,
As if someone was bled dry right on top of it.
I see colours everywhere–
Shades of purple with a tinge of red overwhelm my senses throughout the day,
It reminds me of flesh turning blue
Once the last breath is taken,
And all I can think of when I see it is you.
I see colours everywhere–
Bright yellow spots scattered with white splotches
Are what I see when I feel warm and happy and content,
And god knows how long it has been Since I watched the yellow streaks dance across me,
Maybe I stopped seeing yellow
The day you died.
I see colours everywhere-
Streaks of grey intermingled with splashes of black
Bring to mind overcast days
Where the cloud seems to pour out everything weighing them down,
And the thought of rain
Always reminds me of you
And how heavily it stormed the night you died.
I see colours everywhere-
Flecks of yellow waltzing amidst an ocean of green
Pulls me into its depth and showers me in a torrent of your memories,

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

And every time that happens
I am engulfed by the pain of losing you.
Echoes of your voice ring in my ears
As the world turns scarlet in front of my eyes.
Your face haunts my thoughts every goddamn day
And I can't help but remember the smile on your face
The last time I saw you,
You looked so peaceful in death
Like you were slumbering in the depths of the cerulean sea,
Everyone kept telling me
How they never saw anyone looking so content after death,
But all I could think of was how you were gone,
Suddenly stripping all the bright colours from my life,
That no longer do I see colours everywhere.

REBECCA HAQUE

Soft melody of Fazr Azaan
A pre-dawn chiaroscuro of flashing silver sky and dusky trees
Wafting branches wild in the sudden Kalboishaki storm shedding fistfulls of foliage
I inhale the luxurious scent of squelched earth
smoking under the sodden leaves
Entranced by shafts of electric blue lightning bolts
I am drenched in the rushing rain
I feel the sentient plops of raindrops seeping into the texture of my soft brown skin
Slowly awakening the spirit within to respond with gratitude to the muezzin's call to prayer

Cheat officer appointed to look after finances of all large corporations

Despite her stellar results, many people have criticised the actions of the cheat officer. They have gone on to social media and have misspelled her name over and over in outrage. Trolls are having a field day because it is easy to attack a woman on social media, generally.

NUTBOLTU

When you have corruption in your business. When your business partner steals all the money you were planning to steal. When you have product delivery services take your money in a backpack with a bang and disappear to a deep dark valley where you can never get it back. Who you gonna call?

Now you have someone. The government recently appointed Labiba Habiba as the official Cheat Officer (CO), not to be confused with other people who start their introductions at wedding parties with two Cs. Labiba Shabuba has taken on the job to reduce the heat of international governing agencies crying that we have too much unrestrained corruption. Cut down bad business practices to grow and so on and stuff.

"Corruption is like the moon, without it there is utter chaos," stated Patel Shwarma of the South Indian Mustachioed Businessperson's Association. They've been filing verbal corruption cases against many local firms, but no action has been taken, mainly due to difficulty in understanding the accent.

Habiba Marhaba Labiba has been in office for exactly 63 days and she has already taken some strong corrective measures. She started with drafting old, existing laws into illustrated manuals showing corruption is bad, mmkay? These manuals were then handed out to business owners who strongly appreciated the colourful artwork showing cash taken under the table is darker than cash taken over the desk. Their appreciation was shown through supportive donations via vKash app (number provided at the end of the article).

Shabiba Fariba then went on to take extreme steps to reduce the heat put on by donor agencies and anti-corruption bodies. She encouraged people to cut down trees all across the city. Experts claimed this was a bold strategic move. Donor agencies now turned their attention to the actual rising heat in the city, potentially leading to an ecological meltdown. People started dying because of the resulting heatwave.

The good of the many outweigh the good of the few ... good ... few poor people. No one was looking at corporate and business corruption anymore. As a result, things started getting back to normal, meaning business continued as usual.

"It takes money to make money, preferably other people's money," said Tanvir Sultan, MBA. "International donor agencies have been too focused on corporate and business corruption, and the creative moves by Lafiba Shamira have taken the heat off what really matters: business," he explained.

Despite her stellar results, many people have criticised the actions of the cheat officer. They have gone on to social media and have misspelled her name over and over in outrage. Trolls are having a field day because it is easy to attack a woman on social media, generally. The traditional patriarchy feels women are still not capable of taking on challenging new social objectives. It is a social construct that we at Satireday fight constantly by ensuring women employed here have the same equal rights and salaries as other women. As such, we rally behind the CCO Larifa Labira.

Newly appointed cheat officer stays on top of business corruption.

Boss goes insane trying to redefine insanity

UNPROFESSIONAL CORRESPONDENT

The regional manager of the Madaripur branch of Thunder Beefin, a paper company known for intra-office beef, has reportedly gone insane trying to redefine the definition of insanity.

This was confirmed by the assistant to the regional manager, who insisted we run his comments despite him not being a mental health professional qualified to diagnose mental illness. We have decided to run the comments because due diligence is so 2007.

Afaik Haroon, the assistant, said, "Well, it all started in a meeting last month called to address our lack of profits and our abundance of degrowth. There was talk about the digital revolution, which happened about a decade ago with people ordering paper from websites. Some people told the boss that our focus on doing people-to-people sales was not going to cut it anymore, and we had to hire more people to run our own website and make it seamless."

According to Afaik, the boss then came up with an idea to reallocate existing resources, because new hires were absolutely out of the question with degrowth being at the level it was.

She said in utter frustration, "The definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results."

One of the meeting attendees fainted because of an overdose of déjà vu, a dangerous drug that causes the matrix to glitch, meeting sources close to the event and closer to developments told Satireday. One of the employees, now a former employee, pointed out to the boss that her colleague had fainted because this reallocation of resources was being floated as a solution for the 43rd time in the last decade.

She said in utter frustration, "The definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results."

At this, the boss exploded. "What are you trying to say? Are you trying to say I am insane? What do you know about the definition? I will define it for you.

"Insanity is not solving a problem when I give you the solution. I have allocated resources to solve the problem before. It's not my problem that you aren't able to implement my solution.

"So, insanity is not being able to do the same thing asked of you repeatedly."

"Sir, isn't that incompetence?"

"Well, then insanity is you asking me to solve this problem every two months and expecting me to come up with different results," the boss shouted at the top of his voice.

"That's what she said!" exclaimed another former employee.

"Hahahahaha, then we are all insane, we are all insane!" the boss cried and ran out of the room, laughing hysterically, and has not been seen or heard from since.

Afaik said that is what led him to diagnose that the boss went insane.

He said, "As assistant to the regional manager, I have now taken the reins, and I will engage in reallocating resources. And I expect results!"

Official transferred to slightly worse area for embezzling Tk 10,000 crore

SHOAIB AHMED SAYAM

In a big win for justice, a government official who has abused his powers to embezzle Tk 10,000 crore is facing the harshest punishment the legal system can offer: transfer to a slightly worse work area.

M Bazlur Rahman -- a veteran tax official cum money launderer, with over 10 years of experience -- was caught when Anti-Fraud Foundation (AFF) watched TikTok videos of Bazlur buying five resorts and a cruise ship in the name of his wife and son.

Md Murshid Khoka, director of AFF, said, "We had no idea that a government official, whose financial records are available to us at all times, has amassed so much illegal wealth.

"We have taken steps to be more vigilant. Our officers have already increased our TikTok watchtime," he continued. "A case has been filed, but we think the transfer is more than enough, maybe a bit too much even."

"Imagine the barbarity: you can't meet your work friends every day anymore. The people are new, surely a nerve-racking experience. And on top of that, the commute gets disproportionately long. Does anyone deserve this?"

For over a week, netizens have been demanding justice, with the chant "Transfer him!" Critics of the movement, however, opine that the punishment is just too cruel.

"Previously, he was demoted, from the post of assistant director to assistant to the director, shattering his self-confidence. The transfer just adds to the inhumanity," said Golam Kibria, a human rights activist.

"Imagine the barbarity: you can't meet your work friends every day anymore. The people are new, surely a nerve-racking experience. And on top of that, the commute gets disproportionately long. Does anyone deserve this?" said Mukta Ahmed, a government official who owns seven duplex houses in Gulshan.

Bazlur's family members are in shock. Speaking to this correspondent at their mansion, they said everyone thought Bazlur was a humble man, but extremely adept at investing his Tk 20,000 salary into profitable ventures.

"My father has done so much for this state, and maybe Canada's economy. It's a shame that the state, or Canada, didn't come to his rescue," said Bazlur's daughter Eva Sion Rahman.

Contacted, Bazlur said, "I shouldn't have embezzled so much, knowing that I'm responsible for managing the people's hard-earned taxes. Despite this fall, I'm looking forward to working at the customs department."

Meanwhile, 10 farmers were hanged for failing to pay loans amounting to Tk 5,000.

How we entered the era of digital money

A Bangladeshi tale of transition from money orders to electronic payments

Digital systems have increased convenience as there is no need to drive home or face traffic to get services. Covid-19 was also a big push towards adoption of digital services.

TAHIRA SHAMSI UTSA

Rahman Ali, a 68-year-old retired primary school teacher, begins his day in a serene village in the northwestern district of Bogura with a routine he has perfected over the decades.

He methodically prepares tea, reads the newspaper, then walks around the locality, visiting the school premises or taking a stroll through the market.

Today, however, he has a different purpose. He is going to the local post office to send a money order to his daughter in Dhaka, just as he has done countless times before. But when he goes there nowadays, something feels different -- the once bustling post office has only a few people.

THE COMFORT OF TRADITION

For Rahman, the process of sending a money order is more than a mere transaction – it is a ritual.

He meticulously fills out the form, carefully counts the notes, and hands them over to the postmaster with a familiar nod.

"I trust this method," he says with a sense of nostalgia. "It's reliable. I know my daughter will receive the money safely."

In contrast, Ayman Siddique, a 25-year-old entrepreneur, runs a handicraft business from his small office in Dhaka. He is busy with orders and payments. For him, time is of the essence.

"I used to hate the wait at the post office," he recalls. "But now, thanks to mobile financial services, I can send and receive money in seconds. It's a game-changer."

A GENERATION GAP

The contrasting experiences of Rahman and Ayman highlight the generational divide in Bangladesh's financial landscape. While the older generation continues to hold onto the familiarity of money orders, the younger generation has swiftly adapted to the convenience of digital payments.

According to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, the heyday of money orders came over a decade ago in 2011-12, when 2,218 transactions, totaling Tk 625.92 crore were conducted. These figures illustrate the significant reliance on this traditional method at the time.

But by 2015-16, the number reduced by nearly two-thirds as only 796 money orders amounting to Tk 197.91 crore were dispatched. This represents the initial phase of digital adoption.

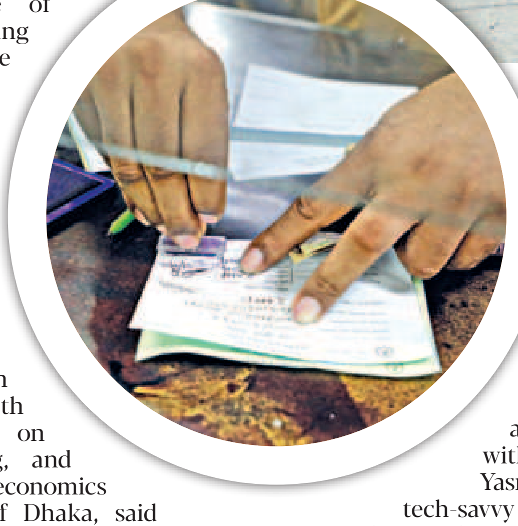
Fast forward a few years, the decline became even more apparent: by 2019-20, transactions plummeted 62.19 percent to 301 worth Tk 114.34 crore.

In July-December of 2023-24, the last fiscal year, only 99 money orders were booked, involving Tk 22.76 crore, underscoring a near-complete transition to digital methods.

Also reflecting the increasing reliance on digital financial transactions has been the significant growth of the mobile financial service (MFS) sector in Bangladesh over the years. The number of cash-out transactions and the money involved have consistently increased.

In January 2019, the total amounted to Tk 13,282 crore. It skyrocketed to Tk 42,230 crore by March 2024, according to Bangladesh Bank data. This reflects both higher frequency and larger individual transaction values.

The remarkable transition of Bangladesh from traditional money transfer methods to digital payments through internet banking is also worth showcasing. Over the years, the number of internet banking customers has steadily risen, hitting over 85 lakh in April.



Simultaneously, the volume and value of internet banking transactions have significantly increased, with the total transaction amount surpassing Tk 97,100 crore in April, a substantial leap from Tk 3,790 crore in December 2018.

Sayema Haque Bidisha, research director at the South Asian Network on Economic Modeling, and a professor of economics at the University of Dhaka, said technologies are more advanced nowadays, allowing technological adoption to take place for both senders and receivers.

Digital systems have increased convenience as there is no need to drive home or face traffic to get services. Covid-19 was also a big push towards adoption of digital services as people needed to get everything without going outside.

Speaking of the challenges, Prof Bidisha highlighted that the whole cashless economy system depends on electricity and internet, which are not always available in rural areas.

"A lack of digital and financial literacy is another barrier as the full process is self-administered. For example, sharing your PIN code can harm customers because they can be tricked, but many do so due to a lack of awareness."

The digital money transfer system impacts the economy since the more money is transacted, the more money spreads and circulation increases. Also, people, especially females, who are out of the market system, can get involved through such services, which fosters an inclusive economy, she added.

The Directorate of Posts has an electronic money transfer service (EMTS) at a very low cost, said Farid Ahmed, postmaster general for metropolitan circle in Dhaka.

"But the facility must be strengthened at the union level to make it more effective by including rural parts of the country. Notably, sub-post offices of upazilas provide EMTS effectively."

EMBRACING CHANGE

Sharifa Oishee, a third-year university student, shared her experience.

"Managing finances was always a hassle. I remember my parents sending money orders to my grandparents before festivals. It was a slow process."

"Nowadays, I never use money orders. With bKash and Nagad, I can pay tuition, buy books, and even split bills with friends instantly. I even get the tuition from the students who receive lessons privately."

Oishee's story echoes those of millions of young Bangladeshis who have embraced digital wallets. These platforms offer unprecedented convenience – no long waits, no need for physical currency, and the ability to handle transactions anytime, anywhere.

Muhammad Zahidul Islam, vice-president and head of media and communications at Nagad Ltd, opined that the maximum utilisation of technological advancement has been possible in the last 13 to 14 years regarding digital money transfer.

"Sending money now takes a fraction of a second. If we can ensure the benefits of digital banking, rural communities will easily adapt to the process."

Awareness must be raised to make the rural people more knowledgeable about these facilities and systems, he added.

THE STRUGGLE TO ADAPT

However, not everyone finds the transition easy.

Yasmin Ara, a 55-year-old, struggles with the technology-based service. "I have always trusted the post office," she confesses. "This digital system feels complicated and confusing. I once sent money to the wrong number, and it was a nightmare to get it back."

Her experience is not unique. Many older Bangladeshis find digital payments intimidating and worry about security. They also miss the personal interaction and assurance that comes with traditional methods.

Yasmin, with the help of his tech-savvy younger son, recently started to make payments through digital transactions. "It was easier than I thought," she admitted, though still wary of abandoning her trusted money orders entirely.

As Bangladesh continues to innovate, the future of financial transactions looks increasingly digital. The decline in money orders is not just a statistic but a reflection of a broader shift towards a more connected, efficient, and inclusive financial ecosystem.

For Ayman, Oishee, and millions like them, digital payments are a testament to progress and convenience. For Rahman and Yasmin, they represent a challenging but inevitable transition.

The journey from money orders to digital payments is a story of adaptation, resilience, and the promise of a better, more efficient future. In the heart of the bustling city and the quiet corners of rural villages, the echoes of this transition resonate.

Ali Ahmmed, chief commercial officer of bKash, added: "If time-befitting guidance from the regulator continues along with support from stakeholders, it won't be hard to strengthen the country's digital financial ecosystem with continuous innovation in the MFS sector."

There are 22.6 crore MFS accounts in the country, of which 56.21 percent are owned by people living in rural areas. Women account for 57.07 percent of rural MFS users.

These numbers indicate that people living in the countryside are ahead in terms of owning MFS accounts compared to urbanites. Such financial inclusion, especially for women, through MFS has multifarious impacts on rural communities.

At its heart, it is a tale of two generations, each navigating the changing tides of technology in their own way. As Bangladesh steps boldly into the digital age, this transformation promises to bring greater convenience and financial inclusion to every corner of the nation.

EMTS: The cheapest way to send money across Bangladesh

TAHIRA SHAMSI UTSA

Many may be surprised to learn that the most cost-effective way to transfer money from one place to another without a bank is through the post office.

The Bangladesh Postal Department provides this facility, named the Electronic Money Transfer Service (EMTS), widely known as a digital money order.

EMTS keeps a commission or cost of Tk 5 per thousand, meaning an individual can send Tk 50,000 taka for a cost of just Tk 250.

The process is simplified by the fact that customers, irrespective of their address, can send and withdraw money from any post office in the country.

The Directorate of Posts took a significant step towards modernising its financial services by inaugurating the service on March 26, 2010.

After necessary training, the service was launched on May 5, 2010.

This system has allowed rapid and secure transfer of funds across the country.

Al Mahbub, additional postmaster general of central circle, Dhaka, said the EMTS provides a way to send money at a low cost, with the caveat that deposits or withdrawals cannot be made after 5:00pm.

The fact that the post office is closed on Friday and Saturday also poses a barrier to popularity.

But in some aspects, the EMTS bests modern technology.

"Fortunately, a sender can freeze the transferred money and get a refund if he wants, which is not possible through mobile financial services," he added.

Speaking about security issues, Farid Ahmed, postmaster general of Metropolitan Circle, Dhaka said: "The security of the money is fully ensured as a PIN is provided to the sender and receiver. The post office also gives a receipt to confirm the transaction from both sides.

"If there is any complaint, it is solved then and there."

A proposal to make the EMTS available through an app has been placed to the Ministry of Finance, he added.

Currently, the EMTS service is available in 2,752 post offices across Bangladesh.

According to official data, from 2010 to 2023, more than 27,700,000 transactions, amounting to Tk 7,677 crore, were made through the EMTS.

Notably, during this period, the Directorate of Posts made an income of about Tk 90 crore.

Md Moneruzzaman, programmer of the central ICT cell of the directorate and desk officer of EMTS, said: "Generally, due to a weak financial infrastructure, there are no banks in many parts of the country. But a post office can be found in most places, even if it is not in the best shape. The only hope for marginalised people looking to send money is the post office. Hence, unbanked and rural communities mostly avail and still avail this service."

Increasing the budget for the Directorate of Posts and advancing ICT infrastructure can make the EMTS service more functional and efficient, he added.

Matiur thrived on insider trading

The now-removed taxman, his family used stock market to mint tens of millions

ZYMA ISLAM and MOHAMMAD SUMAN

Former NBR official Md Matiur Rahman, who became a subject of controversy thanks to a high-profile sacrificial goat, has made much of his wealth by minting pre-public shares, an analysis of his and his family's shareholding in at least 15 publicly listed companies show.

Pre-public shares, or placement shares, are those that are offered privately to individual investors, before a company goes public, or releases shares on the stock market for investment.

By its very nature, placement share trading requires a prior association between the company and the investor.

This becomes problematic when the investor in question is a tax regulator himself, holding various positions at NBR with the last being president of Customs, Excise and VAT Appellate Tribunal.

Millions of these placement shares were not just offered to him, but to a large number of his immediate and extended family members.

Over the last three weeks, The Daily Star tracked the pattern of their buying at least 9.8 crore placement shares across 15 companies before the companies went public.

Iran reformist wins presidency

Congratulations pour in as Masoud Pezeshkian wins run-off

AFP, Tehran

Iran's reformist candidate Masoud Pezeshkian yesterday won a runoff presidential election against ultraconservative Saeed Jalili, the interior ministry said.

Pezeshkian received more than 16 million votes and Jalili more than 13 million out of about 30 million votes cast, electoral authority spokesman Mohsen Eslami said, adding that voter turnout stood at 49.8 percent.

The number of spoiled ballots was reported to be over 600,000.

Pezeshkian said the vote was the start of a "partnership" with the Iranian people.

"The difficult path ahead will not be smooth except with your companionship, empathy, and trust. I extend my hand to you," Pezeshkian said in a post on social media platform X, after on Tuesday saying he would "extend the hand of friendship to everyone" if he won.

The election, called early after the death of ultraconservative president Ebrahim Raisi in a helicopter crash, followed a first round marked by a historically low turnout last week.

Iran's supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, who wields ultimate authority, had called for a higher turnout

PROTESTS AGAINST QUOTAS

Students go for 'Bangla Blockade'

STAR REPORT

Students demonstrating against quotas in government jobs are set to block key intersections in the capital and highways next to campuses across the country this afternoon.

As per their announcement, college and university students will go on an indefinite strike from today, demanding reinstatement of a 2018 order that abolished quotas.

Protestors also threatened to enforce hartal.

There were demonstrations in the capital for the fifth straight day yesterday. Students kept the Shahbagh intersection blocked for an hour in the afternoon.

Several other streets were also blocked for a while, causing long tailbacks.

Dhaka University student Nahid Islam, a key organiser, announced that the demonstrations, "Bangla Blockade", will begin at 3:00pm at key intersections in Dhaka and highways.

"We will not return to classrooms until our demands are met," he told a rally.

In Dhaka, Shahbagh, Science Lab, Chankharpool, Nilkhet, Motijheel and other intersections near educational institutions will be blocked, he said.

College and university students elsewhere will block highways, he added.

In Dhaka, Shahbagh, Science Lab, Chankharpool, Nilkhet, Motijheel and other intersections near educational institutions will be blocked.

"The government is behaving irresponsibly... The executive branch cannot avoid its responsibility. The prime minister in 2018 said there will be no quota," he said.

Nahid urged parents to take to the streets too and alleged that Chhatra League men were trying to keep students away from the demonstrations.

PATIENT REFERRAL SYSTEM

Three out of 5 still going straight to major hospitals

AHMED DEEPTO

Subarna Akhter, a 31-year-old mother of two from Chuadanga, was diagnosed with gallbladder stones recently.

Doctors were willing to do the surgery, but the family, doubtful of the skills of small town physicians, decided to travel over 200-km to Dhaka for the treatment.

Since the family cannot afford the costs at reputed private hospitals, Subarna and her husband tried tertiary-level public hospitals in the city. But they found out after a few days that they would have to wait for weeks to get the procedure done at such facilities because of the long queue of patients.

"Eventually, we left Dhaka and I got treated in Rajshahi without having to wait for days," Subarna said.

Like the couple, thousands of people go through unnecessary hassles due to what experts say is the absence of a patient referral system.

This also disproportionately increases the number of patients at tertiary-level facilities, they added.

In a proper referral system, a patient first goes to a nearby primary healthcare centre, which, if needed, will send them to more advanced facilities.

This way, advanced hospitals do not have to deal

Slow progress in setting up hi-tech parks

A project to set up a dozen hi-tech parks at the district level is moving at such a glacial pace that it may hold the government from attaining its vision of building a smart nation and readying the workforce for the digitalised world.

The government initiated the project in April 2017 to construct 12 hi-tech parks in as many districts to create a skilled workforce and job opportunities. But the project has so far achieved 14.34 percent physical progress, according to a report.

20 lakh people hit by floods in 15 districts

STAR REPORT

Around 20 lakh people in 15 districts across the country have been affected by the ongoing floods caused by torrential rains and the onrush of water from upstream, said State Minister for Disaster Management and Relief Md Mohibur Rahman.

The worst-hit districts include Sylhet, Sunamganj, Netrakona, Moulvibazar, Habiganj, Rangpur, Jamalpur, Gaibandha, Feni, Rangamati, Bogura, Kurigram, Sirajganj, Lalmonirhat, and Cox's Bazar, he told reporters at the Secretariat yesterday.

The Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre (FFWC) said that the flood situation in Kurigram, Jamalpur, Gaibandha, Bogura, Tangail, and Sirajganj may remain unchanged today (Sunday).

"In the next 24 hours, the overall flood situation in various low-lying areas of the northeastern region may improve slightly," added the FFWC bulletin issued at 9:00am yesterday.

In Gaibandha, over 67,000 families remain waterlogged in 164 char areas under Sundarganj, Sadar, Phulchhari, and Shaghata upazilas since Tuesday night.

The Jamuna River was flowing 83cm above danger level at Phulchhari point at 6:00pm. The strong current of the floodwaters was causing erosion in many char areas.

In Kurigram, the flood situation worsened significantly, leaving an estimated 1.5 lakh people stranded.

According to Saidul Arif, deputy commissioner of Kurigram, all major rivers, including the Brahmaputra, Dharla, and Dudhkumar, were flowing above their danger levels.

PM asks children

UNB, Gopalganj

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday asked children of the country to aim big in life and prepare themselves for bigger tasks for the country.

"We will go to the moon one day. So, you have to take preparation to achieve that from now on," she said.

The prime minister made the remarks while opening "Bangabandhu Corner" at Gimadanga Tungipara Government Model Primary School.

She also unveiled cover of an album titled "Eso Bangabandhuke Jani" (Let's know Bangabandhu) drawn by specially needed children at the school which was established in 1912.

"Study attentively to become great human beings. We will build Smart Bangladesh. You will be really smart. You will run the state one day. You will be prime minister, minister and sceintist and going to greater places and doing researches," she said.

About the album of the pictures on the country's history drawn by the children with special need, she said it will help them know the country's history.

Holy Ashura to be observed on July 17

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The holy Ashura will be observed on July 17 as the moon marking the month of Muharram was not sighted anywhere in Bangladesh last evening.

Therefore, the month of Muharram will start from tomorrow.

The National Moon Sighting Committee yesterday took the decision at a meeting, presided over by A Awal Howlader, additional secretary to the religious affairs minister, held in the conference room of the Islamic Foundation in Baitul Mukarram National Mosque.

According to the Islamic Foundation's press release, the meeting reviewed the information received from all the district administrations, the foundation's head office, its divisional offices, the Bangladesh Meteorological Department, and Bangladesh Space Research and Remote Sensing Organization regarding the sighting of the moon of the month of Muharram of 1446 Hijri.

As there was no news of the moon sighting last evening, the holy Ashura will be celebrated on July 17, the press release added.

Ashura, a public holiday in Bangladesh, is observed on the 10th day of Muharram.

Muslims across the world recall the sacrifice of Hazrat Imam Hossain (RA), his family members, and 72 followers, who embraced martyrdom in 680 AD in the desert of Karbala on the banks of the Euphrates River in Iraq while fighting for truth and justice against the Yazidi forces.

Matiur thrived on insider trading

The shareholders include his immediate family: his first wife Laila Kaniz Lucky, his second wife Shammi Akter Shibli, his son and daughter from the first marriage Ahmed Towfiqur Rahman Arnab and Farjana Rahman Epshita.

The shareholders also include his sister Howa Nur Begum, his brothers MA Kayum Howlader and Md Nurul Huda, his sister-in-law Sharmin Akter Lovely, and his brother-in-law Mohammed Nasar Uddin. The Daily Star also tracked the shares of two of his relatives from his village, Md Rashiduzzaman and Md Mijanur Rahman.

Most of these shares -- about 63.5 percent -- were bought in their own names, while 36.5 percent of the shares were bought in the name of five companies owned wholly or partially by Matiur and his family members.

With a combined paid-up capital of Tk 6.82 crore, all the five family-owned companies were set up or acquired between 2013-2018 when Matiur held important positions in NBR, according to the company filings at Registrar of Joint Stock Company obtained by The Daily Star.

A significant portion of the placement shares were also bought during this period, although millions of such shares can be traced back to 2011, 2010, 2008, and even 2002.

Between June 24 and July 5, repeated attempts were made to contact Matiur Rahman, Howa Noor Begum, Sharmin Akhtar Lovely, and Farzana Rahman, but their phones were found switched off. Arnab, Laila Kaniz, and Kayum Howlader did not respond to our phones and text messages.

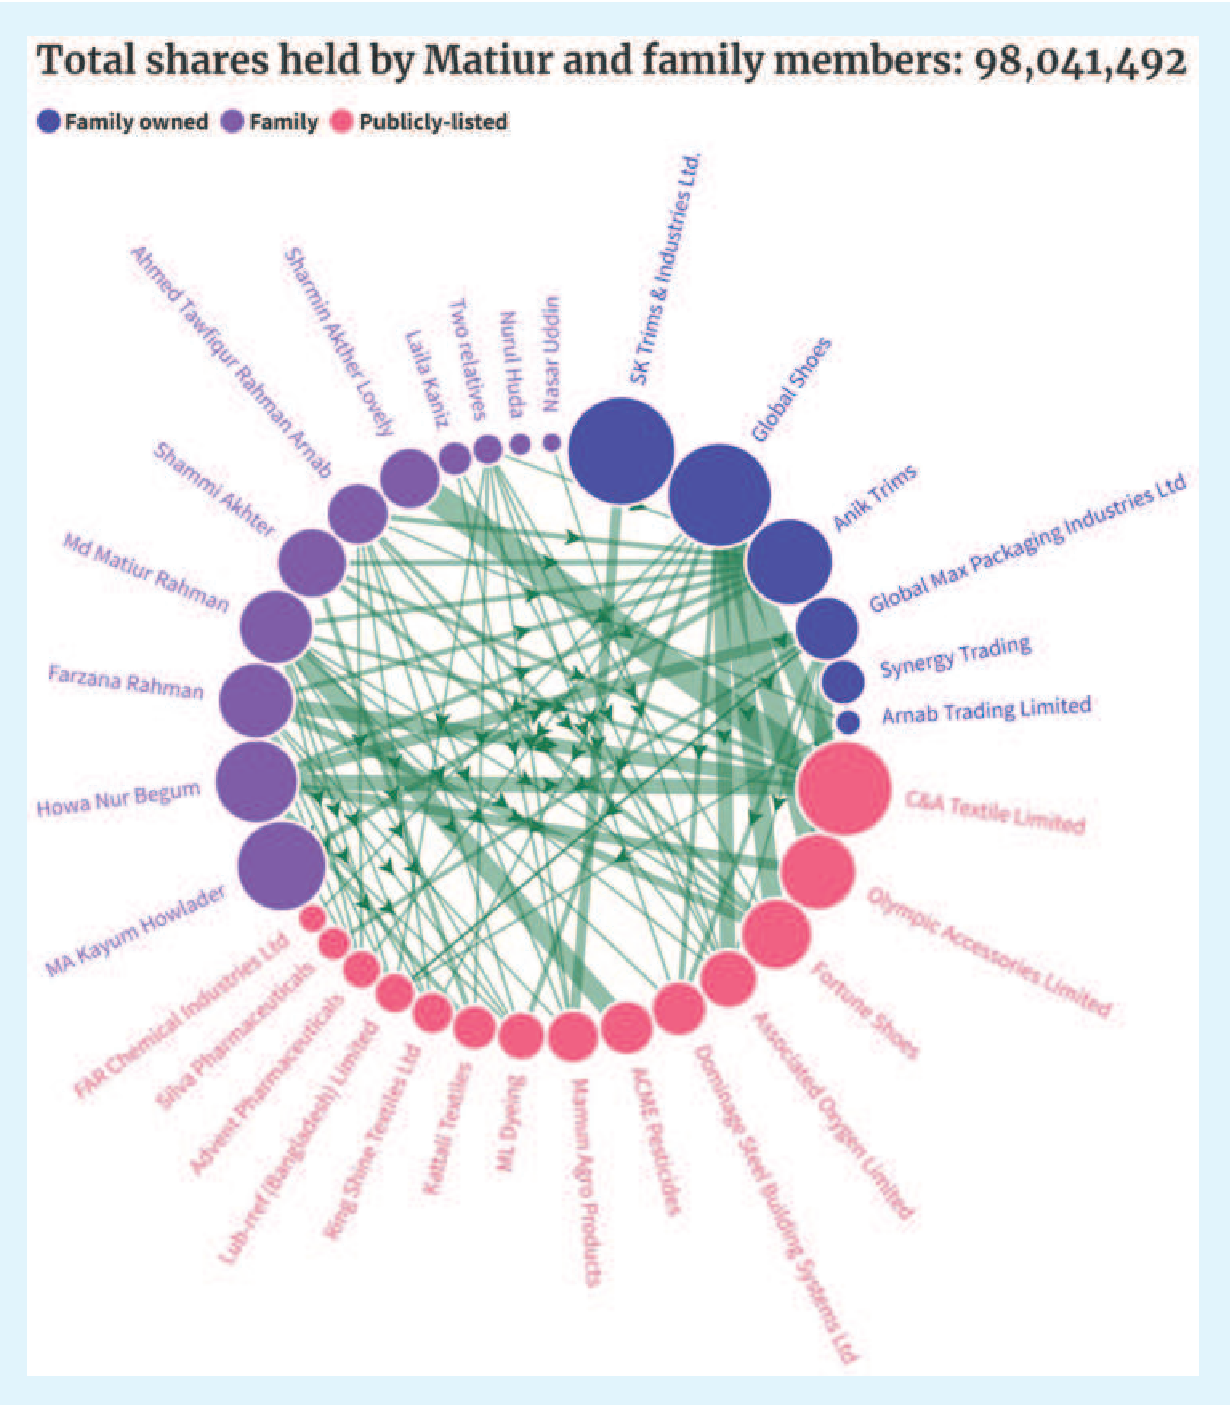
Service rules do not allow government officials to be involved in speculative trading. Service rules also do not permit any member of his family "to make any investment likely to embarrass or influence him in the discharge of his official duties."

The rules also bar public officials from investing in any stocks about which he would have had information, which Matiur clearly had as a revenue official during these years. In other words, the placement shares he and his family members accepted before the companies released their IPOs was essentially insider trading, a violation of capital market rules.

Matiur and his family's wealth made headlines after, Mushfiqur Rahman Ifat, reportedly his son from his second marriage, posted a photo of a sacrificial goat on social media and claimed to have bought it for Tk 12 lakh. According to the owner of the farm where the goat was raised, Ifat eventually did not take the delivery in the face of the controversy, although he had made an advance of Tk 1 lakh.

Matiur publicly denied that Ifat was his son.

Assuming that the shares were bought at a face value of at least Tk 10, the cumulative purchase value of the shares held by Matiur and his family over the years is at least Tk 101.3 crore, according to our calculation based on publicly available data from the capital market.



Total shares held by Matiur and family members: 98,041,492

These shares are spread across 15 publicly listed companies and five non-listed companies where he and his family members have significant ownership.

The current market value of the shares of the publicly listed companies would be about Tk 175 crore, although The Daily Star cannot confirm if they still hold all the shares or if they hold shares in any other companies.

The five privately owned companies are Global Shoes, Global Max, SK Trims, Anik Trims and Synergy Trading.

Matiur, who joined government service in trade cadre in 1994 and was transferred to customs in 1998 on deputation, is currently a first-class officer, with a monthly basic salary of Tk 78,000. In the wake of the recent development surrounding his and his family wealth, he has been removed from NBR and attached to the finance ministry.

His first wife, Laila Kaniz Lucky, retired as an associate professor from Government Titumir College in the capital four years ago. Her yearly pension is Tk 4.63 lakh.

Also chairman of Narsingdi's Raipura upazila, Lucky's tax files submitted to the Election Commission before this year's upazila polls show she is worth Tk 10.31 crore, although a closer look by The Daily Star indicates she may have understated her wealth by dozens of times.

Their son Arnab is a 2021 graduate from the University of Michigan with a Bachelor in Arts, while his daughter Farjana is a makeup artist and runs a makeover business in Canada, according to the university website and Farjana's Instagram profile.

Matiur's brother MA Kayum Howlader owns or has owned the most shares among his immediate family members -- 1.4 crore shares across three companies.

His sister Howa Nur Begum has had 1.15 crore shares in her name, spread across eight companies.

Matiur's daughter Farjana Rahman Epshita, who now lives in Canada, has owned the third highest number of shares -- 90.5 lakh across nine companies.

Matiur has owned 86.3 lakh shares across nine companies.

His second wife Shammi Akhter (Shibli) has owned 74 lakh shares across five companies while her sister Sharmin Akhter Lovely 52.5 lakh shares in one publicly listed company.

Matiur's son Ahmed Tawfiqur Rahman Arnab has had 52.9 lakh shares in these 10 public companies. His first wife Laila Kaniz Lucky has had 9.1 lakh shares, while his second brother Md Nurul Huda 1.5 lakh shares. Matiur's brother-in-law Md Nasar Uddin has had 60,000 shares.

In addition, two other relatives from his village home held 60,000 shares.

The 15 publicly listed companies include garment and garment accessories manufacturers like C&A Textiles Ltd, SK Trims & Industries Ltd, ML Dyeing, Olympic Accessories Ltd, Ring-Shine Textiles, Kattali Textiles; chemical and pharmaceutical companies like Associated Oxygen Ltd, Lub-rref (Bangladesh) Ltd, Silva Pharmaceuticals, FAR Chemical Industries Ltd, ACME Pesticides, Advent Pharmaceuticals, Mamun Agro Products and a steel builder named Dominage Steel.

"It is public knowledge that placement shares are given as favour. Why did so many companies favour him?" said former BSEC chairman Faruq Ahmed Siddiqi.

In addition to the stock market shares, this newspaper found 3.5 crore placement shares held by the companies owned by Matiur and his family members.

A shoe company called Global Shoes Ltd whose managing director is Matiur's brother, MA Kayum Howlader, and whose shareholder is his brother-in-law Nasar Uddin was found to have owned placement shares in 10 of the same companies where Matiur and his family members have pre-IPO shares.

Global Shoes has held 1.96 crore shares in Matiur and his families' private companies since long.

Another of their family-owned company named Global Max Packaging Industries Ltd has held 58.5 lakh shares in at least four companies as Matiur's family members for over a decade. The managing director of Global Max was Matiur's sister-in-law Sharmin Akhter Lovely. Its director was his brother-in-law Nasar Uddin, while the chairman is his sister Howa Nur Begum.

Three other such family-owned companies are Arnab Trading Ltd, SK Trims Ltd and Synergy Trading Ltd, which collectively hold 97.4 lakh placement shares in three publicly listed companies where Matiur's family members also hold placement shares.

On more than one occasion, the placement shares were bought by these family-owned companies on the same day or adjacent dates.

For example, Global Shoes bought placement shares from ML Dyeing Ltd on May 2, 2010, the same day that Matiur Rahman, his son, his daughter, and his sister purchased placement shares in the company.

One of the companies, Ring-Shine Textiles, in which Matiur, his son, his daughter and their company Global Shoes own placement shares, was accused of disbursing placement shares but not taking any cash in return.

Ring-Shine had raised its paid-up capital from Tk 9.95 crore to Tk 285 crore allegedly by issuing placement shares before opening to the public in 2019. Bangladesh Securities Exchange Commission later found that 11 sponsor directors and 33 external shareholders were given the shares for free.

Matiur and his family got 17.5 lakh placement shares from Ring-Shine in October 2008.

"Why was no action taken against them and their shareholders for such a crime?" questioned former BSEC chairman Faruq Ahmed Siddiqi.

Matiur told an interview with a private television on June 19 that he would sit with owners of listed companies and visit firms to identify their weaknesses and offer solutions for growth, and took placement shares in exchange. He offered consultancy for initial public offerings (IPOs) to help companies float shares to raise money from the public.

He also said that in exchange for his "consultancy," he got shares of Fortune Shoes at a discount rate of Tk 8 (as opposed to the face value of Tk 10 per share), which is a violation of the law.

"As a government servant, he has violated government rules. He cannot provide such consultancy. They should take action against such misconducts," said Faruq.

However, Matiur committed a graver crime, he added. "He knew insider information. It is a crime to trade when you have such critical inside information. This is insider trading."

20 lakh people hit by floods in 15 districts

classes due to flood waters entering the buildings. A total of 20 madrasas and 43 secondary schools have also been forced to close.

The number of people seeking refuge is increasing, with many heading to shelter centres as their homes are submerged in chest-deep water. Others are spending their nights on boats.

The floods have inundated 6,615 hectares of cropland in the district.

"Vegetables on my three bigha land have been damaged by floodwater. Even, our house has been submerged. We've been living on dry food for the last few days as we can't cook," said Shafiqul Islam, 60, of Char Madhya Kadamtala area under Kurigram Sadar upazila.

"We have yet to get any relief," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Maidul Islam, 48, of the same village, said, "We've taken shelter on an embankment as our house has gone under water. We were facing a crisis of food and fresh water. We are passing hard days."

On Friday afternoon, three people, including two sisters, were electrocuted to death while they were riding on rafts in Kurigram's Nageshwari upazila.

Monzu Ali, of Marnea in Rangpur's Gangachara upazila, said, "We have been waterlogged for 10 days. We are yet to get any relief assistance."

Abdus Sattar, 70, of Alfajtarir village under the same upazila, said, "My house and croplands have been devoured by the Teesta. I've become homeless."

A day labourer in Sayedpur village in Sirajganj's Shahzadpur upazila, said, "All of our croplands have gone under water. We don't have any work now. We are struggling to survive,".

Mifta Miah, a trader of Fenchuganj market in Sylhet, said, "The market has gone under knee-deep water. Most of us are suffering from skin disease as we stay in the water all day."

For flood-hit districts, the government has so far allocated a total of 8,700 tonnes of rice, Tk 3.10 crore in cash, 58,500 sacks of dry food, Tk 60 lakh for baby food, and Tk 60 lakh for cattle fodder.

Illegal assets worth Tk 43.5 crore found money deposited in various banks. The ACC has also obtained documentary evidence of these movable and immovable properties owned by Benazir's family.

The anti-graft body has chosen not to disclose further details at the moment for the sake of investigation.

The investigation team has preliminarily identified assets worth around Tk 9.26 crore in Benazir's name; Tk 2.13 crore in his wife Jissan Mirza's name; Tk 8.11 crore in their elder daughter Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir's name; and around Tk 4.76 crore in their younger daughter Tahseen Raisa Binte Benazir's name.

Based on this information, the ACC has already issued separate notices to Benazir and his family members requesting details of their assets.

It also issued asset declaration notices to the family members under section 26(1) of the Anti-Corruption Commission Act-2004 on July 2.

A high official of the ACC said, "Following a court order, almost TK 1,000 crore worth of Benazir Ahmed's movable and immovable assets have been seized or frozen. Their primary objective was to ensure that these assets were not misappropriated or smuggled.

"Currently, each asset is being verified individually. Many of them are reported in his tax records. For now, these assets are being considered, and the calculation of illegal assets is ongoing as documentary evidence is required in ACC cases."

The source added, "Although the assets appear to be worth crores, only official documents will be considered for case purposes. Accordingly, the ACC team has so far proven that Tk 43.5 crore worth of movable and immovable assets are beyond known income sources."

On April 22, the ACC began investigating allegations of illegal asset acquisition against Benazir and his family members. A three-member team, led by Deputy Director Hafizul Islam from the ACC headquarters, is conducting the probe.

Take stance against propagandists

Arafat tells event

BSS, Dhaka

State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat yesterday urged all to take stance against those who are spreading “falsehood and misinformation” against the government.

“If the government makes any mistake and it has any failure, you may highlight, criticise and oppose it... but you should unmask and protest against those who mislead people by telling lies and half-truths,” he said.

The state minister made the remarks while distributing government grants for making films at the Tathya Bhaban.

GM Quader says the corrupt will get away with crimes

UNB, Dhaka

Jatiya Party Chairman and leader of the opposition GM Quader yesterday alleged that the corrupt people currently under scrutiny would get away with their crimes, saying that none of them will face any punishment.

“We've seen this before with the casino cases -- lots of noise, but no real penalties. It's all just a show, a drama. Some individuals have even been allowed to legalise their illicit money under the guise of amnesty,” he said.

The opposition leader came up with the remarks while addressing the biennial conference of Gazipur district unit of the party as chief guest.

‘They mostly targeted madrasa teachers, students’

Ansar Al Islam tried to form new platform led by Indian national to avoid surveillance, says Rab after arresting six members

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and EMRUL HASAN BAPPI

Ansar Al Islam, under scrutiny by law enforcers, tried to form a new platform, “As Shahadat,” led by an Indian national named Muhammed Habibullah, according to Rab.

Rab said the supposed ameer of the outfit is one Salahuddin.

From India, the outfit leaders were recruiting members, collecting funds, and providing training -- mainly targeting the madrasa students and teachers in Bangladesh.

The majority of the students, who were targeted by the outfit's new platform, are aged between 19 and 20.

The outfit maintains communication through encrypted applications.

The information came to light after Rab-3, Rab-7, and Rab-15 in separate drives arrested six outfit members from Dhaka and Cox's Bazar in May and June.

According to the case statement filed with the Paltan Police Station in May, and the police investigation progress report, the group has been recruiting members in different districts of Bangladesh for a long time.

Commander Arafat Islam, director of the legal and media wing of the Rapid Action Battalion told The Daily Star yesterday, “The outfit has at least 80 to 100 members.”

“But we have successfully been able to detect the outfit's activities at the beginning, and one of their top leaders in Bangladesh is now under surveillance,” he said.

Asked about whether they have reports of missing madrasa students, he replied in the negative.

“Three students, who did not return to a madrasa after spending Eid vacation, were arrested in Cox's Bazar in connection with the outfit,” he added.

In another development, the West Bengal Special Task Force on June 22 arrested Muhammed Habibullah, at his residence in Paschim Bardhaman, according to a report of India Today.

Within a week after the arrest, the STF also arrested two other operatives -- Anwar Sheikh, and Harej Sheikh, from Chennai and Howrah, reports Times of India.

This is not the first time that Ansar Al Islam has tried to form a new platform.

Ansar Al Islam was linked to the financial support and recruitment of Jamatul Ansar Fil Hindal Sharqiya, a new outfit.

Mainul Islam, an Ansar Al Islam member, participated in Sharqiya's formation meeting in jail, according to counterterrorism officials.

Due to its cut-out strategy, Ansar Al Islam members remain out of law enforcers' radar and continue their activities on offline and online platforms.

For the past one and a half years, law enforcers have failed to trace two top Ansar Al Islam leaders, Moinul Hasan Shamim and Abu Siddiq Sohel, who were snatched from police custody while returning to jail after a hearing in a Dhaka court on November 20, 2022.

Md Asaduzzaman, chief of the CTTC unit, said the two are hiding in Bangladesh, and efforts to arrest them are ongoing.

AT A GLANCE

- The new platform has at least 80 to 100 members
- Formed by an Indian national Habibullah, who was arrested by West Bengal STF
- Ansar Al Islam has link with new outfit Sharqiya
- No trace of two Ansar Al Islam members who were snatched from court

India a political friend, China dev partner: Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader has described India as Bangladesh's political friend and China as its development partner.

“China has contributed significantly to the development of many sectors in our country. Why will we not accept support from China for the sake of the country's overall progress?” Quader said yesterday.

He made the remarks after inaugurating a seven-day “Hilly Fruits Fair-2024” at the Sheikh Hasina Chittagong Hill Tracts Historic Protection and Research Centre in the city's Baily Road area.

BNP supports protests of teachers, students

Says Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said their party morally supports the ongoing movements by public university teachers and students based on “justified” demands.

Speaking at a press conference, he dismissed allegations of the ruling party leaders that BNP is inciting the teachers' protest against the new universal pension scheme “Prottoy” and the students' agitation protesting the reinstatement of the quota system in government jobs.

Benazir's Purbachal resort now under N'ganj admin

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narayanganj

Narayanganj district administration has taken control of a resort belonging to former IGP Benazir Ahmed at Purbachal in Narayanganj's Rupganj upazila.

The development comes after Dhaka court earlier ordered appointment of administrators to look after the confiscated properties of Benazir and his family members.

A team of Narayanganj district administration officials, led by ADC (Revenue) Shafikur Alam, sealed off the resort by attaching a notice at the front gate yesterday.

A team of the Anti-Corruption Commission was also present during the drive.

ADC Shafikur told reporters that the district administration sealed off the property -- Savanna Eco Resort Private Ltd -- and took it under control following the court order.

“We found some birds and animals inside the property but couldn't enter into the duplex house as it was locked with a digital lock system. We will take a decision about the property later,” the ADC said.

According to the notice, Benzir's daughter Farheen Rishta Binte Benzir is mentioned as the owner of the resort.

‘Party feud behind my father's killing’

Claims MP Azim's daughter

UNB, Dhaka

Daughter of slain Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar yesterday said her father was killed for political reasons.

Anar's daughter Muntarin Ferdous Dorin said this while talking to reporters in front of Jatiya Press Club.

She said, “Of course, there must be internal party feuds [within Awami League] behind my father's killing. Otherwise, why would they [arrested suspects belonging to the ruling party] be involved in the brutal murder? They knew everything. They even came to comfort me!”

Two top leaders of Jhenaidah Awami League, Saidul Karim Mintu, the general secretary, and Kamal Ahmed Babu, the welfare affairs secretary, are currently in jail in connection with the murder.

Babu initially gave a confessional statement, but has recently applied to recant it alleging that he was coerced.

The two local Awami League leaders were arrested based on enough information, Doreen claimed.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at a friend's house overnight. He left the house the next day saying he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, police from India and Bangladesh said Azim was killed in a Kolkata flat.

Six killed in road crashes

STAR REPORT

At least six people were killed in road accidents in four districts yesterday.

In Bagerhat, a motorcyclist was killed as an unidentified vehicle hit him in Mollahat upazila.

The deceased is Asad Sheikh, 40, from Jugihati in Khulna.

The accident occurred around 7:30am on Khulna-Mawa highway in Kahulpur.

Hours later, Md Anwar, 35, from Gangni in Mollahat, was killed when a bus hit a rickshaw-van carrying him in front of Sagar Filling Station, said Mollahat Highway Police Station Officer-in-Charge Sheikh Nuruzzaman.

In Rajbari, two helpers of a driver were killed as a truck hit another parked truck at Kalibari.

The deceased are Anisur Rahman, 35, and Md Liton Sheikh, 35.

In Dinajpur, Hosen Ali, 70, died as a pickup ran him over while he was crossing the Dinajpur-Gobindaganj road at Tatakpur intersection.

In Joypurhat, Rabeya Begum, 60, was killed when a truck hit her in Sadar upazila.

At another programme of cardiologists at a city hotel on Friday evening, the minister said a Health Safety Act would be placed in the parliament soon.

He said no one has the right to say "wrong treatment" except the Bangladesh Medical and Dental Council (BMDC).

If anyone wants to lodge any complaint over wrong treatment, he will have to apply to BMDC, he added.

Samanta said whenever a doctor is posted to an upazila health complex, she or he starts lobbying to cancel the order. "The doctors will have to work in rural and suburban areas," he said.

"We are taking initiatives to improve the residence facilities of doctors there," he added.

Lots of noise

Quader said everyone except for Awami League supporters agrees that the current situation of the country is not good.

Ordinary people are struggling; many can't even afford an egg. It is happening due to the government's flawed policies and corruption.

Regarding the anti-quota movement, he said, "University students are now protesting against the quota system. This quota system is unconstitutional. There is no way to legalise it according to the constitution. So why does the current government need this quota?"

Bitumen that lasts 10 days!

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Within merely 10 days after renovation, the bitumen cover of a road in Nizampur area of Patuakhali's Kalapara upazila is coming off.

The Local Government Engineering Department recently renovated the 3.3-kilometre-long and 3-metre-wide road from Sagar Cinema Hall to Nizampur Kheyaghat area in the upazila at a cost of Tk 1.33 crore, and opened it to traffic 10 days back.

However, soon after vehicular movement resumed on the road, the bitumen cover started getting removed at numerous places, alleged locals.

Visiting the road yesterday, this correspondent observed that the bitumen is coming off even if scraped by hand, or rubbed by feet.

Locals said 25mm thick bitumen cover was supposed to be made throughout the road, but most places got only 15-20mm cover.

According to sources at Kalapara upazila LGED office, the road was renovated recently after it got damaged in Cyclone Amphan-induced flood.

A contractor named Shahidul Enterprises got the Tk 1.33 crore renovation work and has been paid Tk 90 lakh already. However, within 10 days the road returned to a dilapidated state.

"Poor-quality materials were used to renovate the road. We demand exemplary punishment of the officials concerned and the contractor for irregularities, and proper renovation of the road," said Nasir Mia, a local resident.

Solaiman Munshi, another local, echoed him.

Contacted, Shahidul Islam, the contractor, said the upazila administration is looking into the matter, and declined to comment any further.

Refusing to provide details, Mohammad Sadekur Rahman, Kalapara upazila engineer of LGED, said the final bill will be withheld until the road is reconstructed.

Contacted, Rabiul Islam, UNO of Kalapara upazila, said he inspected the renovated road and found it to be of sub-standard work.

"Instructions have been given not to pay the final bill until the road is rebuilt. The contractor's security money has also been asked to be forfeited," he added.

Motaleb Talukder, chairman of Kalapara upazila parishad, said the supervising official has been directed to rebuild the road at the earliest.

Fish, veggie prices soar amid supply shortage

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

The prices of fish and vegetables have surged in Bagerhat due to a supply shortage, leaving consumers in dire straits.

Visiting different markets in the district recently, including Bagerhat Bazaar, Darga Haat, and Signboard Haat, this correspondent found hilsa weighing one kilogramme or more are being sold at Tk 1,700-1,900 per kg, while those weighing around 500 grammes are being sold at Tk 800-1,300 per kg.

Other local fish varieties like rohu and katla are priced at Tk 350-400 per kg, bhetki at Tk 700-1,00 per kg, pangasius at Tk 190-250 per kg, tilapia at around Tk 210 per kg, and different shrimp varieties such as harina, chami and chaka at Tk 600-800 per kg.

"I usually buy pangas or silver carp for my family as those tend to be less pricey. However, even those saw a hike in price by Tk 80-90 per kg. If this trend continues, middle and lower-income families will struggle to afford fish for consumption," said Ruhul Amin Sheikh, a local resident.

Meanwhile, vegetables including potatoes are now selling for Tk 55-60 per kg, eggplants for Tk 155-170, tomatoes for Tk 150-160, bitter gourds for Tk 100 kg, bottle gourds for Tk 40-60 each, green chilies for Tk 350-400 per kg, while leafy greens are now Tk 20-40 per bunch. However, pumpkins and pointed gourds remain relatively affordable at Tk 30-40 and Tk 25-35 per kg respectively.

"People are finding it difficult to sustain as the market prices of fish, vegetables and other essentials keep on rising," said Asit, a shopper at Signboard Haat.

In contrast, meat prices remained somewhat unchanged since last month, with beef selling for Tk 750, mutton for Tk 1,000, broiler chicken for Tk 180-220, sonali chicken for Tk 300, and local chicken for Tk 500-550 per kg. Salam Sheikh, a meat seller, however, remarked that the sale of meat dropped considerably since Eid-ul-Azha.

Abdullah Al Imran, assistant director of Directorate of National Consumer Rights Protection in Bagerhat, said they are regularly monitoring the markets and will take legal actions if irregularities are found.

Take stance against propagandists

the country, who mislead people by spreading misinformation against the government.

"Anyone can oppose the government's decisions and can give different opinions, but, if anyone misleads people by spreading falsehoods and misinformation, artistes and creative industry members have a responsibility to stand against the propagandists."

In this connection, he referred to a number of Memorandums of Understanding (MoUs) signed during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's recent India visit saying "a vested quarter are carrying out misinformation campaigns to mislead the people over the contents of the MoUs".

Responding to the criticism over Bangladesh-India MoU on regional connectivity, he said, the propagators are saying that Indian trains will run through Bangladesh carrying arms, ammunition and explosive posing a security risk here, which is an absolute lie.

The state minister said the MoU clearly stated about establishing a regional connectivity since Bangladesh has a business with Nepal and Bhutan worth of US $50 million.

"We export our products to those countries. Now these products are being exported through transshipment process via India to Nepal and Bhutan," he said, adding, if a straight train line is established, it will help Bangladesh expand its business and export.

Arafat said, "We also inserted a provision in the MoU that we will go to Nepal and Bhutan through India."

He said another important aspect of this MoU is that Bangladesh under the agreement will import 40MW electricity from Nepal using India's national gridline. At present, Nepal is producing electricity considering its domestic demand although it has the potential of generating 72,000 MW of electricity.

"We can reduce our dependency on fossil fuels if we import clean energy from Nepal that will be good for Bangladesh, India, Nepal and the entire world," Arafat said. So, how does it go against the country's interest? he questioned.

On government grants for film production, he said the government wants to ensure transparency and accountability in the selection process of the scripts for getting the grant.

"We want to focus on quality rather than quantity to this end. So, international standards will be followed in the selection process next time," Arafat said.

The government has selected 26 films, including 20 feature-length and six short films, to provide Tk 15.20 crore as grants in 2023-24 fiscal.

behind in studies due to the flood-induced school closure. Thanks to Bidhan Das, they are not only able to continue their studies, but also get necessary school supplies and a nurturing environment," she said.

Similar sentiments were echoed by Mohammad Ali, a seventh grader sheltered at the school.

"Our house got damaged in the flood, so we took shelter here. I did not expect to be able to study in the present situation, but here we are receiving enough support to make sure our studies are not disrupted."

Bidhan's commitment resonates deeply with his purpose as an educator.

"As a teacher, I have a commitment to do everything possible to make sure that education remains uninterrupted for the students, even during a natural disaster," he told this correspondent.

"Our foreign policy is friendship with everyone, malice to none. India has been our faithful friend since 1971. We cannot forget our friends in times of trouble," Obaidul Quader said, asking "what did the post-75 governments achieve by having hostile relations with India for 21 years?"

He also said the friendly relations with India contributed to resolving the border and chhitmahal problems.

Speaking of the BNP's demand for UN intervention on Khaleda Zia's proper treatment, he said, "There is no point in doing that, it is a matter of law. BNP is playing politics over Khaleda Zia's treatment."

Quader said that the BNP has resorted to the quota and teachers' protests after failing to wage their own movement.

"What they [AL leaders] are saying is illogical," Fakhrul said.

However, he said BNP, as a responsible party, must react to incidents happening within the country.

"They [teachers and students] are carrying out their movements, and we have moral support for them now and will continue to do so. Can't we support a justified movement?" the BNP leader said.

Fakhrul urged the government to meet the protesters' demands by rescinding the "Prottoy" pension scheme for teachers and reducing the current quota in government jobs to a reasonable level.

CMCH BURN UNIT

Construction work to start in September

Says health minister

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Health Minister Dr Samanta Lal Sen yesterday said the construction works of a 150-bed specialised Burn and Plastic Surgery Unit at Chittagong Medical College Hospital will start from September.

The prime minister is likely to lay the foundation stone of the project after returning from her visit to China, he said while briefing reporters.

Of the Tk 284.76 crore project, the Chinese government will fund Tk 179.83 crore as grants and the Bangladesh government will fund the rest.

Later, the health minister held a views-exchange with doctors and officials of CMCH.

The minister said, "I feel bad knowing that the MRI machine in the hospital is out of order. Chattogram is the second largest city after Dhaka. I will do whatever is necessary to fix the problem."

The minister said despite the availability of quality medical services in the country, people go abroad for treatment.

"Our prime minister receives treatment in the country... If the members of parliament use local hospitals for checkups, then the quality of treatment in the hospitals will improve and people's confidence in our treatment will return," he added.

The minister arrived in the port city on Friday and made unscheduled visits to a number of hospitals. He expressed dissatisfaction over different irregularities in some of those and asked DGHS officials to take action.

Teaching suspended at 37 Kurigram schools

Chilmari-Roumari ferry service halted; flood situation may worsen

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

At least 37 government primary schools across Kurigram have suspended their academic activities after being submerged under floodwater.

Visiting Uttar Majherchar Government Primary School in Krishnapur village under Kurigram Sadar upazila, this correspondent saw floodwater flowing over the roof of its one-storey building.

"There are 80 students in this school. Classes have been suspended as the school is completely submerged. The school building has to be repaired once the water recedes, before classes can resume," said Sabina Yasmin, headteacher of the school.

Around 36 other schools are also going through a similar situation.

Nabez Uddin Sarkar, district primary education officer in Kurigram, said, "There are 280 government primary schools in the shoals and riverbank areas in the district. Of those, 37 have been inundated by floodwater and had to suspend academic activities."

"With the water level of the Brahmaputra continuing to rise, more schools in these areas may have to suspend classes," he added.

Meanwhile, the ferry service on Chilmari-Roumari route in Kurigram has stopped as the connecting roads at the ghats are submerged, putting commuters at risk.

Prafulla Chauhan, manager at Chilmari Ferry Ghat of Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Corporation, said the ferry service will resume once the water recedes.

"The Brahmaputra was flowing 78cm above danger level at Chilmari point on Friday morning, with its water level having risen by 19cm in 12 hours since 6:00pm on Thursday," said Rakibul Hasan, executive engineer of Bangladesh Water Development Board in Kurigram.

"The water level is expected to rise further as onrush of water from upstream in India continues," he added.

Damaged by Remal, 133 Barishal schools yet to be repaired

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Barishal

At least 133 educational institutions -- including seven colleges, 70 schools and 56 madrasas -- in the Barishal district sustained damages from Cyclone Remal that lashed the country on May 26, according to sources at Education Engineering Department (EED) in Barishal. However, the authorities concerned are yet to come up with any steps to repair the educational institutions.

As such, academic activities at these institutions are being severely disrupted.

At many of these institutions, doors, windows and furniture were damaged, while some tin-shed roofs were even blown away.

Currently, these institutions are unable to conduct classes.

Despite urging authorities for necessary repairs to resume academic activities, there has been no response yet, said teachers and guardians.

Amirul Islam, president of the governing body of Chandradwip College in Bakerganj upazila, said, "The tin-shed roof was blown away in the cyclone. We applied to EED and local UNO several times for repairs, but to no end. It is not possible to conduct classes amid monsoon without any roof."

According to EED sources, Bakerganj has been the most affected area, with 38 of its schools sustaining damages.

The repairs at each institution will require between Tk 50,000 and Tk 10 lakh, sources said, adding that further delay will only raise repair costs.

Sunil Baran Halder, president of Bangladesh Teachers Association's Barishal regional branch, said education will be severely disrupted for around 50,000 students from these 133 institutions unless urgent repairs are made.

Mujibur Rahman, parent of a seventh-grader from Baherchar Lakshipur Secondary School in Hijla upazila, urged authorities for urgent repairs.

Ashikur Rahman, deputy assistant engineer of EED, Barishal, informed that while Tk 5 crore was demanded for emergency repairs, no allocation has been made yet.

Md Shahidul Islam, executive engineer of EED, Barishal, said, "The cyclone-hit educational institutions will be repaired urgently once allocation is received."

A teacher dedicated to the cause

Schools remain closed but Bidhan makes sure children don't fall behind

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

The relentless floods ravaging Sylhet have forced a harsh reality -- the closure of many educational institutions.

In Barlekha upazila of Moulvibazar district alone, over 252 villages have been submerged in the past 20 days.

At least 500 families sought refuge in 30 designated locations, many of which are schools repurposed as shelters.

According to official data till July 4, as many as 889 primary schools have been closed across Sylhet division either due to flood waters breaching its premises or for being converted into shelters.

For students, guardians, and teachers, learning gaps caused by forced closures of educational institutions is nothing new. This is a recurring event every monsoon, although it keeps getting worse every year.

Besides, the scars left by prolonged school closures during the pandemic are still fresh in everyone's minds.

However, one teacher has decided to take matters into his own hands.

Bidhan Chandra Das, headteacher of Hakaluki High School, has been holding classes for 25 students from 32 families currently sheltered at the flood-stricken school.

The students come not only from Hakaluki High School but also from other schools and madrasas in the area.

But the little ones have one thing in common -- the shared need for education.

Bidhan has refused to let the flood drown their learning spirit.

He has dedicated himself to the students' well-being, remaining at the shelter throughout the day.

Bidhan's makeshift classroom offers a shred of normalcy when everything around these children are under water.

He offers Bengali, English, Mathematics, and Science lessons throughout the day, alongside holding cultural events.

Bidhan's efforts ensure these children, displaced by the floods, continue to receive the education they deserve.

Khaleda Begum, a homemaker from Murshibadkura village who took shelter at the school with her family, expressed her relief.

"I was worried that my children would lag

HANDIAL JAGANNATH TEMPLE

Upholding the spirit of 'Ratha Yatra' for 6 centuries

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

For over six centuries, the Handial Jagannath Temple, located in Handial village under Chatmohar upazila of Pabna, has been celebrating the vibrant Ratha Yatra festival.

The Ratha Yatra, or chariot procession of Jagannath Dev, became popular in the subcontinent during the Ganga dynasty in the 11th century.

Historical records from the Calcutta Gazette suggest the Handial temple itself was established between 1300 and 1400 AD, on a vast 1.19-acre plot within the Chalan Beel region.

It was later renovated by one Bhawani Prashad in 1590 AD, according to a terracotta plaque on the temple's wall.

The temple's rich history, however, is not without its scars.

Its structures were damaged significantly during the 1971 Liberation War. Then it was renovated with modern designs with funding from devotees.

Yet, a single-door structure from the ancient temple remains, a symbol of its enduring heritage.

Today, the Handial Jagannath Temple continues to be a centre of cultural and spiritual significance. The annual Ratha Yatra festival draws devotees from far and wide, celebrating the timeless traditions that have bound this community for generations.

At present, the temple is an archaeological site while being maintained by devotees, said Md Abu Sayeed, an official of archaeology department.

The temple was last renovated by the archaeology department in 2009-10, he added.

The temple's eye-catching architecture and intricate terracotta motifs attract tourists and visitors from across the country and beyond, Abu Sayeed added.

Dilip Kumar Brahmacharya, senior sebayet (manager) of the temple, said it is one of the three ancient temples in the subcontinent with Jagannath Dev's idol, and has been celebrating Ratha Yatra over the past 600 years.

"The temple consists of Jagannath Dev's temple, Mahaprabhu temple, Lakshmi-Vishnu temple, Durga temple and Ratha temple. Religious festivities are held for each of the temples every year," he added.

DHVANI IN DHAKA

Indian YouTube sensation eager for Bangladeshi concert

RAKSHANDA RAHMAN MISHA

It felt surreal seeing Dhvani Bhanushali in person, as I was used to seeing her on YouTube in a 16:9 ratio. While on the sofa, I noticed how refreshing she looked in her white top and blue jeans. She didn't have any makeup on, nor did she need it. The vibrant singer was recently in Dhaka for a two-day trip, during which she spoke exclusively with The Daily Star about her music and her strong desire to perform a concert in Dhaka.

Dhvani's path to stardom has been swift. Her 2019 hit Vaaste brought her immense popularity, with the music video crossing 1.5 billion views on YouTube, making her the youngest and fastest Indian pop star to hit 1 billion views on the platform. However, people in Bangladesh mostly remember her for her girl-next-door vibe in her sweet rendition of Leja Leja Re.

Her latest hit track, Thank You God, is also trending on YouTube, garnering 14 million views within three months. Besides singing in music videos, she has also voiced numerous Bollywood tracks, including Psycho Saiyaan from Saaho, Duniya from Luka Chuppi, and Kinna Sona from Marjaavaan, among others.

She enjoys massive followings on social media, with 7.5 million on Instagram and 4.7 million on Facebook. With a large number of Indian youths being inspired by her music, she feels it's her responsibility to reflect the ideas of tradition, love, and culture through her songs.

"While growing up, we all have ideals we want to follow as adults. Now that I am an adult and making my own music, I try to ensure that my music videos are suitable for families to watch together. I have this wholesome, good-girl vibe, and I make sure it is reflected in my music videos as well. It's nice to see that youths, particularly little girls, are inspired by my work. As an artiste, I want to positively influence them," said the singer.

Dhvani's sudden trip to Dhaka was mostly kept under wraps; she came for a private event. However, she would love to do a ticketed event, hopefully within the next year. The singer was surprised when I told her that she also enjoys a fan base in Bangladesh. She shared an interesting story when asked if she had interacted with fans in our country.

"I did meet some of my fans at the Bangladeshi airport, and when I came to the hotel, they were playing my songs. This is my first time coming to Bangladesh, and I really respect its culture. Although I haven't listened to any Bangladeshi songs yet, as soon as you leave, I will look them up on Spotify and listen to a few Bangladeshi artistes," revealed the singer.

Whenever a song has a catchy tune and hook, you can be sure it will trend on Instagram Reels. When I first heard Thank You God, I thought an American artiste might have voiced it. Later on, when I searched for the song on YouTube, I found that many people felt the same and were surprised to discover it was an Indian song.

"One day during the writing process of 'Thank You God,' I went to the washroom. While looking in the mirror, I noticed this one ab line and thought, 'Oh my God, this is amazing! I look so good today.' I went back to my writing room and shared it with my fellow writers. They were like, 'Oh my God! This is great! Let's make a song out of it.' And that's how I came up with the line 'Every time I look into the mirror, I say thank you God.' At first, I had no idea people would think it wasn't Indian, but when I went back and listened to it, I realised the hook line might sound accented," laughed the singer.

Nowadays, Instagram and TikTok reels play a crucial role in opening doors for newcomers who want to expand their careers in music. When asked if this was true for her as well, the singer agreed.

"Fortunately or unfortunately, we all discover music on Instagram or TikTok. Regardless of what we say, I think it is an integral part of marketing, and that's really important. Otherwise, you might as well play your music in your living room. As musicians, I believe there needs to be a full-term creative effort in terms of visuals and music, and they need to be connected to the whole product. I think a sample fit can be tested on Instagram, and if a person likes the song, they can go to YouTube and listen to it," stated Dhvani.

My personal favourite song by Dhvani is Mera Yaar. While talking about it, she revealed that this song is really special to her as she wrote it for a boy whom she had a crush on. "I felt like this song was the cleanest way to describe my feelings to someone you don't know well or would love to know," said the singer, blushing.

When asked whether she sees herself on the silver screen, she replied, "Of course, I see myself working on films. However, I would like to add that it's quite different from acting in music videos. Playing a full-length character is really difficult. I am looking forward to an exciting project that might hit theatres this year," said the singer.

Later on, the doorbell rang, and her crew members arrived. Dhvani's face lit up as she saw them. I bid her goodbye, feeling a little giddy and happy with the whole experience. I hugged her wishing with all my heart that I would be able to see her perform soon.

Transport sector projects fare poorly

Tk 34,989 crore. The project was supposed to be completed within June 2022.

But the loan agreement with China was delayed. In April 2018, the ERD inked a Tk 21,036 crore loan agreement with Exim Bank of China, and the physical work of the project finally started in October 2018.

As the project deadline was deferred to June 2025, the cost went up to Tk 39,246 crore.

The Dhaka-Bhanga section of the line was opened in October last year while the Bhanga-Jashore section is expected to be inaugurated within a month or two.

The Joydebpur-Ishwardi double line project, taken up in November 2018, was supposed to be implemented within December 2024.

But China in March 2021 refused to finance the Tk 14,250.61 crore project citing "a lack of in-depth preliminary work and insufficient feasibility study".

China's decision came four months after the Prime Minister's Office in November 2020 directed the BR to cut the negotiation price of three projects, including the Joydebpur-Ishwardi double line scheme, as the cost review committee found that the costs were relatively high.

The two other projects involve converting the Akhaura to Sylhet and Joydebpur-Mymensingh-Jamalpur sections into dual-gauge from metre-gauge.

The government decided to implement the Joydebpur-Ishwardi double line project with Japanese loan and the PMO directed the railway authorities to look for other financiers for the Tk 16,780.95 crore Akhaura-Sylhet project.

The Joydebpur-Mymensingh-Jamalpur project has not been approved by Ecnec yet and the railways authorities are continuing negotiation with the selected Chinese contractor for the last three years without any visible progress, officials said.

TUNNEL, ROAD, FLYOVER PROJECTS

Construction of the Bangabandhu Tunnel under the Karnaphuli river in Chattogram is the only transport sector project completed so far under the Chinese loan facility.

The tunnel was opened to traffic in October last year after the Tk 10,690 crore project was implemented by Bangladesh Bridge Authority (BBA).

The BBA is now implementing the Dhaka-Ashulia Elevated Expressway Project with Chinese loan.

The project, which was supposed to be completed within June 2022 at a cost of Tk 16,901 crore, was delayed as the Chinese authorities took time to approve the loan. The project cost has now gone up to Tk 17,553 crore and deadline has been deferred to June 2026.

Another project, which was supposed to be implemented with Chinese loan, was to convert the Dhaka-Sylhet Highway into four-lane one.

A Chinse contractor was selected for the work and the government signed a primary deal in this regard.

But the Chinese firm then allegedly offered bribes to then newly appointed secretary of the Road Transport and Highways Division to give the go-ahead to the work at an inflated cost.

Speaking at a programme in January 2018, then finance minister AMA Muhith said the company was blacklisted for trying to bribe the government official.

Roads and Highways Department is now implementing the project with the Asian Development Bank's loan.

MONGLA PORT PROJECT

Another transport project was supposed to be implemented for expansion and modernisation of the Mongla port facilities with Chinese loan.

The Mongla Port Authority submitted a Development Project Proposal (DPP) long ago but and Planning Commission in November last year sent back the DPP, involving around Tk 4,500 crore, recommending more scrutiny, a port authority official said.

"We have already sent back the DPP to the shipping ministry after scrutiny," the official said wishing not to be named.

Students go

The protests intensified on Thursday after the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court decided to uphold until further orders the June 5 High Court verdict that reinstated the 30 percent quotas for freedom fighters' children and grandchildren.

University students demand formation of a commission to remove "irrational and discriminatory" quotas; some quotas for underprivileged communities; and regular recruitment when there is no job seeker from such communities.

They also demand an individual be allowed to use the quota privilege only once in recruitment tests.

In 2018, the government abolished quotas amid widespread student protests.

Before that, there were 30 percent quotas for children and grandchildren of freedom fighters; 10 percent for women; 10 for underdeveloped districts; five percent for indigenous communities; and one percent for people with disabilities.

Thousands marched on DU, Buet, and Eden College campuses around 3:00pm yesterday while Jagannath University students blocked Tanti Bazar intersection.

At a rally there, Rakibul Hasan, a student, said, "The government forced us to take to the streets."

There were also demonstrations on campuses of Chittagong University, Rajshahi University, Mawlana Bhashani Science and Technology University and Begum Rokeya University.

Chattogram-Khagrachhari, Dhaka-Rajshahi, Dhaka-Tangail, and Dhaka-Rangpur highways were blocked for a while.

Meanwhile, BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday announced his party's support for the protesters.

England into Euro semis

A dreary encounter for the first 75 minutes came to life after Breel Embolo put Switzerland in front.

Saka's fine strike from outside the box levelled with England's first shot on target five minutes later.

Manchester City defender Akanji was then the unfortunate penalty villain as Switzerland's horrible record in major tournament quarter-finals goes on.

They have now lost five without ever reaching a semi-final.

By contrast, England march on despite another in a string of underwhelming performances from Gareth Southgate's men.

In his 100th match in charge of his country, Southgate again resisted calls for mass changes in personnel but did alter his system.

Zia was devoted to chess till his last day much greater than mine. He had a degree in anthropology from Dhaka University but his true love had always been chess. He trained his son as a chess player as well.

Zia took chess as a profession, which is a really challenging thing to do. I was never a fully professional chess player. I dabbled in many things but Zia was completely devoted to chess till his last day.

People remember me, because I was the first to get GM norm in South Asia, but in terms of quality, Zia was better than me.

No player from Bangladesh has ever made it to the Super GM level in chess. But the only one who came close to doing it was Zia. He was on path to reaching that level when he peaked in 2007-8, but eventually couldn't break through.

He coached professionally in India. He also taught chess to players from other countries as well through online coaching.

I wasn't there at the Chess Federation hall room when he fell down, I had left at around 5:00 pm. I had spoken to him the day before yesterday. We spoke for a long time about many things in good humour.

To me, he looked very tired. His hair was scuffed up and looked dishevelled. I asked him why he was wearing a muffler in the heat. He said he was feeling cold. I found that a bit strange. He didn't look too well. But he was speaking normally.

I had told him to go to a doctor many times before, but he never listened. In the Chennai Olympiad in 2022, he fell sick after the opening ceremony. He vomited a few times, I told him it could be a cardiac issue. But he said it was nothing like that, it was just some indigestion. He could've gotten it checked for free over there, but he didn't do it. He always ignored his health, he thought his condition wasn't that serious. But he couldn't play for three days in that Olympiad.

He led the life of a school headmaster. He was dedicated to chess like how a headmaster looks after a school. He lived a simple life. Whenever we would approach him saying, 'Zia, let's go to this place,' he would say, 'No, Niaz bhai, I don't want to go'. He wasn't outgoing, only obsessing over chess.

Zia hardly got anything in return for his dedication to chess. We need to ensure that his family doesn't suffer and that his wife and son are fine. The federation needs to take that initiative and the government also needs to take some steps.

I still can't believe that I won't get to hear Zia's deep voice, his jokes and laughter anymore. His death has left a huge gap. He had become an inseparable part of our chess community. Whether it was the World Cup or the Olympiad or the National Championship, he was everywhere. He was the heart and soul of our chess, and now, he will no longer be here, this realisation is hurting me the most.

Three out of 5 still going straight to tertiary hospitals with patients with minor problems. They will treat only patients referred by the smaller facilities.

The system creates a link between the primary, secondary and tertiary hospitals.

A recent study published in the peer-reviewed journal BMC Health Services Research said three out of five patients in the country go to tertiary-level hospitals without being referred there.

It also found that 58 percent of the 822 respondents were unaware of the referral system.

The study was conducted at two tertiary hospitals' outpatient and inpatient sections.

It found that only 41 percent of the patients were referred by other facilities.

In 2014, then health minister Mohammad Nasim introduced a patient referral system in Rangpur.

But it did not work because of a lack of facilities, expert physicians, and staff at primary healthcare centres, officials said.

In 2016, National Institute of Preventive and Social Medicine (NIPSOM), conducted a feasibility study in Rangpur, Kurigram, Panchagarh and Nilphamari for a referral system.

Prof Samiul Islam, director of the institute, said, "An effective referral system guideline should be formulated.

"Doctors have to be motivated and trained. People's trust has to be earned for the system to work."

He added that decentralising specialised health services will also reduce the pressure of patients in secondary- and tertiary-level hospitals.

Unless primary healthcare facilities are improved and there are more specialists, a referral system will frustrate people, he said.

The health directorate took an initiative to introduce a system in Manikganj and Chapainawabganj in 2019. But that too failed.

Syed Abdul Hamid, professor at the Institute of Health Economics (IHE) at Dhaka University, said that the lack of a proper referral system leads patients to often bypass primary care and head straight to specialists, creating a long queue.

Dr Supriya Sarkar, deputy programme manager (hospital) at the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS), said a directive for the community clinics was made in 2019, but it was not fully implemented.

The health directorate will soon introduce a guideline, he said.

Prof Ahmedul Kabir, additional director general (administration) at DGHS, said, "We are working on creating an effective referral system. The work on digitising patient data is underway."

Ahmedul said poor services in primary facilities were major barriers to the referral system.

MYANMAR CRISIS

Ethnic fighters battling way into key town

AFP, Mandalay

Myanmar ethnic minority fighters were battling their way into a town housing a regional military command, one of their leaders yesterday.

Soldiers were "surrounding" the northern Shan state town of Lashio, home to the junta's northeastern command, General Tar Bhone Kyaw of the Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) told AFP.

Clashes first broke out on Wednesday as the ethnic fighters moved into the area.

A member of a local group of volunteers helping to treat the injured and bury the dead told AFP yesterday that at least 16 civilians had been killed since fighting broke out in Lashio.

"There has been very strong fighting around the town," the rescuer said.

China anchors 'monster ship'

Says Philippine coast guard

REUTERS, Manila

The Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) said yesterday that China's largest coast guard vessel has anchored in Manila's exclusive economic zone (EEZ) in the South China Sea, and is meant to intimidate its smaller Asian neighbour.

The China coastguard's 165-metre 'monster ship' entered Manila's 200-nautical mile EEZ on July 2, spokesperson for the PCG Jay Tarriela told a news forum.

The PCG warned the Chinese vessel it was in the Philippine's EEZ and asked about their intentions, he said.

"It's an intimidation on the part of the China Coast Guard," Tarriela said. "We're not going to pull out and we're not going to be intimidated."

The Chinese ship, which has also deployed a small boat, was anchored 800 yards away from the PCG's vessel, Tarriela said.

China's embassy in Manila and the Chinese foreign ministry did not immediately respond to a request for comment. China's coast guard has no publicly available contact information.

GAZA OFFENSIVE

Strikes in Gaza as Israel commits to talks

AFP, Palestinian Territories

Israel carried out deadly airstrikes in Gaza yesterday and engaged in combat with Hamas fighters, while to the north it exchanged fire with Hezbollah fighters across the Lebanese border.

The fighting raged as diplomatic efforts to halt the war, which will enter its tenth month today, continued with Israel saying on Friday it would send a delegation next week to continue talks with Qatari mediators.

There has been no truce since a one-week pause in November during which 80 Israeli hostages were freed in return for 240 Palestinians held in Israeli prisons.

The war continued unabated yesterday, with Israel's military saying it had conducted operations across much of the Gaza Strip, including Shujaiya in the north, Deir al-Balah in central Gaza and Rafah in the south.

Shujaiya is among the areas the military had previously declared to be cleared of Hamas, but where fighting is again taking place.

Israel has carried out a military offensive that has killed at least 38,098 people in Gaza, also mostly civilians, since Oct 7 according to the health ministry in the Hamas-ruled territory.

The health ministry in the Hamas-run territory said at least 87 people had been killed in the past 48 hours, and paramedics yesterday reported 10 deaths in an air strike on a house in Nuseirat refugee camp in central Gaza.

The Hamas press office and paramedics said four journalists working for local media outlets were killed in strikes overnight, and the UN agency for Palestinian refugees, UNRWA, said two of its employees had been killed.

According to UNRWA, which coordinated much of the aid delivered to Gaza, 194 of its employees have been killed in the war.

The United States, which has mediated talks alongside Qatar and Egypt, has talked up the prospects of a deal saying there is a "pretty significant opening" for both sides.

US President Joe Biden announced a pathway to a truce deal in May that he said had been proposed by Israel.

This included an initial six-week truce, Israeli withdrawal from Gaza population centres and the freeing of hostages by Palestinian fighters.

Talks subsequently stalled, but a US official said on Thursday that a new proposal from Hamas "moves the process forward and may provide the basis for closing the deal".

Senior Hamas official Osama Hamdan told AFP that new ideas from the group had been "conveyed by the mediators to the American side, which welcomed them and passed them on to the Israeli side. Now the ball is in the Israeli court."

The war has uprooted 90 percent of Gaza's population, destroyed much of its housing and other infrastructure, and left almost 500,000 people enduring "catastrophic" hunger, UN agencies say.

Netanyahu demands the release of the hostages but also insists the war will not end until Israel has destroyed Hamas's ability to make war or govern.

Cross-border fire between Israel and Lebanon's Iran-backed Hezbollah movement has occurred almost daily since the Gaza war began, but has escalated notably over the past month.

That has raised fears of a major conflagration between the staunch enemies which could draw in Iran and other powers.

Yesterday morning, sirens blared over northern Israel and the military said it had downed a "suspicious aerial target" and two "hostile aircraft" launched from Lebanon fell in open ground.

The military said earlier it had attacked "a number of Hezbollah terror targets in southern Lebanon" overnight, all near the border.

US officials, including Secretary of State Antony Blinken, have voiced hope that a ceasefire in Gaza could also lead to an easing of violence on the Israel-Lebanon border.

8 arrested after murder of Indian politician

AFP, New Delhi

Eight people were arrested in India yesterday for the murder of a politician who championed the rights of lower-caste Indians, police said.

K Armstrong, the state boss of the Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP), was hacked to death with machetes and sickles near his home in the southern city of Chennai on Friday night.

Six men travelling on motorbikes attacked Armstrong while he was "chatting with friends and supporters" near his home in the Tamil Nadu state capital, the Indian Express newspaper reported.

The men reportedly escaped before anyone could intervene.

Several of Armstrong's supporters took to the streets later in the evening to protest his assassination and demand justice.

Senior Chennai police officer Asra Garg said eight suspects were being interrogated after a "preliminary investigation".

Tamil Nadu Chief Minister MK Stalin urged police to speedily conclude the investigation.

Biden defiant, but critics are circling

AFP, Washington DC

Joe Biden's presidential reelection bid hung in the balance yesterday, after efforts to put a disastrous debate showing behind him failed to silence voices urging that he quit the White House race.

In what had been billed as a make-or-break TV interview on Friday, Biden's strategy was to flatly deny the falling poll numbers and concerns over his mental and physical fitness triggered by his dismal performance against rival Donald Trump.

He blamed a severe cold for the debate debacle and insisted it was just a "bad night" rather than evidence of increasing frailty and cognitive decline.

And the 81-year-old was adamant that he would not be pressured to end his campaign.

Murmurs of dissent within his own Democratic party have, in the case of five individual House representatives, morphed into direct calls to quit, and a number of key donors have threatened to cut off funding if Biden insists on staying the course.

Biden's campaign team is pushing ahead regardless, with an event planned in Pennsylvania today and visits to other battleground states later in the month.

For Biden and his campaign team, the strategy seems to be to ride it out.

Russia says captured village in east Ukraine

AFP, Moscow

Russia yesterday said its forces had captured a village in Ukraine's eastern Donetsk region, as Moscow continues to advance slowly across the battlefield.

The defence ministry said its troops "liberated the village of Sokil", around 30 kilometres northwest of Donetsk city, the capital of the region by the same name that Moscow claimed to have annexed in 2022.

Kyiv says the fiercest fighting across the entire front line is taking place in the Donetsk region, where Russian troops are trying to eject Ukraine's forces.

Elsewhere, Kyiv, EU officials, the United States and NATO hit out at Hungarian leader Viktor Orban, Russia's closest EU ally, on Friday after Russian President Vladimir Putin hosted him in Moscow for talks on the Ukraine conflict.

Speaking to Orban, Russian President Vladimir Putin on Friday repeated his demand for Ukraine to totally withdraw from the region, along with three others in the south and east of the country, if it wants peace.

Orban has not received any mandate from the EU Council to visit Moscow, officials have said.

Iran reformist wins presidency

in the runoff, emphasising the importance of the election.

He said the first round turnout was lower than expected, but added that it was not an act "against the system".

The ballot comes against a backdrop of heightened regional tensions over the Gaza war, a dispute with the West over Iran's nuclear programme, and domestic discontent over the state of Iran's sanctions-hit economy.

In last week's first round, Pezeshkian, who was the only reformist allowed to stand, won the largest number of votes, around 42 percent, while Jalili came second with around 39 percent, according to figures from Iran's elections authority.

Only 40 percent of Iran's 61 million eligible voters took part in the first round, the lowest turnout in any presidential election since the Islamic Revolution of 1979.

The candidacy of Pezeshkian, a relative unknown until recently, has raised the hopes of Iran's reformists after years of dominance by the conservative and ultraconservative camps.

Iran's main reformist coalition supported Pezeshkian, with endorsements by former presidents Mohammad Khatami and Hassan Rouhani, a moderate.

Pezeshkian, a 69-year-old heart surgeon, has called for "constructive relations" with Western countries to revive the nuclear deal in order to "get Iran out of its isolation".

Pezeshkian vowed to ease long-standing internet restrictions and to "fully" oppose police patrols enforcing the mandatory headscarf for women, a high-profile issue since the death in police custody in 2022 of Mahsa Amini which sparked months of nationwide unrest.

Meanwhile, Pezeshkian received congratulations for his victory from around the world, most notably from Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, Russian President Vladimir Putin, Chinese President Xi Jinping, Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, Saudi Arabian King Salman, United Arab Emirates President Sheikh Mohamed bin Zayed Al Nahyan, and the emirs of Qatar and Kuwait, according to news agencies.

"Looking forward to working closely with you to further strengthen our warm and long-standing bilateral relationship for the benefit of our peoples and the region," Modi wrote on social media platform X.

"I hope that your tenure as president will contribute to a reinforcement of constructive bilateral cooperation between our friendly peoples," Putin said in a message to Pezeshkian.

The two countries, the target of stiff Western sanctions, can "coordinate efforts to resolve international issues in a constructive manner," he said.

"I attach great importance to the development of China-Iran relations and am willing to work with the President to lead the China-Iran comprehensive strategic partnership towards deeper advancement," state news agency Xinhua reported Xi as saying.

The two countries "have a long history of friendly exchanges, and bilateral relations have maintained healthy and stable development... for over half a century," Xi said, according to Xinhua.

"Faced with complex regional and international situations, China and Iran have always supported each other, worked together and continued to consolidate strategic mutual trust," he added.

"(This) has not only brought benefits to our two countries' peoples, but has also made active contributions to promoting regional and world peace and stability," he said.

In a message published on the Syrian presidency's social media accounts, Assad said: "We are keen to ensure that our relationship remains at its peak".

He added that he wants to work with Pezeshkian "to strengthen the Syrian-Iranian strategic relationship" and that "resistance will remain the common approach we follow."

King Salman, in a message to Pezeshkian, expressed hope for the "continued development of relations which link our two countries and our two brotherly peoples," according to the official Saudi Press Agency (SPA).

He also expressed his wish for further "coordination and dialogue to strengthen regional and international peace and security," SPA said.

The president of the United Arab Emirates, Sheikh Mohamed bin Zayed Al Nahyan, wished success to Pezeshkian and said he looks "forward to working together to further strengthen ties between the UAE and Iran for the benefit of our two nations and peoples."

The emirs of Qatar and Kuwait sent cables of congratulations to Pezeshkian, official media reported.

Kuwait's Emir Sheikh Meshal al-Ahmad Al-Sabah wished "more prosperity and development" for the Islamic republic, the official KUNA news agency said.

Top Myanmar general in China for official visit

Says junta

AFP, Yangon

The Myanmar junta's second-in-command arrived in China yesterday for an official visit, the junta's information team said, as clashes with ethnic minority fighters raged in the north of the country despite a Beijing-brokered ceasefire.

Vice-senior General Soe Win arrived in Qingdao in Shandong province where he will attend a "Green Development Forum" hosted by the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation, the junta's information office said in a statement.

Ties between the junta and Beijing, a major ally and arms supplier, frayed last year over the junta's failure to crack down on online scam compounds in Myanmar's borderlands.

The compounds were staffed by citizens of China and other countries who were often trafficked and forced to work swindling their compatriots in an industry analysts say is worth billions.

Junta chief Min Aung Hlaing has not visited China since the 2021 coup that plunged the country into turmoil.

The Southeast Asian nation has seen widespread fighting since the military coup ended democratic rule.

Soe Win's visit comes following more than a week of fighting in northern Shan state between the military and an ethnic minority armed group that has shattered a ceasefire brokered by China in January.

Yesterday the Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) told AFP its fighters were "surrounding" the town of Lashio, home to a regional military command.

Lashio sits on a major highway that runs from Myanmar's second city of Mandalay to China's Yunnan province.

Sahel junta chiefs divorce from West African bloc

AFP, Niamey

The military regimes of Niger, Mali and Burkina Faso marked their divorce from the rest of West Africa Yesterday, with Niger's ruling general saying the junta-led countries have "turned their backs on" the regional bloc.

The three country's leaders are taking part in the first summit of the Alliance of Sahel States (AES), set up after pulling out of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) earlier this year.

"Our people have irrevocably turned their backs on ECOWAS," Niger's ruling General Abdourahamane Tiani told his fellow Sahel strongmen at the gathering's opening in the Nigerien capital Niamey.

Mali, Burkina Faso and Niger set up the mutual defence pact in September, leaving the wider Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) bloc in January.

A shocking revelation of data inaccuracy

BB's discovery of export data miscalculations is alarming

Bangladesh Bank has unearthed a shocking revelation about our export data—a $14 billion dollar discrepancy in the calculation. This was revealed through a regular update on the balance of payments by the central bank, creating shockwaves for economists and business leaders. Such a mind-boggling understatement of the export data has disturbing implications on the country's economic performance, specifically its growth rate, based on which policies are formulated. The question is, how could such massive miscalculations occur in the first place? Who is responsible? And how long have these been going on?

According to a report in this paper, Bangladesh Bank discovered six ways in which the data miscalculations caused the export figure to become so inflated. The anomalies include errors in customs data, miscalculations of the value of fabrics, samples for buyers being included as final products with export value, double-counting of sales by EPZ-based firms, not adjusting the difference between the LC (Letter of Credit) value and actual export proceeds, and not adjusting losses from stock-lot sales, discounts and commissions. Such mistakes in the dataset are deeply worrying, to say the least.

The National Board of Revenue (NBR) and Export Promotion Bureau (EPB) should be held accountable for the mistakes. We expect the government to conduct a thorough investigation into why the relevant officials made these errors. Is it because of incompetence? Or, were the miscalculations deliberate? Either way, they must face the consequences of mishandling such important data. We also must ask: how far back do these errors go? The current mismatch is for the July-April period of the 2023-2024 fiscal year, and the correction reveals that exports have fallen by 6.8 percent instead of the stated growth of 3.93 percent. How far back should we go to recalculate the data for previous years' performance? A BB official has said there is nothing wrong with past data. Should we take their optimism at face value?

While the correction will lead to a revaluation of the growth rate, an economist has said it would be down by 1 percent. That said, that Bangladesh Bank has discovered the anomalies through its own recalculations is a positive move. We appreciate the effort to set the records straight, and hope that such diligence and transparency will be applied to other areas of data calculation. Policies are based on the official data available, and can only work if the numbers are correct. We, therefore, expect the government to revisit all the data generated by its bodies in various areas, no matter how tedious the task is. Because, ultimately, correct and regularly updated data is vital not only for the government to make appropriate policies but also for independent experts and citizens to understand the nation's economic realities.

Is it a tree fair, or a commercial one?

Attitude of state officials questions our environmental commitments

Officially, the government remains committed to preserving our natural resources including forests, rivers, and hills. However, the corruption, mismanagement, and questionable policymaking that routinely stymie its efforts—thereby contributing to further environmental degradation—can be understood from a recent example. It involves, as per a report, the organisation of a so-called "tree fair" in Gosairhat, Shariatpur. Despite its name, the 15-day event features a variety of vendors selling snacks, cosmetics, toys, and rides, with only one stall, out of the 39, selling tree saplings. Even though the fair is being organised under the banner of the Gosairhat forest department and upazila administration, the former disclaimed any involvement, while the latter said it is assisting the department, highlighting a lack of coordination and seriousness among them.

One may write this off as trivial but it is not. It symbolises the broader trend of systemic neglect and mismanagement that has long jeopardised our environmental commitments. Much like the ill-distribution of stalls turning the fair into a commercial one, the perfunctory attitude and profit-first mentality of responsible government departments have severely affected various decisions and projects related to our environmental causes. A report published on the same day takes a look into some of those projects where—far from preserving our forests, hills, and rivers—officials prioritised their commercialisation by permitting or engaging in environmental degradation themselves.

A notable example is the planned safari park at the Lathitila reserved forest in Moulvibazar. Despite laws prohibiting construction and even unauthorised entry into protected forests, the forest department is reportedly cutting trees and hills there to build the park, betraying its misplaced priorities. Similarly, various government institutions have been implicated in the destruction of wetlands, forests, and hills. As per a study by the River and Delta Research Centre (RDRC), between March 2023 and April 2024, 25 government institutions cut down upwards of 11 lakh trees across the country—over seven lakhs of them within protected forests. Even more shockingly, the forest department alone accounted for over 417,000 of all felled trees. Such large-scale deforestation in the name of development not only degrades the environment but also sets a precedent for private entities to follow suit.

One doesn't need to be reminded of the devastating effects of such activities, public or private. People are paying the price even as we write this. It is, therefore, imperative that the government reassesses its priorities and ensures that state officials, who are at the centre of any drive to uphold its environmental commitments, are properly attuned to them. The authorities also must ensure strict compliance with all environmental laws to prevent the depletion and degradation of natural resources.

Freedom fighters' quota goes against the 1971 spirit is a journalist at The Daily Star.

Tanim Ahmed

TANIM AHMED

Any argument about the freedom fighters' quota, especially one that opposes it in its current form, has turned so contentious that the discussion tends to revolve around the advocate more than whatever merit the argument itself might have. It would then, perhaps, be appropriate to first establish that I have skin in the game, that this is not merely an exercise in theory. It affects me directly.

Both my parents were freedom fighters. My father was an army doctor and among the founders of Bangladesh Hospital in Tripura under Sector 2. My mother was a nurse at that hospital. My uncle was among the first batch of officers to be inducted into the Bangladesh army. He was among the 61 officers of the First War Course (also called the Murti Commission) during the 1971 Liberation War. Both my father and my uncle were awarded the Bir Protik gallantry award.

They chose to join the war knowing full well they may not return at all. They had close encounters with danger and death. Many of their comrades fell in battle. Many were caught and never returned. But that is the nature of wars. Some return home to glory, some don't. But this was a war for the liberation of a nation, which meant that unless they were victorious, they would go down as seditious rebels and their families would live in ignominy forever. Merely surviving the war was not going to be enough. They had to win it, and win it they did. It is only fitting that we honour the freedom fighters in whatever way we can. Theirs is a debt that we can never repay. Thus, instituting a special quota for freedom fighters, who had risked their life and limb for the country, would be quite justified in an independent Bangladesh.

Furthermore, considering the disparities in Bangladesh, there should be special quotas not just in government service, but also in universities, for certain groups that remain marginalised and disadvantaged—for instance, women, ethnic minorities, people from remote areas, people with disabilities and differences. There should be conditions too—specifying how many children of the same family can avail it or that it will only apply to first generation university aspirants for they have not had the same opportunities as those whose parents did go to university. People from remote districts like Panchagarh or Khagrachhari, those from ethnic minorities, those with differences like transgender people, and women too, should, by all means, be prioritised.

However, extending the special quota of freedom fighters as a privilege to their children, and their grandchildren, would be unfair to deserving candidates. It might have been acceptable if 30 percent quotas were reserved for a group of people who constitute less than one percent of the population if it were the freedom fighters themselves. But we, the children of freedom fighters, or our children, had nothing to do with their choices or their sacrifices and we do not deserve any of the credit due to our parents. Surely, many freedom fighters' families are in distress and have suffered but so have millions of others. Now, more than 50 years after the war, to continue that privilege for the grandchildren of freedom fighters is almost like installing a regime of hereditary entitlement. Freedom fighters' families do not constitute a disadvantaged or marginalised class. Those who still languish in poverty do so because the state has failed them, just as it has failed millions of others. There should be programmes to lift them up, as there are social safety net and other assistance programmes that the government runs. One might point out that those are largely insufficient and ineffective in improving lives meaningfully. After all, cash assistance of a few thousand takas is not going to change lives in this day and age. But that is all the more reason to reinvigorate efforts to make these programmes better so that every citizen of Bangladesh has enough opportunities to live a better life. It does not call for a special provision for a specific group of people.

Yet, there are platforms of freedom fighters' children that claim to "fight" for this quota saying that abolishing it would be an insult to the spirit of the Liberation War, and would belittle the contribution of freedom fighters. It would not. It is embarrassing, to say the least. It shames me that freedom fighters' children would be so callous to their peers and fellow citizens as to not see the injustice in what they advocate. And to brand those demanding annulment of the freedom fighters' quota as collaborators or traitors is a cheap way of stigmatising the people demanding a fair system.

Students have blocked Shahbagh intersection for much of last week in protest of the quota system.

Surely, the principle of any special provisions of the government should be that the poorest and most marginalised benefit from them. These provisions should seek to help those in most need of assistance to lift themselves out of the vicious cycle of poverty and deprivation. These should strive towards a more just and equal society, and for that to happen we need capable officials running the government. The very spirit of the Liberation War was in protest of the unjust, unequal system of erstwhile Pakistan. The freedom fighters' quota that seeks to create a privileged section of people hereditarily is exactly what they had fought against. I don't want it. Not for me. And certainly not for my children.

Mission to China

Is the PM ready to take a bold position on RCEP?

Farid Erkizia Bakht
is a political analyst.

FARID ERKIZIA BAKHT

Bangladesh is not a member of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO). Nor is it a member of BRICS+. It is not ensconced within ASEAN either. By extension, Dhaka feels it can remain outside the planet's largest trading area, Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP). I have lost count of the times I mentioned RCEP in conversations in Dhaka, only to be met with a blank stare. The RCEP does not elicit curiosity.

The fault lies with the strategic community in Dhaka. They have failed (perhaps even wilfully) to argue for a coherent strategy towards China and Southeast Asia. The result of apathy and opaque concepts is that Bangladesh has "Brexited" itself away from the new core of the world economy on our doorstep. Metaphorically, it has plumped for the slow train, drifting around in South Asia, rather than hitch a ride on the high-speed trains of China, Japan, Korea and ASEAN. We could have both. Geography and history demand it.

Are we aiming low, missing RCEP?

So, what can we hope for from the PM's flight to Beijing? I am worried that no one seems to be worried.

Over two days on July 9 and 10, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina is expected to have intense talks with Prime Minister Li Qiang, and a broader discussion about a deeper relationship with President Xi Jinping. Are her advisors failing to grasp what is at stake and not feeding talking points for a much more ambitious undertaking?

The current batch of "goodies" look like a string of projects at best, where the parts outweigh the sum. At worst, to cynics, it looks like a shopping trip of cash and projects. Even working on a free trade area with China is insufficient.

Fundamentally, we need to move on from merely pleading for more infrastructure, funded by foreign loans but not by themselves earning foreign currency. The vulnerable economy is crying out for foreign (Chinese) investment into export-producing industrial platforms, to earn the dollars and Yuan to pay back ever higher foreign debt, which is mostly non-Chinese. Instead of acting as a supplicant for aid, we should be negotiating terms of a partnership where both China and Bangladesh gain something (a win-win, as Chinese diplomats like to say).

Contrast this with the trip by the Sri Lankan president in mid-2023 and how, before and after his visit to Beijing, he made joining RCEP the centrepiece of a new strategy towards the East and Southeast Asia. Colombo understands that RCEP offers a priceless opportunity to leapfrog the most industrialised state in India, neighbouring Tamil Nadu, by entering the Chinese-led trading area.

New nodes of supply chains will appear on that island, if admitted. In other words, selected sections of manufacturing processes will decamp from, say, China or Malaysia, and seek low-cost destinations within the trade area. The latter point is important because RCEP is not merely about lowering tariffs but adhering to new technical standards and industrial practices. Diversification, better quality, and higher technology are the prizes.

The oft-stated visions of a Digital Bangladesh and its offspring, Smart Bangladesh, require plugging into the world of Huawei, Xinyi Solar and BYD. That undertaking can quite easily function in parallel to Indian connectivity links through Bangladeshi territory (another win-win).

From strategic ambiguity to strategic clarity

Too often, Dhaka has followed the Indian posture of strategic ambiguity. Others might consider this ever-so-clever "balancing" as strategic dithering, founded on short-term opportunities, laced within an ambience of fear of offending any or all of the Big Three (India, US, and China, in that order).

The PM, with her political instincts, understands the downsides of committing too much to Delhi's demands. Wiser heads know that Delhi has its own fears and interests. They recognise that cooperation, not confrontation, is the sine qua non of Delhi-Dhaka ties. Yet, this cannot be to the detriment of Bangladeshi economic imperatives. Dhaka has given much more than would have been possible two decades ago—ending separatist bases for Northeast Indian guerillas forces, allowing transport corridors from Kolkata through Bangladesh to Tripura and Assam, and deferring to Indian pressure to "go slow" on Chinese projects. The last point is now no longer acceptable to the sovereign and economic interests of Bangladesh, nor its restive population.

Delhi has been heavily criticised within opposition quarters in Bangladesh for its support to the Awami League during the one-sided elections in January. Now, Delhi has nowhere else to go. It can hardly try to not back the Awami League since the alternative forces are viscerally against Delhi. Moreover, with Modi electorally weakened, he has other agendas to attend to.

Were Dhaka to take bold steps in its approach to Beijing and the wider region, Delhi would be as passive as Washington was in January.

Acting firmly but fairly by retaining commitments to India alongside pursuing a new, enhanced economic partnership with China would extinguish some domestic fires. This reminds me of the PM's rather strange journey to the Munich Security Conference a few months ago. The PM acquiesced with her foreign policy wonks and Western personages to hobnob with Western military officials, primarily focused with war in Eastern Europe and forthcoming adventures on the South China Sea. Not only did Sheikh Hasina skilfully avoid antagonising Russia as well as her Western hosts by stating the position of neutrality (as per the Global South position), but she also made some brave remarks, strongly condemning the slaughter in Gaza.

The mission to Beijing offers her another opportunity to act on her instincts. She can make her move, telling her Chinese hosts that Bangladesh wants an early entry into RCEP. Missing this boat now will mean facing the music soon enough.

UK ELECTION

Labour's challenge after landslide win

Dr Selim Jahan

SELIM JAHAN

The British election is now over, and the results are in. According to latest reports, the Labour Party has won a landslide victory with 412 seats in the 650-seat House of Commons. The Tories have lost 251 seats, and they are now left with 121 members in the new parliament. But beyond the numbers, there are some trends worth taking into account.

The voter turnout was about 60 percent, the lowest in 20 years. The apathy among the voters about the political process is clear. The theme of "change" of the Labour Party has resonated with the voters, who seemed to be sick and fed up with the Tories and their policies. Smaller parties like the Green Party or Reform UK have remained, as usual, marginal. The expectations among people from the Labour government will be high and if not delivered, the frustration may set in early. Finally, what can be done will depend not only on domestic dynamics, but also on international events. As the Labour government sets to tasks, there are a few formidable challenges they will have to tackle.

To start off, apart from socio-economic divisions, the British society has become highly divisive along ethnic, religious, regional, immigrant, and non-immigrant lines. Britishness, in terms of value and tradition, has decayed a lot. If the new government wants to succeed, it has to restore the social cohesion among various groups. Diversity, if managed well, can be a strength. But mismanaged, it can lead to divisions.

Despite having always boasted about being a welfare state, Britain's social services are decaying. The National Health Services (NHS) is a prime example. There is a dearth of doctors and nurses, hospital beds have become a scarce commodity, patients have been on the waiting list for necessary surgery, and there are shortfalls in resources. But the problem is not only in terms of resource shortage, but also of the abuse of the system. Abuses are prominent in all kinds of social assistance systems. However, privatisation of the social services is not the solution. Rather, the British social service system requires fundamental structural reforms.

There is no doubt that the inflation rate has come down significantly, but that has not solved the economic challenges that common people face in their day-to-day life. Joblessness is a problem, energy prices are still high, the housing market is not friendly to common people. At the macro-level, economic growth is sluggish and with Brexit, Britain has become isolated and deprived of the benefits and the privileges of the European Common Market.

Beyond all of this, immigration remains a hotly debated issue in the British society. It is now recognised that it is not always illegal immigration which is the problem; it is also legal immigration. Through the loopholes in immigration laws and the lenient policies of the British government, it is not only people needed by society who have entered the country, but also people who are dependent on the social assistance system, which has put a heavy burden on it. But the more important problem is the perception that this has opened a door to fundamentalism and terrorism.

The effectiveness and the success of the Labour government will depend, to a large extent, on the international scenario. One of the defining issues in this regard will be the American presidential election later this year. If Donald Trump becomes the US President in November, the US-UK relationship under a Labour government cannot be expected to be warm and cordial and the environment may be tense. In addition, war in Ukraine and the Palestine crisis would have a lingering impact on the British economy. The past UK government had doled out huge amounts of resources to Ukraine, which has put pressure on the British exchequer. On the Palestine issue, the position of the Labour Party is rather hazy and unclear. The Labour government has to bring clarity to it.

Some of the election results indicate certain challenges as well. For example, the Scottish Nationalist Party (SNP) has got only nine seats in the new parliament, down 38 seats from the last parliament. It raises question on the standing of the Scottish independence. Have the Scottish voters lost appetite for this issue? Or do they think that the British parliament is not the appropriate platform for the concerns of Scotland? Similarly, Liberal Democrats have achieved the best results in 100 years, and have gained 60 new seats to become the third largest party in the Parliament. It is well-known that this party is strongly supported by the younger generation. Even though the Labour Party has absolute majority in the parliament, one challenge the party will have is how it interacts with Liberal Democrats in the broader policy contexts. People have not forgotten as to how in the coalition of Labour and the Liberal Democrats, the latter was marginalised by Labour.

In the coming days, the British people will observe with high expectations how the new government tackles all these challenges and steers the country forward. The honeymoon period will not be long. The theme of "change" is a healer, but if change is not delivered, it could be a "killer" too.

How to reduce dengue and related out-of-pocket costs

Despite efforts by the two Dhaka city corporations to control dengue over the past few years, the number of cases and deaths has risen significantly. In 2019, there were 101,354 cases and 179 deaths. By 2023, these numbers had surged to 321,179 cases and 1,705 deaths. This increase indicates that the measures taken have been inadequate, and more needs to be done to address the issue effectively.

One study estimates that globally about 96 million dengue cases are clinically manifested per year, mostly found in urban and semi-urban areas in tropical and subtropical climates. Also, the burden of dengue infections has dramatically increased over the past decades, with the number of symptomatic dengue infection reports doubling every 10 years between 1990 and 2013.

Bangladesh is situated in the tropical and subtropical regions, and like other Southeast Asian countries, it has become a suitable habitat for the dengue vector and has experienced increased transmission in recent years. The disease is records. A large number of dengue cases are treated at the community level. Therefore, the actual number of cases and deaths is still unknown and even under-reported in Bangladesh. Experts estimate that about 2.4 million people suffers dengue infections annually, with most cases belonging to major cities like Dhaka and Chattogram.

Dhaka is often recognised as one of the poorest megacities, grappling with many problems such as pollution, horrendous traffic jams, unregulated construction work, brick kilns, and vehicles running on fuel containing higher levels of sulfur and other detrimental substances that pose grave threats to public health. Further, migration to urban megacities may impact individuals' hygiene, working, and living conditions, directly affecting city dwellers' health status. Thus, dengue infection is an emerging public health concern in urban Dhaka, and the cost of dengue infection is higher in metropolitan Dhaka than in other parts of the country due to livelihood costs.

A growing body of literature resources from their regular income (62.3 percent), borrow from others (47.7 percent), use savings (41.7 percent), rely on family donations (18.9 percent), and even sell permanent assets (1 percent).

There is an urgent need for an effective national prevention strategy to achieve considerable cost savings and reduce morbidity from dengue. Policymakers should consider the OOP cost of dengue infections, particularly among low-income people, while balancing the benefits of introducing potentially effective dengue preventive programmes in dengue hotspots like urban Dhaka.

Different preventive measures such as water and waste management strategies and community education campaigns focusing on these risk factors should be taken to tackle dengue infections in metropolitan cities including Dhaka. The measures at household levels may include eliminating mosquito breeding grounds, effective solid waste disposal, using mosquito coils, aerosols, mosquito nets, cleaning larval habitats weekly (overhead tanks, groundwater storage tanks, air coolers, refrigerators, flower vases, earthen jars, cement tanks, plastic drums), applying insecticides, and using window screens, coils, and vapourisers. A joint effort involving public, private, and non-governmental organisations is necessary to tackle the burden of dengue.

expected to expand its geographical range due to favourable conditions provided by rapidly growing high-density urban areas along with socio-economic changes, increased worldwide travel and trade, and climate change. A risk factor study on dengue infections in urban Dhaka found that nearly 82 percent of identified immature mosquitoes were Aedes aegypti, responsible for dengue. Dengue fever is painful and affects people of all ages, including infants, young children, and adults and data indicates that Dhaka city is at most risk and requires urgent preventive intervention measures.

Dengue cases were highly prevalent in Dhaka division in 2023 and more than half of the total cases and most dengue-related deaths occurred in Dhaka city alone, indicating a health hazard for city dwellers. It should be noted that these numbers come from hospital shows that dengue imposes an enormous socio-economic burden on households, healthcare systems, and government health expenditures in endemic countries, particularly during outbreaks. A recent BIDS study titled, "Economic Burden of Dengue in Urban Bangladesh: A Societal Perspective," published in 2023 in the PLoS Neglected Tropical Diseases, provides a detailed analysis of this economic burden. The average out-of-pocket (OOP) cost of dengue was about $316.51, representing 56 percent of total monthly household income. For the poorest quintile, this cost exceeded 139 percent of their total household income, while the wealthiest quintile spent only 36 percent of their household income, highlighting a severe financial disparity among city dwellers. To mitigate the OOP cost of dengue, urban dwellers need to exhaust

Another potential short-term solution is introducing a vaccine against the dengue virus in dengue hotspots. Vaccines are often considered the "best-buy" as they reduce disease incidence and case fatalities, saves OOP expenditure, avoids productivity losses, mitigates excessive pressure on the health system, and ensures equity. While the dengue vaccination programme is yet to be conducted in Bangladesh, such a preventive programme has proven cost-effective in many countries like Indonesia, Brazil, and Thailand. As dengue is emerging in Bangladesh, various preventive strategies should be considered year-round and not just at the beginning of the monsoon season to halt dengue infections and improve health outcomes.

Dengue linked to heightened risk of depression

Research from Taiwan suggests that dengue fever may increase the risk of depression in both the short and long term. Hsin-I Shih and colleagues from the National Cheng Kung University and National Health Research Institutes analysed the medical records of nearly 50,000 people who had dengue fever and compared them with 226,670 people who did not have the disease. Their findings were published in the journal PLOS Neglected Tropical Diseases.

Dengue fever is caused by a mosquito-borne virus and can range from mild to severe, with some people experiencing long-term health effects. While previous research has linked dengue fever with psychiatric disorders like depression and anxiety, few studies have looked at the long-term risks.

To fill this gap, Shih and colleagues studied medical records from 2002 to 2015, focusing on whether dengue patients developed anxiety, depression, or sleep disorders after infection. They found that dengue patients were more likely to develop depression at all time points studied: less than three months, three to 12 months, and more than 12 months after infection. Sleep disorders were more common within three to 12 months post-infection, but there was no increased risk of anxiety overall.

For patients whose dengue was severe enough to require hospitalisation, there was a higher risk of anxiety within the first three months and sleep disorders within the first year. This group also had a higher risk of depression across all time frames.

These findings suggest a link between dengue fever and depression. However, more research is needed to understand whether dengue directly causes depression or if other factors are involved. The authors emphasise the importance of studying the mental health impacts of dengue infection further.

Over 3 million annual deaths due to alcohol and drug use, the majority among men

A new report from the World Health Organisation (WHO) underscores the profound impact of alcohol and drug consumption worldwide. In 2019, alcohol alone contributed to 2.6 million deaths annually, representing 4.7% of all deaths, with an additional 0.6 million deaths attributed to psychoactive drug use. Notably, the majority of these deaths—2 million from alcohol and 0.4 million from drugs—affected men.

WHO's Global Status Report on Alcohol and Health highlights that an estimated 400 million people globally live with alcohol use disorders, including 209 million with alcohol dependence. These disorders significantly increase the risk of chronic diseases and mental health conditions and contribute to preventable deaths and societal burdens.

Dr Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, WHO Director-General, emphasises the urgent need for comprehensive actions to mitigate these impacts and ensure accessible treatment for substance use disorders. The report calls for global commitment to achieve Sustainable Development Goal (SDG) target 3.5 by 2030, focusing on reducing substance use and improving treatment accessibility.

Despite a slight decline in alcohol-related death rates since 2010, the overall number remains alarmingly high, particularly in the WHO European and African Regions. The report identifies alcohol's role in various diseases, with 1.6 million deaths linked to noncommunicable diseases, 724,000 to injuries, and 284,000 to communicable diseases like HIV and tuberculosis.

Global per capita alcohol consumption decreased marginally, from 5.7 litres in 2010 to 5.5 litres in 2019. However, heavy episodic drinking—defined as consuming at least 60 g of pure alcohol on one or more occasions—remains prevalent, particularly among men, contributing to associated health risks and disabilities.

The report also highlights disparities in treatment accessibility, with significant gaps in coverage despite effective treatment options. Only a fraction of those in need receive treatment services, ranging from less than 1% to 35% across reporting countries. Stigma, discrimination, and misconceptions about treatment efficacy further hinder access to and prioritisation of substance use disorders in health agendas.

To address these challenges, WHO calls for intensified efforts across eight strategic areas, including advocacy campaigns, strengthening prevention and treatment capacities, and enhancing training for health professionals. The implementation of the Global Alcohol Action Plan 2022–2030, focusing on the SAFER package, is emphasised alongside increased resource mobilisation and innovative funding mechanisms.

In conclusion, the WHO report underscores the global health and social impact of alcohol and drug use, advocating for coordinated international actions to reduce substance use and improve treatment accessibility. By prioritising these efforts, governments and partners can work towards mitigating the devastating consequences of substance use disorders and achieving global health goals by 2030.

HAVE A NICE DAY

Knowing more about 'moralogy'

DR RUBAIUL MURSHED

Since the millennium, global unrest has surged, heightening the risk of social upheaval. Today, corruption remains a critical issue. While good governance and well-functioning institutions are vital in combating corruption, they are insufficient without a moral upliftment among the populace. Achieving a sustainable, corruption-free society hinges on fostering moral values. Moreover, as scholars delve into measuring happiness, they find that kindness—a key pillar of morality—significantly impacts not only individual happiness but also broader societal well-being.

Mental health promotion and wellness activities are gaining traction today, influenced by science and culture, which shape our "social ethos," including morality and lifestyle. Sadly, our education system often neglects moral education, leaving us uninformed about the importance of aiding the hugely impoverished community.

Studies show that unethical behaviour diminishes happiness, highlighting that moral education and health are essential social assets. Schools play a crucial role in nurturing young minds and enhancing their mental well-being. Introducing a science-based approach to morality could significantly boost our internal health and help us live in harmony with nature.

Japan's emphasis on moral education has gained recognition, particularly through the concept of "moralogy," developed by Japanese philosopher Dr Hiroike Chikuro. Founder of Reitaku University and the Moralogy Institute. He aimed to create a method for perfecting individual character by studying and practicing both traditional and contemporary moral values. His work underscores the impact of moral culture on mental health, especially among youth. Kindivists are going to honour the 100th anniversary of 'Moralogy' this year.

By integrating moral values at schools and religious centres, we can transform our society, fostering virtues such as kindness, forgiveness, and generosity.

RETHINKING OBESITY

A new approach to diagnosis and treatment

STAR HEALTH DESK

A groundbreaking framework for diagnosing and managing obesity in adults, launched by the European Association for the Study of Obesity (EASO) and published in Nature Medicine, challenges the traditional reliance on the Body Mass Index (BMI) alone. The framework aims to modernise obesity care by integrating the latest scientific insights, including advancements in medications targeting obesity.

Obesity is widely recognised as a complex, chronic condition characterised by abnormal or excessive accumulation of body fat, linked to various health risks. Despite this understanding, many current diagnostic practices primarily use BMI cut-off values, which may overlook individuals who would benefit from treatment due to factors like adipose tissue distribution and function.

The EASO Steering Group, composed of leading experts in the field, emphasises the need for a more nuanced approach. They highlight that BMI alone is inadequate as a diagnostic tool, advocating instead for considering body fat distribution, particularly abdominal fat, which significantly impacts health outcomes. Even individuals with a BMI below the conventional obesity threshold (BMI of 30) may experience health complications due to abdominal fat accumulation.

The new framework broadens the definition of obesity to include individuals with lower BMIs (≥25–30 kg/m²) but elevated abdominal fat and associated medical, functional, or psychological impairments. This shift aims to prevent undertreatment of individuals who may not meet traditional BMI criteria but still face significant health risks.

Treatment recommendations outlined in the framework align with current guidelines, focusing on behavioural modifications such as nutrition therapy, physical activity, stress management, and improved sleep patterns as foundational strategies. Additionally, psychological therapy, obesity medications, and metabolic or bariatric procedures are recommended options, tailored to individual needs and preferences.

However, the committee notes a gap in current clinical guidelines, which often exclude individuals with lower BMIs from accessing medications or procedures intended for obesity management. They propose revising inclusion criteria for clinical trials to better reflect the diverse clinical presentations of obesity, advocating for the consideration of waist-to-height ratio and the presence of associated health complications, regardless of BMI.

In particular, the framework suggests that obesity medications should be considered for individuals with a BMI of 25 kg/m² or higher, coupled with an elevated waist-to-height ratio and associated impairments. This recommendation serves as a call to pharmaceutical companies and regulatory bodies to adopt more inclusive criteria in future research on obesity medications.

Ultimately, the goal of this new approach is to align obesity management with practices for other chronic diseases, focusing on long-term health outcomes rather than short-term weight reduction. It underscores the importance of personalised treatment plans that consider disease severity, therapeutic options, potential risks, patient preferences, and barriers to treatment.

In conclusion, the framework represents a significant step towards a comprehensive, lifelong approach to managing obesity, aiming to improve overall health and quality of life for individuals affected by this complex condition.

Does coffee affect blood pressure?

Caffeine can temporarily raise blood pressure (BP), but the long-term effects of regular coffee drinking are less clear. In a study from Italy, published in the Journal of Hypertension, researchers looked at BP in 1,400 participants based on their daily coffee consumption: none, moderate (1-2 cups), or heavy (3 or more cups). They measured BP in the office, at home, and with a 24-hour monitor at the start of the study and after 10 years. Most participants kept the same coffee habits throughout the study.

The three groups had some differences at the beginning: heavy coffee drinkers were generally younger, more likely to smoke, and less likely to be on blood pressure medications. After adjusting for these differences, the only notable finding was that heavy coffee drinkers had a slightly lower average office systolic BP compared to moderate and non-drinkers, both at the beginning and after 10 years. At either time point, there were no differences in BP readings taken at home or with the 24-hour monitor between the groups. Additionally, there were no differences in BP variability over 24 hours or in the development of new hypertension among the groups.

These results suggest that regular coffee consumption does not lead to clinically meaningful differences in BP or the incidence of hypertension. Patients can be reassured that a daily coffee habit is not likely to affect their BP.

The impact of heatwaves on children

RABEYA FERDOUS

A heatwave is an extended period of hot weather relative to the expected conditions of the area at that time of year, which may be accompanied by high humidity. Children face more vulnerable situations at this time. A few days ago we faced a heatwave. The Bangladesh government took different steps to overcome this situation. That time, the government closed the school and created different types of awareness among people.

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) said about 460 million children are exposed to extreme heat in South Asia, or 76 percent of children, compared to a third of children globally. The UN warns children in Afghanistan, Bangladesh, India, the Maldives, and Pakistan are at "extremely high risk" of the impacts of climate change, defining extreme high temperatures as 83 or more days in a year over 35 degrees Celsius (95 degrees Fahrenheit). Children cannot adapt as quickly to temperature changes and are not able to remove excess heat from their bodies.

According to UNICEF, 1 in 3 children in Bangladesh, or about 20 million children, are affected by climate change every day. Children are also exposed to adverse weather conditions such as heat waves, floods, river erosion, sea level rise, and other environmental shocks caused by climate change.

Heat waves have a bad impact on anyone's health, especially newborns, infants, young children, and adult children's health. Children cannot share their feelings with others like adults, and that's why they feel irritated over time.

A heat wave is simply a period of unusually hot weather that typically lasts two or more days. The temperatures have to be outside the historical averages for a given area.

According to UNICEF's 2021 Children's Climate Risk Index (CCRI), children in Bangladesh are at extremely high risk of the impact of climate change.

Symptoms of a heatwave include:
- Heavy sweating
- Weakness
- Increased thirst
- Dizziness or fainting
- Muscle cramps
- Nausea or vomiting
- Irritability
- Headache

What steps should be taken?

- When a child faces heatstroke, you need to take the child to a cool place, give fluid with salt, and take out heavy clothing. Prevention is most necessary to avoid this situation.
- Stay hydrated: Give the child plenty of water, juice, or fruits.
- Block direct sunlight: Use curtains to reduce direct sunlight in your home.
- Stay covered: When children go outside, put on a light-colored dress; use sunglasses, a cap, a fanand an umbrella. breastfeeding babies more. Lactating mothers should drink plenty of water.
- Remain indoors: During 12:00 p.m.–4:00 p.m., stay inside the home.
- Indoor games like carrum and ludu are more suitable than outdoor games like football or cricket.

What steps should not be taken?

- Avoid vigorous activities in the sun.
- Avoid a journey in a local, crowded vehicle.
- Avoid tea, coffee, high-sugar drinks, and fizzy drinks.
- Avoid cooking between 2:00 p.m. and 4:00 p.m. It may increase the temperature at home. Don't walk barefoot.
- Avoid excessive energy loss.
- Avoid long-distance travel with the child.

Teary-eyed Nagelsmann lauds returned belief

AFP, Herzogenaurach

An emotional Germany manager Julian Nagelsmann said Saturday the team's "belief in ourselves has returned" despite a 2-1 extra-time elimination by Spain in the Euro 2024 quarter-finals.

Germany pushed Spain all the way in Stuttgart on Friday, coming from a goal down to send the game into extra time when Florian Wirtz scored an 89th-minute equaliser.

The host nation had a penalty claim denied late before conceding a Mikel Merino goal in the 119th minute.

The tearful coach praised the team after almost a decade of failures at major tournaments and said the performances, built on passionate home support, had bridged gaps between fans and the national team.

"The faith has grown, (the fans) believe in us again," Nagelsmann told reporters at Germany's base camp in the Bavarian village of Herzogenaurach.

"A few months ago it would have been unthinkable for us to come back from a goal down.

"You can tell I'm fighting back tears because it was very emotional. I've always said we need the fans behind us across the country.

"From March onwards, it was clear that the fans felt something. When we see the videos of fans, it's emotional. We would have liked to have given the supporters even more."

Nagelsmann took over in September after Hansi Flick became the first coach in Germany history to be sacked.

After two successive World Cup group stage eliminations and a last 16 loss to England at the Euros in 2021, Germany won just three of 11 games in 2023, giving rise to fears of a disastrous showing on home soil.

The 36-year-old coach however steadied the ship, bringing in a host of new players and dropping several big names from the squad.

Friday's loss was Germany's first defeat in 2024 after an eight-game run which included wins over France, the Netherlands and Denmark.

Asked if he had successfully reset the nation's hopes, Nagelsmann said: "I think we all saw that the hard drive has been cleaned.

"I don't know if it has definitely been completely erased, but it definitely has been cleaned.

"We are much more solid and our belief in ourselves has grown."

A tournament too far for Ronaldo!

NABID YEASIN

Portugal will remember the Euro 2024 as another golden opportunity squandered to get silverware with arguably one of the most talented bunch of footballers, but for their captain, Cristiano Ronaldo, the tournament will remain as a case of whether the 39-year-old forward has stretched his international career one tournament too long.

Portugal -- boasting an enviable midfield of Bruno Fernandes, Bernardo Silva, Vitinha, and Joao Palinha -- exited Euro 2024 in a lacklustre way, playing out a largely dull 120 minutes in the quarterfinal in Hamburg on Friday night against France, only to lose 5-3 on penalties.

Ronaldo did step up and convert the first spot-kick during the shootout, but the five-time Ballon d'Or winner was largely amiss throughout the game -- like he had been the entire tournament.

Ronaldo skying a Francisco Conceicao cut-back from close range in extra-time -- Portugal's best chance from open play on the night -- or his failure in sprinting past France's William Saliba in the right flank showed that he is neither a threatening presence inside the box nor is he the one to pose threats with his blistering pace like he once used to.

In fact, if anything, Ronaldo looked like he was the one holding a talented Portugal side back -- hogging the free-kicks despite his abysmal record of converting only once from 61 free-kicks in major tournaments -- and shunting the likes of far more pacy Diogo Jota and Goncalo Ramos in the sidelines.

Did Ronaldo push it one tournament too far this time? If this question was a point to ponder at the beginning of the tournament for which Portugal qualified as the only unbeaten side with Ronaldo top-scoring for his side with 10 in the qualifiers, the Al-Nassr forward has only validated those doubts with his underwhelming performances in Germany.

The former Real Madrid forward is still the record goalscorer in Euros, with 14 goals in 30 matches, but he failed to become the oldest player to score in the tournament. Apart from scoring in shootouts, he has failed to net a single goal in five matches.

It seemed like Ronaldo was about to pip his former Real Madrid teammate Luka Modric, whose goal against Italy in the group stage this tournament saw him become the oldest goalscorer in the history of the Euros at 38 years and 294 days, to the milestone when he stepped up to take a penalty in extra time in their Round of 16 game against Slovenia.

However, Jan Oblak denied Ronaldo with a brilliant save, reducing the mighty footballing figure into tears -- a sight for which the legions of fans of the ever-so-proud Ronaldo and even the entire world were not ready.

While Ronaldo somewhat redeemed himself when he converted the first penalty from shootout in the Slovenia game before Diogo Costa heroics -- the Portuguese goalkeeper thwarted three successive penalties -- propelled Portugal to the quarters, that moment of weakness might just have shown that even Ronaldo started doubting himself.

If Ronaldo had made himself known for anything in his illustrious career spanning over two decades is that he always backs himself to get back up and shut the critics with goals and more. But that moment of him breaking down in tears and later apologising to fans for his mistake showed the world a different Ronaldo, who perhaps knows that age has eventually caught up to him but is yet not fully ready to accept the fact.

Ronaldo mentioned that this was his last dance in the Euros, but has not said anything about drawing curtains on his international career yet. "It's too soon and raw after the match to talk about that and there have been no individual decisions made," Portugal coach Roberto Martinez, who has been his biggest supporter in this tumultuous time, said when asked if it was Ronaldo's last game in a Portugal jersey.

Ronaldo's dedication and fitness will most likely allow him to go on for at least a few more years outside of Europe, a route that he had already chosen as he now plies his trade for Saudi Pro League team Al-Nassr. But maybe the time has come for the all-time top international goalscorer to realise that he is only tarnishing the grand reputation that holds him alongside the best footballers in history by overstaying his welcome at the international level.

Raducanu rediscovers Wimbledon 'fun' factor

AFP, London

Emma Raducanu is finally all smiles again at Wimbledon after the former US Open champion rediscovered the fun factor that made her the golden girl of British tennis before a stunning fall from grace.

Raducanu routed ninth seed Maria Sakkari 6-2, 6-3 in the Wimbledon third round on Friday to reach the last 16 at a Grand slam for the first time in three years.

The 21-year-old admitted she is in love with tennis again after struggling to deal with the aftermath of her incredible rise to fame.

She went from an unknown schoolgirl to the talk of tennis in two transformative weeks in New York in 2021.

Aged just 18 at the time, Raducanu's fairytale US Open triumph made her the first British woman to lift a Grand Slam singles trophy since Virginia Wade at Wimbledon in 1977.

She was also the first qualifier in the Open Era to win a major singles title.

She left Manhattan with the world at her feet, but the problems that have dogged her since provide a cautionary tale about the pitfalls of sudden celebrity.

She has matched her best run at Wimbledon from three years ago and tellingly described the victory against Sakkari as "up there with the most fun I've had on a tennis court"

"Winning that match, it's a beautiful feeling and one that I really want to savour."

Djokovic eyes sweet 16

AFP, London

Novak Djokovic will target the Wimbledon fourth round for the 16th time on Saturday as old rival Andy Murray's All England Club career ended on a low note when Emma Raducanu pulled the plug on their mixed doubles plans.

Djokovic is looking to equal Roger Federer's record of eight Wimbledon triumphs and claim a 25th Grand Slam title in total.

He barely broke sweat in his opening match but was pushed to four sets in his second encounter by British rookie Jacob Fearnley, who was still playing college tennis in the United States last month.

Just weeks after a right knee operation, Djokovic feels he is not yet fully up to speed.

"It's not where I want it to be," he said. "The longer I stay in the tournament, I think the better the chances that my movement will improve."

On Saturday, he tackles Alexei Popyrin, whom he beat in four sets at the Australian Open earlier this year.

With defending champion Carlos Alcaraz and top-ranked Jannik Sinner on the other side of the draw, and safely into the fourth round, Djokovic can see a clear path to a sixth straight final at the All England Club.

Popyrin, the world number 47, has never made the second week of a Slam.

Jessy's moment to shine

SPORTS REPORTER

It's a dream come true moment for Bangladesh's Shathira Jakir Jessy as she is all set to officiate in the upcoming ICC Women's T20 Asia Cup, scheduled to be held in Sri Lanka from July 18-28.

Jessy had previously officiated matches in the ACC Women's Emerging Teams Asia Cup in Hong Kong last year. Apart from conducting regular domestic and international matches, Jessy also conducted a high-stake match between Mohammedan SC and Prime Bank during the Dhaka Premier Division Cricket League (DPL) 2023-24.

However, the upcoming Women's Asia Cup will be the biggest international break for the former national cricketer as she will be the first Bangladeshi women's umpire to officiate at any senior level of a regional or global tournament.

"It's obviously a great feeling," Shathira told The Daily Star yesterday.

"After conducting matches during the last Emerging Teams Asia Cup in Hong Kong, I set myself a target to officiate in the Asia Cup. In between, I also officiated matches during the Premier Cup in Malaysia this year along with other international matches and DPL. But the Asia Cup will be the biggest tournament so far in my career.

"Actually, this is the biggest tournament after the World Cup. I have really worked hard in the last two years for this and finally, my target has been fulfilled," she added.

Shathira feels that the door of opportunities has been opened in this women's umpiring profession after she got exposure, both at the domestic and international level, on a regular basis. Jessy has already conducted 13 WT20Is -- 10 as on-field umpire and three as TV umpire -- and the 33-year-old former cricketer targets to officiate matches in tournaments like the World Cup.

"People all over the world now know about Bangladesh's women's umpiring. I think the acceptance level has increased globally.

"As a women's cricketer, I couldn't go to such a level but after starting umpiring, I think I have achieved something in this profession.

"Now many girls have started taking this profession seriously. The World Cup is knocking at the door and I really hope to officiate matches in that tournament as well," said Jessy, adding that umpires from Bangladesh have the calibre to be among the world's best in the coming days.

'These Canadians' set for rematch with Messi & Co

AGENCIES

Canada reached the semifinals of the Copa America after beating Venezuela 4-3 on penalties after the 90-minute game finished 1-1 yesterday.

Canada will face defending champions Argentina in the semifinal in New Jersey on Wednesday at 6am, Bangladesh Time.

Jacob Shaffelburg fired Canada into the lead in the 13th minute but Salomon Rondon equalised in the 64th, before Canada triumphed in the shoot-out to set up a last-four meeting with world champions Argentina.

The Canadians, under American coach Jesse Marsch, who only took over the team in mid-May, are playing in the Copa America for the first time and produced a relentless display of pressing in what was a frantic game.

Both teams failed to score from the spot twice in the shoot-out, leaving it at 3-3 after five penalties each and sending the contest into sudden death.

Canada keeper Max Crepeau, who had made a major error for Venezuela's equaliser, made amends as he saved Wilker Angel's kick.

"Everybody needs to realize the respect this country deserves and these footballers deserve," Crepeau told Fox Sports.

"Everybody says 'these Canadians', well these Canadians are in the semi-finals of Copa America".

Canada face a stern test in the semifinals, coming up against World Champions Argentina side.

But after a performance of remarkable energy and determination against a Venezuela team that won all three of their group stage games, Marsch will believe his team could pull off another upset and reach the final in Miami on July 14.

Canada played Argentina in the opening game of the group stage, losing 2-0 to the defending champions and will start as huge underdogs again in the semi-final.

"It's going to take everything. We played them in the group stage, we played well but didn't get the win we wanted," Canada captain Alphonso Davies said.

"Going into this game, we know what's on the line. We win and go forward, we lose and go home. They're going to come out with everything. We're hungrier than ever, we expect a battle as they should."

Canada captain Alphonso Davies banished memories of his penalty miss at the 2022 World Cup by confidently converting a spot-kick in a shootout victory over Venezuela. In Canada's 1-0 group stage defeat to Belgium at the World Cup in Qatar, Davies had a tame penalty saved by goalkeeper Thibaut Courtois, and the North American side eventually exited the tournament with three losses.

A TRIBUTE TO GRANDMASTER

Zia was devoted to chess till his last day

NIAZ MURSHED

Ziaur Rahman was my first real competitor in chess in Bangladesh. From 1979 to 1996, I was at the top. In 1996, Zia overtook me in the ratings and became the country's best chess player, a position he held longer than anyone else.

Personally, I used to struggle a lot whenever I played against him, he was excellent. I took a sabbatical from the game in 1996 and after my return, he always gave me a really tough time and I admired him for it.

His dedication towards the game was unparalleled in Bangladesh. No one has played in more chess World Cups than him or won more national championships. He also represented Bangladesh in 17 Chess Olympiads, more than anyone else. His devotion towards chess was

UP chairman shot dead in Dumuria

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Khulna

Armed criminals shot and killed the chairman of Shorafpur union parishad in Khulna's Dumuria upazila last night.

Sheikh Rabiul Islam Rabi, 45, the union's three-time chairman, was also a member of the Khulna district unit Awami League.

This incident took place in the Gutudia area of the upazila around 10:00pm, said his brother-in-law Badruzzaman Bablu.

Armed criminals shot Rabiul from the back near the Brac Hatchary in Gutudia as he was returning to his Khulna residence on a motorcycle after attending a meeting at Zobaid Ali Auditorium.

He was declared dead after being taken to Khulna Medical College Hospital.

Dumuria police OC Sukant Kumar, said, "I've heard about the incident. But, I don't know the details."

Starmer 'restless for change' after win

AFP, London

Newly elected UK prime minister Keir Starmer yesterday began his first full day in charge declaring himself "restless for change" and pledging that growth would be his Labour government's "number one mission".

Starmer also confirmed his previously declared intention to end the outgoing Conservative government's flagship scheme to deport migrants to Rwanda.

"The Rwanda scheme was dead and buried before it started... I'm not prepared to continue with gimmicks that don't act as a deterrent," he told reporters following his first cabinet meeting.

The party on Friday won a landslide election victory, bringing to a close 14 years of Conservative rule.

The Labour leader told his top team, including Britain's first woman finance minister Rachel Reeves and new foreign minister David Lammy, it had been "the honour and the privilege of my life" to be invited by King Charles III to form the government.

"We have a huge amount of work to do, so now we get on with our work," he said to applause and smiles around the cabinet table.

Starmer spent his first hours in Downing Street on Friday appointing his ministerial team, hours after securing his centre-left party's return to power with a whopping 174-seat majority in the UK parliament.

Notable lower-ranking appointments included Patrick Vallance, chief scientific government adviser during the Covid-19 pandemic, who has been made a science minister.

James Timpson, whose shoe repair company employs ex-offenders, was also made a prisons minister.

PROMISED CHINESE LOANS

Transport sector projects fare poorly

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

China promised to provide loans for eight transport sector projects eight years ago, but only one of those has been completed so far.

Two other projects are currently underway, but those are running behind schedule, documents show.

Two more projects have been taken off the list while the implementation of the three others has not started due to multiple reasons.

The delay in implementation means Bangladesh will struggle to enhance the capacity of its rail lines, highways and sea ports with a view to serve the steadily growing economy, officials said.

Amid such a situation, Bangladesh is expected to seek more Chinese loans for several transport projects during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's China visit from July 8 to 10. The projects may include construction of Bhanga-Payra rail line and Mass Rapid Transit Line-2.

During his visit to Bangladesh in October 2016, Chinese President Xi Jinping pledged to provide about $20 billion loan -- the largest amount committed by a bilateral partner of Bangladesh -- over the following four years to implement 27 projects.

But as of January this year, the two sides managed to sign agreements on only nine projects involving $8.08 billion, figures from the Economic Relations Division (ERD) show.

Of the $8.08 billion, Bangladesh could utilise only $4.91 billion, less than a quarter of the amount promised by China. Red tapism on both sides is largely to blame for the slow disbursement of loans, said officials.

Of the 27 projects, eight were for the transport sector, including four under the railways ministry, three under the road transport and bridges ministry, and one under the shipping ministry.

RAIL PROJECTS

Four railway projects were supposed to be implemented with the Chinese loans to build new a rail line and expand three existing ones.

The Padma Bridge Rail Link Project is the only railway project being implemented now with the Chinese loan.

The Ecnec in May 2016 approved the project to connect the capital with Jashore with a 169km line via the Padma Bridge at a cost of France kicks off 2nd round of polls

AFP, Paris

France yesterday prepared for its most consequential legislative election of recent times, with residents of overseas territories opening voting for a poll expected to give the far right its biggest ever presence in parliament.

A traditional final day pause was observed yesterday ahead of today's second round runoff after a frenetic campaign that saw tensions rise across the country and dozens of attacks on candidates.

Underlining France's global footprint that spans the oceans of the world, the first French region to vote was Saint Pierre and Miquelon, a small French archipelago off the coast of Canada where citizens began voting from 1000 GMT.

They were to be followed yesterday by residents of French Caribbean territories including Martinique and Guadeloupe as well as Guiana in South America.

French Pacific territories come next before people in mainland France cast their ballots from 0600 GMT today.

Polls will close by 1800 GMT today when projections of seat numbers, regarded in France as a firm indicator of the final outcome, are published.

Final opinion polls on Friday suggested that far-right leader Marine Le Pen's National Rally (RN) would fall short of winning an outright 289 seat majority in the 577-member National Assembly while being the largest party ahead of the New Popular Front (NFP) left-wing coalition.

England into Euro semis after shootout win over Switzerland

AFP, Duesseldorf

England's quest for a first major tournament win in 58 years remained alive after another late fightback before beating Switzerland 5-3 on penalties to book their place in the Euro 2024 semi-finals.

After the 120 minutes finished level at 1-1, goalkeeper Jordan Pickford was the Three Lions' hero in the shoot-out as he saved Switzerland's first spot-kick from Manuel Akanji.

Cole Palmer, Jude Bellingham, Bukayo Saka, Ivan Toney and Trent Alexander-Arnold converted their penalties to send England into a semi-final meeting with Turkey or the Netherlands in Dortmund on Wednesday.

After needing Bellingham's 95th-minute equaliser before going on to beat Slovakia in extra time in the last 16, England were again staring at defeat with 10 minutes to go.

Earth's core so slow, it is now backwards!

Scientists confirm

CNN ONLINE

Deep inside Earth is a solid metal ball that rotates independently of our spinning planet, like a top whirling around inside a bigger top, shrouded in mystery.

This inner core has intrigued researchers since its discovery by Danish seismologist Inge Lehmann in 1936, and how it moves — its rotation speed and direction — has been at the center of a decades-long debate. A growing body of evidence suggests the core's spin has changed dramatically in recent years, but scientists have remained divided over what exactly is happening — and what it means.

Part of the trouble is that Earth's deep interior is impossible to observe or sample directly. Seismologists have gleaned information about the inner core's motion by examining how waves from large earthquakes that ping this area behave. Variations between waves of similar strengths that passed through the core at different times enabled scientists to measure changes in the inner core's position and calculate its spin.

Dhaka, Beijing to ink 20 MoUs but loan deal unlikely

Says foreign minister; PM leaves for China today

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka and Beijing will sign around 20 MoUs, including some on trade and economic cooperations, during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's visit to China that begins today.

However, the two countries may not sign any loan agreement on reserve or budget support.

"There is no loan agreement on the list. An MoU will be signed on economic cooperation. If parameters are met under this MoU, we may go for a loan in future," Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud said at a press briefing at the foreign ministry yesterday.

He said different countries make different proposals for loans, but Bangladesh does not accept all. For example, the World Bank had offered a loan after refusing fund for the Padma Bridge project, but Dhaka did not accept it.

"The reserve situation is improving in Bangladesh and the trend will continue," he said.

Dhaka and Beijing were discussing a loan of $5 billion in Yuan for trade facilitation amid foreign currency shortage. However, the countries were yet to agree on the terms and conditions of the loan. Besides, there were also discussions on budget support from China, according to diplomatic sources.

Hasan Mahmud said the two countries will announce the inauguration of some development projects.

The MoUs expected to be signed will be on economic and banking sectors; trade and investment; digital economy; infrastructure development; assistance in disaster management; construction of the 6th and 9th Bangladesh-China Friendship Bridge; export of agricultural products from Bangladesh; and people-to-people connectivity.

"Bangladesh will seek China's assistance in the areas of investment and trade; and financial assistance and repatriation of Rohingyas to their homeland. At the same time, Bangladesh will continue to provide support to China as its friend in the global context," he said.

Hasina is going to China at the invitation of Chinese Premier Li Qiang. The visit from July 8 to July 11 comes two weeks after her visit to India. This will be Hasina's first visit to China since her new term began in January and five years after her last visit in 2019.

Annual inflation hits 12-year high

The annual average price spike in Bangladesh surged to its highest level in 12 years in the just-concluded fiscal year despite easing in June, reflecting the persistent erosion of real income and the deterioration of living standards of low-income groups.

Annual inflation rose to 9.73 percent in 2023-24, the highest since 2011-12 when it was 10.62 percent, overshooting the government's target of containing it to 7.5 percent, according to Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics.

This is the second year the Consumer Prices Index, a measure of the increase in the prices of a basket of products and services, stood at more than 9 percent.

Quota protests bring city to a standstill

Agitating students to hold fresh programme today

STAR REPORT

Dhaka was virtually paralysed yesterday as students ramped up their protests against the quota system for government jobs on the sixth day, blocking as many as six busy intersections in the capital.

The demonstrators announced a fresh programme for blocking important intersections in the capital and highways adjacent to colleges and universities across the country from 3:30pm today.

"We have been staging protests with a four-point demand, but now we have only one demand," said Hasnat Abdullah, a student of Dhaka University and an organiser of the protests that began on July 4.

He said their lone demand now is that all illogical and discriminatory quotas in public service are scrapped through the passage of a law in parliament, keeping a minimum quota for backward citizens in line with the constitution.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina termed the protests irrational and said the issue should be settled at the apex court.

The protests intensified after the Supreme Court on July 4 upheld a High Court verdict that declared a 2018 government circular abolishing the quota system in public service illegal.

The students are demanding the reinstatement of the circular that abolished the 30 percent quota system for children of freedom fighters.

In the wake of massive student protests for reforms, the government in 2018 issued a circular abolishing the quota system.

Until then, about 56 percent of government jobs had been reserved for candidates from various quotas. Of this, 30 percent were for the children and grandchildren of freedom fighters; 10 percent for women; 10 percent for people

'It's for the apex court to settle'

PM says there's no logic behind ongoing anti-quota demo

BSS, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said quota issue for government jobs should be settled in the apex court.

"The High Court gave a verdict regarding the quota system and the movement is being conducted on a sub-judice issue. We can't say anything ... . Since the High Court gave the verdict, solutions should come from the court," she said.

The prime minister said this while Jubo Mohila League leaders met her at the Gono Bhaban marking the organisation's 22nd founding anniversary.

She said there is no logic for such a movement against the apex court verdict regarding restoration of the quota system in the public services.

"What is now going on in the name of movement [against quota] is a waste of study time. I don't think it has any logic," she said.

Hasina reminded all that her government earlier rescinded the quota system in public services.

The state has been captured by a select few

Says noted economist Rehman Sobhan

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A class of people have evolved in Bangladesh who have not just captured the state but have become the state itself, said noted economist Rehman Sobhan.

"It is going to be very difficult to do anything about it because this class has now joined hands with the bureaucracy," he said at a seminar yesterday on "Political Economy of Banking Sector of Bangladesh".

The virtual event was organised by Samaj Gabeshana Kendra.

"What we classified at the time of Bangladesh's creation as an intermediate regime has become a fully-fledged capitalist regime fully captured by not just by the capitalists in general but by a segment of that particular class."

Sobhan, also the chairman of the Centre for Policy Dialogue, also touched upon the issue of effective interest rates.

If a loan is not repaid in 10 or 15 years, then the actual interest rate becomes much lower.

"The interest rate is widely unequal depending on whether you are actually repaying your loans."

The default culture has created a distortion in the setting of interest rates.

"Political patronage became the main criteria for lending. If you were lending to a politically patronised class that patronage would then become a political resource. And that political resource would then be used to ensure that your loans were not effectively collected. Once that happened, that class then became more empowered."

They then acquired political capabilities and political strength.

"And you then evolved from a fabricated capitalist class into a perfectly strong and well-established capitalist class that would

SHILPAKALA ACADEMY

A cultural oasis in the city

RBR

Situated in the old neighbourhood of Segunbagicha, near the lush Ramna Park, Bangladesh Shilpakala Academy has always been the go-to place for theatre, exhibitions, and cultural programmes. It is the National Institute of Fine and Performing Arts and a cultural hub in Dhaka.

I still remember my first visit to this premises in the late seventies when Chinese cultural groups came to perform in Dhaka and how in their soft, low tone voice sang Bangla songs. And then there were acrobats doing impossible feats and Russian performers that enthralled the audience with their songs and acts. Today, after so many decades, the place still invokes nothing but fond experiences for me.

The academy promotes the arts and culture and the creation of necessary facilities for their development. The activities of the academy also include organising workshops, seminars, discussion meetings, short-term specialised training, providing scholarships and financial grants for talented artists, and organising competitions in the various fields of fine and performing arts.

The place has now expanded into a maze of galleries, theatres, and seminar halls and people are always in queue to avail the tickets for whichever play is being performed. Come rain or shine the place is buzzing with activities and enthusiastic art shows.

What made me happy was that the place attracted a young, trendy crowd. There is always more than one play, exhibition or workshop going on within the premises. Art appreciation course, recitations, dance dramas —almost everything that is art — Shilpakala Academy is your trusted choice.

"Big halls allow the performer's charisma to come across as larger than life. The current crop of young directors who love riotous experimental work all opt for these halls. Experienced directors with their classy sophisticated plays prefer Shilpakala Academy at one go for their show dates. It is a perfect place to go on dates, for ladies' evening out, or friends' day out — I even took my mother to enjoy a play on Mother's Day," says Aziza Ahmed, who regularly goes to the place with her family.

Having done praising, academy regulars like Meher Nigar feel the Experimental Hall should be renovated and modernised and particular emphasis must be given to the seating arrangements.

NB Mansoor on the other hand loves the arty ambience with like-minded people who seem very interested in drama, film, music, poetry, or painting.

"But in the middle of a performance, you hear the creaking sound of the old wooden platforms, it is kind of off-putting. I think some government funds should be allocated to modernise the old halls of the Academy, where performing art is played. However, the exhibition halls are state-of-the-art as it is comparatively a new infrastructure," she adds.

The waiting lounge has a sad look of the eighties with litter and cobwebs making it more lacklustre; an interior consultant can be hired to give the place a contemporary edgy look.

"There should be proper toilet facilities and a good food court inside the premises besides the old canteen serving tea and shingara, and attention must be given to cleanliness," Ahmed feels.

The area surrounding the premises is lively with pop-up eateries, selling quintessential Bengali favourites like puri, hot tea, piyaju, lentil fritters and so much more. With puris, you can choose assorted sides like duck curry, fried tripe, and chicken jalfrezi. There is a fried noodle or chow mein option. You can gulp it all down with fresh coconut water or hot tea.

So, the next time you have nothing fun to do, visit Bangladesh Shilpakala Academy. Dhaka is thriving with entertaining activities. You just need to know where to go and when.

Power cut knocks out metro service for 30 minutes

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Metro rail service faced nearly half an hour of disruption yesterday due to power cuts.

"Metro rail has started regular operation as power supply is now normal," said a post on the official Facebook page of Dhaka Mass Transit Company Limited.

In an earlier post, it said, "Since 2:27pm, metro rail operation has been suspended due to power outage."

From around 3:00pm, the train service became normal.

A Farmgate-bound passenger, Pinaki Roy, told The Daily Star, "The train stopped slowly at Shewrapara Station and stayed there for eight-10 minutes."

"After that, the metro rail authorities announced over the loudspeaker, asking passengers to get off the train. All passengers waited on the platform for around 30 minutes."

He added that the metro rail service resumed at 2:58pm.

Two minor girls drowned in a pond in Baropur Modhdhopara Barobari area of Bogura's Sadar upazila yesterday.

They are Himu, 5, and her sister Jannat, 3, daughters of Md Habib of the area, said police.

Sub-Inspector Aminul Islam, in-charge of Phulbari police outpost, said the two drowned in a pond next to their house while playing beside it around 12:00pm.

When the girls went missing, family members started searching for them.

They were declared dead after being taken to Shaheed Ziaur Rahman Medical College Hospital, Bogura.

11 killed in Nepal floods, landslides

Eight missing

REUTERS, Kathmandu

Heavy rains triggered landslides and flash floods killing at least 11 people in the last 36 hours in Nepal and blocking key highways and roads, officials said yesterday.

Eight people were missing, either washed away by floods or buried in landslides, while 12 others were injured and being treated in hospitals, police spokesperson Dan Bahadur Karki said.

"Rescue workers are trying to clear the landslides and open the roads," Karki told Reuters, adding heavy equipment was being used to clear debris.

In southeastern Nepal, the Koshi River, which causes deadly floods in the eastern Indian state of Bihar almost every year, was flowing above the danger level, a district official said.

"The flow of Koshi is rising and we have asked residents to remain alert about possible floods," Bed Raj Phuyal, a senior official of Sunsari district where the river flows, told Reuters.

He said at 0900 hours (0315 hours GMT) water flow in Koshi River was 369,000 cusecs per second, more than double its normal flow of 150,000 cusecs.

Authorities said all 56 sluice gates of the Koshi Barrage had been opened to drain out water compared with about 10-12 during a normal situation.

Authorities said the flows of Narayani, Rapti and Mahakali rivers in the west were also rising.

In hill-ringed Kathmandu, several rivers have overflown their banks, flooded roads and inundated many houses.

Local media showed people wading through waist-deep water or residents using buckets to empty their houses.

At least 50 people across Nepal have died in landslides, floods and lightning strikes since mid-June when annual monsoon rains started.

Hundreds of people die every year in landslides and flash floods that are common in mostly mountainous Nepal during the monsoon season which normally starts in mid-June and continues through mid-September.

move into exercising political power. Here, cronyism became a very important factor because whilst all capitalist classes are created dominant, some amongst them are more dominant than others and that was the nature of the problem," Sobhan added.

Bangladesh's banking sector is bearing the brunt of the political bias towards the wealthy and the influential, said Biru Paksha Paul, professor of economics at the State University of New York at Cortland.

"The banking sector is paying the price of political favouritism toward the superrich."

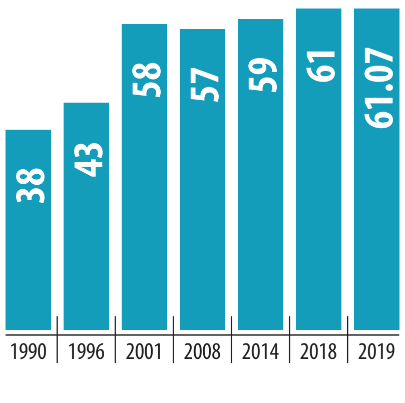
This started with the interest rate cap imposed in April 2020.

"The interest rate cap came into effect during the pandemic although it had no connection with Covid. The businessmen's hidden agenda was to get loans at effectively zero real interest rate and they made it happen."

The finance ministry tried to justify the cap in the name of private investment, which arguably did not show any sign of improvement following the adoption of the lending rate cap, as reflected in the private investment-GDP ratio, he said.

"It facilitated the tycoons to siphon off funds from banks at near-zero real interest rates," he said while presenting a paper on 'Bangladesh's Banking Sector: the interest rate cap, and govt's borrowing from the banking sector'.

BUSINESSMEN IN PARLIAMENT (IN %)



The 9 percent interest rate cap made the real interest rate negative, and that outcome finally induced the partial dehydration of the financial account of the balance of payment.

The dehydration of the financial account aggravated the reserve crisis, contributed to the taka's free fall, enforced import controls and finally brought down GDP growth.

The depreciation of the taka made imports expensive, which fuelled the fire of inflation further, said Paul, also the former chief economist of the Bangladesh Bank.

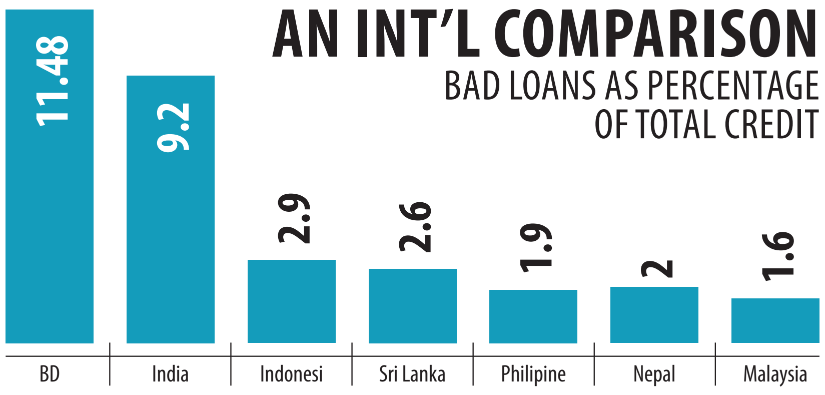
The dwindling tax-GDP ratio and the ambitious development expenditure narrowed the government's capacity to finance the budget deficit.

As a result, the government resorted to desperately using banks' money, limiting the capacity of banks to lend as per the growing demand for credit.

However, the government's borrowing from banks kept rising due to growing fiscal incapacity and the political philosophy of not creating pressure on the wealthy elites for direct taxes, he said.

In fiscal 2022-23, the government borrowed Tk 1.25 lakh crore from the banking sector. Of the amount, 79 percent was borrowed directly from the BB.

AN INT'L COMPARISON
BAD LOANS AS PERCENTAGE OF TOTAL CREDIT



As much as Tk 1 lakh crore of high-powered money was injected and that is to blame for the stubbornly high inflation, Paul said. The high-powered money saw a multiplier of 4.93 last fiscal year.

Since it was not taken from commercial banks, it fuelled monetary expansion instead of soaking up banks' liquidity.

"The country never saw such irresponsible borrowing before this."

Overall, the lack of timely monetary tightening by raising policy rates and the utter absence of fiscal tightening via raising taxes on the wealthy and curtailing public spending jointly fuelled the flames of inflation, Paul added.

The volume of defaulted loans amounts to a staggering 11.48 percent of total credit, said MM Akash, professor of economics at the University of Dhaka. This does not include the written-off loans.

As of March, total defaulted loans stood at Tk 182,000 crore.

"However, the real situation is far graver. If we include rescheduled and written-off loans to this, the de facto aggregate default loan amounts to more than Tk 400,000 crore."

However, hiding the true defaulted loan figure is politically convenient.

"The nexus of dishonest businessmen, bureaucrats and politicians have captured the state bodies and all institutions that could make the bad loan issue transparent and accountable."

Some shariah-based banks are ailing due to their owners but the central bank wanted to save those banks by providing liquidity support.

"This is not wise. Why did the government want to bail out the banks? Their owners are liable for their ailing financial health."

Akash suggested making the post of the central bank governor a constitutional post. At present, the finance ministry appoints the governor.

"There is a dual regulator for the banking sector -- the finance ministry's control on banks will have to be stopped."

The top 100 loans defaulters' list must be published to build public awareness against defaulters, said Akash, also the chairman of Dhaka University's Bureau of Economic Research.

The independence of the central bank is needed, said Selim Raihan, executive director of the South Asian Network on Economic Modelling (SANEM).

"But the question is are the political elites willing to give the freedom? The political elites don't want to."

When talking about the interest rate cap, he said that not everyone benefited from the single-digit lending rate; only a certain segment benefited from it and a portion of the loan was laundered, he added.

visits are Bangladesh's way of balancing relations between the two Asian powers.

Hasan Mahmud said Dhaka is discussing Chinese cooperation on the Southern Integrated Development Initiative (SIDI), which will include the development of Mongla Port.

On Teesta project, he said, "As it is a common river of Bangladesh and India, India has made a proposal, and we have to consider it first. It is also good that China made a proposal. As India has made a proposal, we think it is good. If they [China] want, it will be discussed during the visit."

Asked about Dhaka's position on Beijing's interest in upgrading the strategic partnership with Bangladesh to Comprehensive Strategic Cooperative Partnership, the foreign minister said, "Our relationship with China is deep, it is a strategic relationship. This will get stronger."

During a briefing on July 4, Chinese foreign ministry spokesperson Mao Ning said the leaders of the two countries will have an in-depth exchange of views on how to deepen the friendship; on expanding beneficial cooperation; and on regional and international issues of mutual interest.

The PM will reach Beijing around 6:00pm today. Tomorrow morning, she will make a courtesy call on Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank President Jin Liqun.

She will then attend the "Summit on Trade Business and Investment opportunities between Bangladesh and China". Hasina will then hold a bilateral meeting with Wang Huning, chairman of the 14th National Committee of the Chinese Peoples' Political Consultative Conference.

On July 10, she will meet Chinese Premier Li Qiang at the Great Hall of the People and will attend a reception. The meeting will be followed by a banquet in her honour.

That afternoon, Hasina will hold a bilateral meeting with Chinese President Xi Jinping at the Great Hall of the People.

Finance Minister AH Mahmood Ali; Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud; Prime Minister's Private Industry and Investment Adviser Salman F Rahman; State Minister for Commerce Ahasanul Islam Titu; State Minister for Power, Energy, and Mineral Resources Nasrul Hamid; State Minister fort Posts, Telecommunications, and Information Technology Zunaid Ahmed; Foreign Secretary Masud Bin Momen and other high officials of the ministries concerned will accompany Hasina.

cancellation of the quota system, she said it was seen that the women were not getting chances as much as they were during the period of quota system.

She added that many people from remote areas and districts had been deprived of government jobs.

The premier said the deprived went to the High Court that declared the verdict (against the government decision to cancel the quota system). "We always honour the High Court verdict."

The premier asked the demonstrators to prove that they had passed PSC examinations.

On June 5, the HC declared illegal the October 4, 2018, circular of the public administration ministry regarding the abolishment of quotas, including those for freedom fighters, in first and second-class government jobs.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court on Thursday last upheld the HC judgment.

About the pension scheme, Hasina, also the ruling Awami League president, said they have introduced the universal pension scheme for all in accordance with the party's election manifesto of 2008.

"Only the government officials get pension and others are being deprived. So, several pension schemes were announced as nobody can be deprived."

The PM said those involved in politics, including leaders of Jubo Mohila League, should join the pension scheme for their future.

Recalling the contribution of the organisation to different movements, she said the organisation was always on the streets during every movement and its leaders and activists were subjected to inhuman torture by police and armed cadres of the BNP.

"I have no word to denounce the inhuman torture carried out on the Jubo Mohila League leaders and activists. The attackers even did not show any mercy considering them women."

Hasina recalled the role of Jubo Mohila League in collecting the signature demanding release of her from jail during the tenure of the last caretaker government.

"We did not bow down to torture. We wanted one thing that is to establish democracy," she said.

The PM briefly described her government measures for the overall development of the country, including women empowerment.

Hasina also inaugurated the website of Jubo Mohila League, established on July 6, 2002.

It was a rough day for Dhaka commuters yesterday. The capital experienced severe traffic disruptions as students protesting quota system in government jobs blocked key intersections from morning to evening, causing immense suffering for commuters. Due to a scarcity of public transportation, many had to walk to reach their destinations. The situation became normal after 8:00pm. Students also declared to continue their anti-quota movement today. The photos were taken in Paribagh, Farmgate, Science Lab and Motijheel areas.

WHAT THEY SAID ABOUT QUOTA PROTEST

We gained an independent state through the Liberation War, only to escape discrimination. The constitution emphasises that. The quota system in employment is unconstitutional.

GM QUADER
Jatiyo Party Chairman

We must respect the rule of law and since the issue is still pending with the High Court, and a definite verdict will be given by our Supreme Court.

MOHIBUL HASAN CHOWDHURY

We are observing the movements closely. I believe the issues will be resolved. The issue for which the students are protesting is not a decision of the government; it is a court ruling.

People suffer amid 'Bangla Blockade'

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

Dhaka descended into a chaos yesterday as student protests demanding reforms in the government quota system for jobs brought traffic to a standstill. Long lines of vehicles, including private cars, buses, CNG-run auto rickshaws, remained stranded for hours, unable to move an inch.

The impact on commuters was immediate and widespread. Job holders and students found themselves running late, their schedules thrown into disarray. Rickshaw-pullers, CNG-run auto-rickshaw drivers, and ride-sharing app drivers all saw their earnings plummet as the gridlock brought the city to a standstill.

The ordeal began early in the day with Dhaka College students taking over the Science Lab intersection, triggering traffic jams that spread across major roads like Azimpur-New Market to Mirpur and Gabtoli.

By 4:00pm, the gridlock intensified as students blocked more intersections, including Shahbagh, Hotel Intercontinental turning, Banglamotor, Karwan Bazar, and Chankharpul.

This brought vehicular movement to a near halt, with reports of severe congestion in Tantibazar, Ray Saheb Bazar, Bangshal, Gulistan, Purana Paltan, Shahbagh, Karwan Bazar, Farmgate, Agargaon, Kazipara, Sheorapara, Mirpur-10, New Market, and Science Lab.

Private job holder Mahmudul Hasan described his ordeal traveling from Khilgaon to Farmgate.

"I got stuck in a gridlock near Hotel Intercontinental," he said. "The journey typically takes 30-40 minutes, but due to the traffic, it took over an hour as I had to reroute through Moghbazar."

College student Raid Hasan shared his frustration after being stuck in the Bijoy Sarani area for over 30 minutes. Similarly, Adnan Sejan, a commuter, said he was stuck in front of Square Hospitals in Panthapath for 40 minutes.

The situation worsened during the evening rush hour, leading to further congestion.

PROTEST OVER PENSION

Univ teachers carry on strike

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Academic and administrative activities at public universities across the country remain halted due to the indefinite strike by teachers, demanding the reinstatement of the teachers' pension scheme.

Prof Nizamul Hoque Bhuiyan, secretary general of Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association (FBUTA) and president of Dhaka University Teachers Association, said they will continue their movement until their demands are met.

Teachers of 35 public universities have been refraining from work since Monday, demanding the reinstatement of the previous pension facilities instead of the newly introduced "Prottoy" scheme of the Universal Pension System.

Besides, Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader, while talking to reporters at the secretariat yesterday, said the government is closely monitoring the ongoing movements of the university teachers against a new pension scheme.

Quader, also the road transport and bridges minister, said he has been in touch with the teachers but couldn't specify when a meeting would be held.

Meanwhile, Dhaka University Teachers

11.4pc in Bangladesh thalassemia carriers

Says BBS study

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Around 11.4 percent of people in the country are thalassemia carriers, according to a new study by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS).

According to BBS data, 11.9 percent of men are thalassemia carriers, while the percentage is 11.2 among women.

However, there is no government data on the number of thalassemia patients in the country or how many children have thalassemia.

Thalassemia is an inherited blood disorder that results in abnormal haemoglobin, leading to anaemia. A carrier of thalassaemia is someone who carries at least one of the faulty genes that causes thalassaemia, but does not have it themselves.

The findings of "National Thalassemia Survey 2024," for which the blood of 8,680 people was tested across the country, were presented at BBS auditorium in the capital yesterday.

According to the survey, the highest number of thalassemia carriers are found in Rangpur division (27.70 percent), followed by Rajshahi (11.30 percent) and Chattogram (11.20 percent). Dhaka division has 8.60 percent of the carriers.

Of the carriers, 11.9 percent are 14 to 19-year-olds, 12 percent are 20 to 24-year-olds, 10.3 percent are 25 to 29, and 11.3 percent are 30 to 35, the study result showed.

Shrimp fry collection goes on despite ban

Experts, locals blame lax monitoring of authorities

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

Despite a ban in place on collecting shrimp fries, the illegal activity has been going on unabated in Sangu and Karnaphuli rivers as well as the Bay of Bengal in Chattogram in broad daylight.

This illegal activity is a big threat to marine ecology as it endangers fries of other fish species as well since those are largely discarded after being caught, according to experts.

Locals alleged that the authorities concerned have turned a blind eye to the menace.

The government imposed a ban on collection of shrimp fries from the coastal areas in September 2000.

Visiting different points on the Sangu river and the Bay in Banshkhali upazila, this correspondent saw collectors catching shrimp fries using "pata jal", a type of net that is also banned.

Abul Kalam, 55, a collector from Chanua union, said catching shrimp fries is more profitable than fishing in the sea.

He claimed to have no other option to earn a livelihood for his six-member family.

Collectors sell 100 fries of Galda and Bagda varieties at Tk 35-50 to brokers after catching those from the sea and river between April and August, during the full moon and new moon.

Most collectors admitted that fries of other species get damaged while catching shrimp fries using finely-meshed "pata jal".

The fisheries department has no data regarding the ecological damage of these illegal activities.

However, a March 2024 study by Md Abdulla Monzer, a researcher from Institute of Marine Sciences at Chittagong University, showed that existing shrimp fry catching methods have led to accidental capture and death of fish fries of other varieties.

Due to illegal shrimp fry catching, the Sangu river can incur a loss of fisheries resources worth over Tk 87 lakh annually, the study also found.

Monzer called for immediate action to tackle the dual concern of ecological degradation and economic loss due to unabated shrimp fry catching.

The upazila administration, river police, and fisheries department conduct occasional drives and seize small quantities of illegally caught fries, but the perpetrators are never brought to the book, alleged businessmen from fisheries sector.

Sribas Chandra Chanda, district fisheries officer, claimed they are seizing fries and banned nets regularly even amid a manpower shortage.

'These are just rumours'

Say police on sudden rise in 'missing children' cases

STAR REPORT

"Breaking news! In the last 48 hours, 35 children have gone missing in Dhaka and Chattogram. Be vigilant."

Since Saturday morning, such social media posts have gone viral on different Facebook groups. It has spread panic among the people.

Police, however, dismissed the claims as rumours. They said filing missing diaries is a regular phenomenon, and many children return home after a short while.

In a statement, the Police Headquarters (PHQ) said some recent social media posts related to "missing children" have come to their notice. Such posts are mere rumours.

The PHQ is requesting all not to be confused or panicked by such rumours. If people spread such rumours, legal action will be taken against them.

MISSING DIARIES FILED REGULARLY

According to the database, at least 76 missing diaries were filed in the first seven days of this month in all 50 police stations of the Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

The figure was 260 in June, 199 in May, 221 in April, 213 in March, 217 in February, and 210 in January.

Kh Mahid Uddin, additional commissioner (crime and operations) of the DMP, said reports of 35 children going missing within 48 hours is incorrect.

Mahid said 33 GDs were filed with different police stations in connection with missing children in 72 hours from May 4 to May 6.

Between June 4 and 6, at least 36 GDs were filed in 72 hours. Similarly, 32 GDs were filed in 72 hours from July 4 to 6.

In most cases, the children came back to their families within a short time, he added.

For instance, Mohammad Mohsin, officer-in-charge of Tejgaon Police Station of DMP, in a social media post mentioned a boy left home to avoid studies.

The mother sought police help to trace the missing child and police found him shortly afterwards, he added.

POLICE PREPARING LISTS

In Chattogram, police are compiling lists of missing individuals, particularly children, in response to viral social media posts, said Niskriti Chakma, deputy commissioner (DC-Crime) of Chattogram Metropolitan Police.

Authorities are verifying reports to distinguish genuine cases from instances where children have temporarily left home due to familial pressures or personal reasons, said Abu Tyeb Md Arif Hossein, additional superintendent of police of the Chattogram Special Branch.

Delwar Hossain, a pickup driver transporting ceramic goods, found himself stuck at Karwan Bazar for more than an hour.

"It took me three and a half hours to reach here from Dhamrai," he said. "The students' blockades have brought everything to a halt. Will causing us such distress help them achieve their demands?" he asked.

Private sector employee Hasan Uddin said, "Everyone is walking back home. I walked for 40 minutes from Kakrail intersection to Karwan Bazar."

Salam Hossain, who drives for a ride-sharing app, was stuck at Shahbagh intersection from 3:00pm to 7:30pm. "There was a teacher in my car who was forced to leave the vehicle and walk at 4:00pm due to a lack of alternatives," he said.

The protests, dubbed the "Bangla Blockade" programme, also caused hardship for rickshaw pullers like Soheb Miah. "I couldn't get a single trip all day," he said.

"I pleaded with the students to let me pass, but they refused. If my rickshaw doesn't run, I don't earn a living. I've been stuck here in Shahbagh since 3:00pm," he said.

Meanwhile, agitating students declared to block important intersections of the capital and highways adjacent to colleges and universities across the country today.

Association, those at Jagannath University, Rajshahi University, Chittagong University, Rajshahi University of Engineering & Technology and Comilla University, among many others, continued movement to press home their demand.

Teachers at these universities abstained from work, leading to a standstill situation.

Jagannath University teachers held a programme on the campus at 12:00pm.

Sheikh Mashrik Hasan, general secretary of the JnU Teachers' Association, said, "We want to return to our students. To protect the dignity and honour of teachers and save higher education from destruction, we demand withdrawal of the discriminatory pension notification."

At Chittagong University, teachers also held a sit-in on the university premises.

Prof ABM Abu Noman, secretary of the CU Teachers' Association, said, "This scheme is harmful to university teachers. With this scheme, meritorious students won't be attracted to this profession. Eventually, the nation will suffer. If there is no positive decision for us, our agitation will intensify."

At Rajshahi University, Omor Faruq, general secretary of RUTA, said, "This pension scheme will place our next generation in a difficult situation. Our movement is not only for us but also for the next generation, who want to enter the teaching profession."

Teachers of 35 public universities have been refraining from work since Monday, demanding the reinstatement of the previous pension facilities instead of the newly introduced "Prottoy" scheme of the Universal Pension System.

in Rangpur division (27.70 percent), followed by Rajshahi (11.30 percent) and Chattogram (11.20 percent). Dhaka division has 8.60 percent of the carriers.

Moderating the event, Mohammed Mizanur Rahman, director general of BBS, said the findings of this research will play an important role in policymaking on thalassemia.

Muhammad Wahiduzzaman, secretary for Statistics and Informatics Division, said, "Being a thalassemia carrier does not mean an individual is a thalassemia patient. Rather, when one carrier marries another, the disease can occur in their children."

Thalassemia leads to a condition called anaemia, characterised by weakness, fatigue, feeling faint, shortness of breath, and stunted growth, he added.

Md Shahiduzzaman Sarker, state minister for planning, and Dr Shahnaz Arefin, additional secretary of Health Services Division, also spoke at the event.

"The dyke will be repaired in the dry season," said Rakibul.

In Lalmonirhat, floodwaters from the Dharla River have affected three unions in the shoal areas under Sadar upazila, leaving more than 5,000 people waterlogged. The Dharla was flowing 18cm above danger level at Shishulbari Point yesterday morning, according to BWDB officials.

In Sirajganj, at least 83,000 people from around 18,000 families have been marooned due to the Jamuna River's flooding.

A total of 34 unions in the district have become inundated, and 6,497 hectares of croplands are submerged.

Additionally, 57 primary schools have become waterlogged.

The Jamuna was flowing 54cm and 61cm above danger level at Kazipur Point and Sirajganj Hard Point, respectively.

In Thakurgaon, low-lying areas have been inundated as the Tangon River swelled over the past two days due to downpours and upstream water. At least 800 families in Thakurgaon Sadar upazila are marooned, with around 200 families taking shelter in educational institutions.

Floodwaters have damaged embankments and roads in the upazila, with the most affected areas from DC slum, Monshipara, Khalpara, Senua, Chanmaripara, Rajagaon, Akcha, Mohammadpur, and Nargoon unions.

Local administration has started distributing food materials among flood victims at temporary shelters. "Measures have been taken to address the damage to the river embankment at Kharibari and Collegepara," said Golam Zakaria, executive engineer of BWDB in Thakurgaon.

Officials from the Local Government Engineering Department and Thakurgaon municipality are working to repair the damaged roads. The floodwater is expected to recede if there is no further rain in the coming days.

Kaliganj Union Parishad member Mohammad Ali, who visited the family, confirmed that no relief has reached the 500 affected families in his ward.

Kaliganj UP Chairman Riazul Islam Pradhan said he has discussed the matter with the upazila nirbahi officer.

Sibbir Ahmed, UNO of Nageshwari upazila, assured that the affected families will receive government assistance soon.

saying that they've been performing their duty sincerely, risking their lives defying all adversities.

Noting that Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman founded the PGR on July 5, 1975, she said the PGR has emerged as a smart force now.

The PGR has been providing security to the VVIPs including the head of state, the head of the government and the family members of the Father of the Nation, adds UNB.

"Besides, their role in case of different state programmes is very commendable," she said.

WE'RE BESIDE PALESTINE

The prime minister said she continues to protest in international forums against the genocide being carried out in Gaza by Israel.

"We're always on the side of Palestine," she said. "We always protest against injustice and stand for justice," she added.

EXERCISE AUSTERITY, BOOST PRODUCTION

The premier asked all to practice austerity and work sincerely to boost production to take the country forward.

"Everyone will have to practise austerity to some extent in all cases. If we can move forward by showing austerity and increasing production, we'll be able to reach our desired destination," she said.

In the event, the prime minister handed over the donation and gifts to the families of martyred PGR members who lost lives while performing duty.

PGR Commander Brig Gen Mohammad Khaled Kamal delivered the welcome speech at the function.

PM's Security Affairs Adviser Maj Gen (retd) Tarique Ahmed Siddique and the chiefs of three services were present at the event.

A flood the north will remember

STAR REPORT

This year, the flood in the north has been the worst in recent memory. And it continues to worsen.

New areas in Kurigram, Sirajganj, Lalmonirhat and Thakurgaon, Gaibandha and more are being inundated every day.

In Kurigram, over two lakh people are affected by flooding as the Brahmaputra, Dudhkumar, and Dharla rivers are flowing above danger levels.

The Brahmaputra was 67cm above danger level at Chilmari Point, the Dudhkumar 51cm above danger level at Pateshwari Point, and the Dharla 31cm above danger level at Bridge Point as of yesterday morning, according to the Bangladesh Water Development Board.

"Despite a slight decrease in the Brahmaputra's water level, the overall flood situation is worsening due to rising water levels in the Dharla and Dudhkumar rivers," said Rakibul Hasan, executive engineer of BWDB in Kurigram.

Floodwaters from the Dudhkumar caused a 120-metre dyke collapse in Nageshwari upazila, inundating 17 villages and affecting at least 3,000 families. Many residents have taken refuge on higher ground with their belongings and cattle.

The floodwaters have also damaged vast areas of croplands and Aman paddy seedbeds.

Temporary shelters have been opened for flood victims, and efforts are underway to check water flow through the collapsed dyke by dumping sand-filled geo-bags.

'We could only save our lives'

Jamuna erosion leaves 100 families homeless

AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPU, back from Sirajganj

It was the night of June 28. Suddenly, Ajuba Begum felt a tremor in the ground that sent shivers down her spine.

It could only mean one thing -- the Jamuna, which was at least half a kilometre away from her home in Haat Pachil village under Shahzadpur upazila of Sirajganj, has reached dangerously close.

Ajuba took a glance outside to only confirm the inevitable.

Panicked villagers scrambled for safety, as the water devoured the land beside her home.

Inside, her family tried to salvage whatever they could from the approaching Jamuna. But it was too late.

Within minutes, water started breaching their residence. That is when Ajuba knew it was time. She took a deep breath, looked back at her home for one last time, and then ran for her life along with family members.

Within half an hour, the house went beneath the cold embrace of the river.

"Only a week ago, I was living happily with my family in our house. Now we are homeless," Ajuba said as she shared her story.

"We could only save our lives, nothing else," she said.

Ajuba is not alone. Jamuna devoured around 100 homesteads in the village as its erosion has turned severe, leaving around 200 people homeless.

The ongoing floods are only worsening the situation.

Both river erosion and floods are interconnected processes, and they can influence each other in various ways.

River erosion can change the shape and course of a river, reducing its capacity to carry water and leading to floods. Conversely, floods increase water flow and speed, intensifying erosion of riverbanks and riverbeds.

"The river has reached my house and eroded away a portion of it. Soon it will engulf the remaining as the erosion is only worsening over time," said Omar Ali of Haat Pachil village.

The victims blamed the Bangladesh Water Development Board for the situation.

"Jamuna's erosion isn't anything new, it has been continuing for years, but what did the authority do about it? Nothing," alleged Abed Ali of the village.

Md Najmul Hossain, BWDB's sub-divisional engineer, said a Tk 650 crore project to protect a six-kilometre stretch is underway and expected to be completed by next year.

The erosion and flooding have also affected Koijuri and Jalalpur union under Shahzadpur upazila.

Md Kamruzzaman, the upazila's UNO, said they have listed 78 victims and planned to rehabilitate them soon.

Over 1,000 schools closed in Sylhet, Rangpur

STAR REPORT

Over 1,000 educational institutions remain closed in the Sylhet and Rangpur regions due to the ongoing flood.

In Sylhet, Sunamganj, and Moulvibazar districts, over 800 educational institutions remain closed. According to district primary education offices, 594 primary schools have been affected by the floods, with 356 in Sylhet, 102 in Sunamganj, and 136 in Moulvibazar. Many of these schools are either flooded or being used as shelters.

In addition, 211 higher secondary schools, colleges, and madrasas are also closed in these districts. This includes 73 in Sylhet, 80 in Sunamganj, and 58 in Moulvibazar.

The overall flood situation in the region has not improved significantly, with the Kushiyara river still overflowing at several points in Sylhet, Moulvibazar, and Habiganj.

The Surma is below the danger level at most points except Sylhet's Kanaighat Point, where it remains 48cm above the danger level.

The Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre of Bangladesh Water Development Board has reported that the water level in the northeastern region is gradually reducing, with a downtrend expected to continue for the next 72 hours.

Meanwhile, in Rangpur division, education for hundreds of primary school students has been severely disrupted due to recent floods.

In Gangachhara upazila, five primary schools have been closed for the past seven days as flash floods inundated low-lying areas due to rising water levels in the Teesta River. Additionally, 39 schools in Kurigram, Gaibandha, Rangpur, and Lalmonirhat districts have suffered structural damage from floods and river erosion.

According to the Rangpur Division Department of Primary Education, around 411 primary schools in 15 upazilas, including Kurigram, Gaibandha, and Lalmonirhat, have been affected by the floods. Fifty-one schools are currently serving as shelters.

Md Muzahidul Islam, acting divisional deputy director of the Rangpur Department of Primary Education, said education services in 376 schools in these three districts have been suspended for the past seven days due to flooding. Seven schools, three in Kurigram and four in Gaibandha, have been washed away by river erosion.

Efforts are underway to relocate vulnerable schools to prevent further erosion damage.

As floodwaters recede, preparations are being made to resume education in the affected schools, although the majority remain closed. Teachers have been instructed to cover their syllabuses quickly once schools reopen, he added.

In Pirgachha upazila, Char Gabura Primary School suspended classes after floodwaters washed away the connecting bank.

Headteacher Akram Hossain expressed concerns about the school's ongoing vulnerability to erosion.

Meanwhile, locals have noted repeated damage to schools near the Teesta, Dharla, Brahmaputra, and Dudhkumar rivers, with some schools being relocated multiple times due to erosion.

Sisters die from electrocution in flood-hit village

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

A family in Kurigram's Nageshwari upazila is devastated after two sisters were electrocuted by a submerged live cable during the recent floods.

The victims, Sumaiya Akhter, 12, and Masuma Akhter, 7, died instantly when they came into contact with a live electric cable while crossing floodwaters on a raft.

Their father, Shahadat Hossain, a 50-year-old sharecropper, and mother Amiran Begum, 45, are still in shock since the incident took place on Friday.

Their father, Shahadat Hossain, a 50-year-old sharecropper, and mother Amiran Begum, 45, are still in shock since the incident took place on Friday.

The family resides in Begunbari village, a remote area heavily affected by the swelling Dudhkumar river.

According to locals, the tragedy occurred as the sisters were on their way to their aunt's house, 400 metres away, when Sumaiya got entangled in the live cable from an irrigation pump. Masuma tried to save her, but got electrocuted herself.

Despite the family's plight, local authorities have yet to provide any support.

Make a 'plan to control immigration'

Ex-PM Blair lays out 'advice' to Britain's new leader

AFP, London

Former Labour prime minister Tony Blair made an early intervention in British politics yesterday after Keir Starmer's landslide election victory, urging him to have a "plan to control immigration".

Blair warned Starmer, who will visit Scotland on his second full day as prime minister, that the anti-immigration Reform UK Party also posed a challenge to Labour, not just the Conservative Party.

The Reform UK party, led by Brexit firebrand Nigel Farage, maximised the damage to the Conservatives at the election by splitting the right-wing vote.

It won five seats in the Westminster parliament and 14 percent of the vote, prompting Farage to warn that it will target Labour voters next.

In a piece headlined "My advice to Keir Starmer", Blair wrote in the Sunday Times that "all over the western world, traditional political parties are suffering disruption".

"Where the system allows new entrants to emerge, they are running riot everywhere. Look at France or Italy.

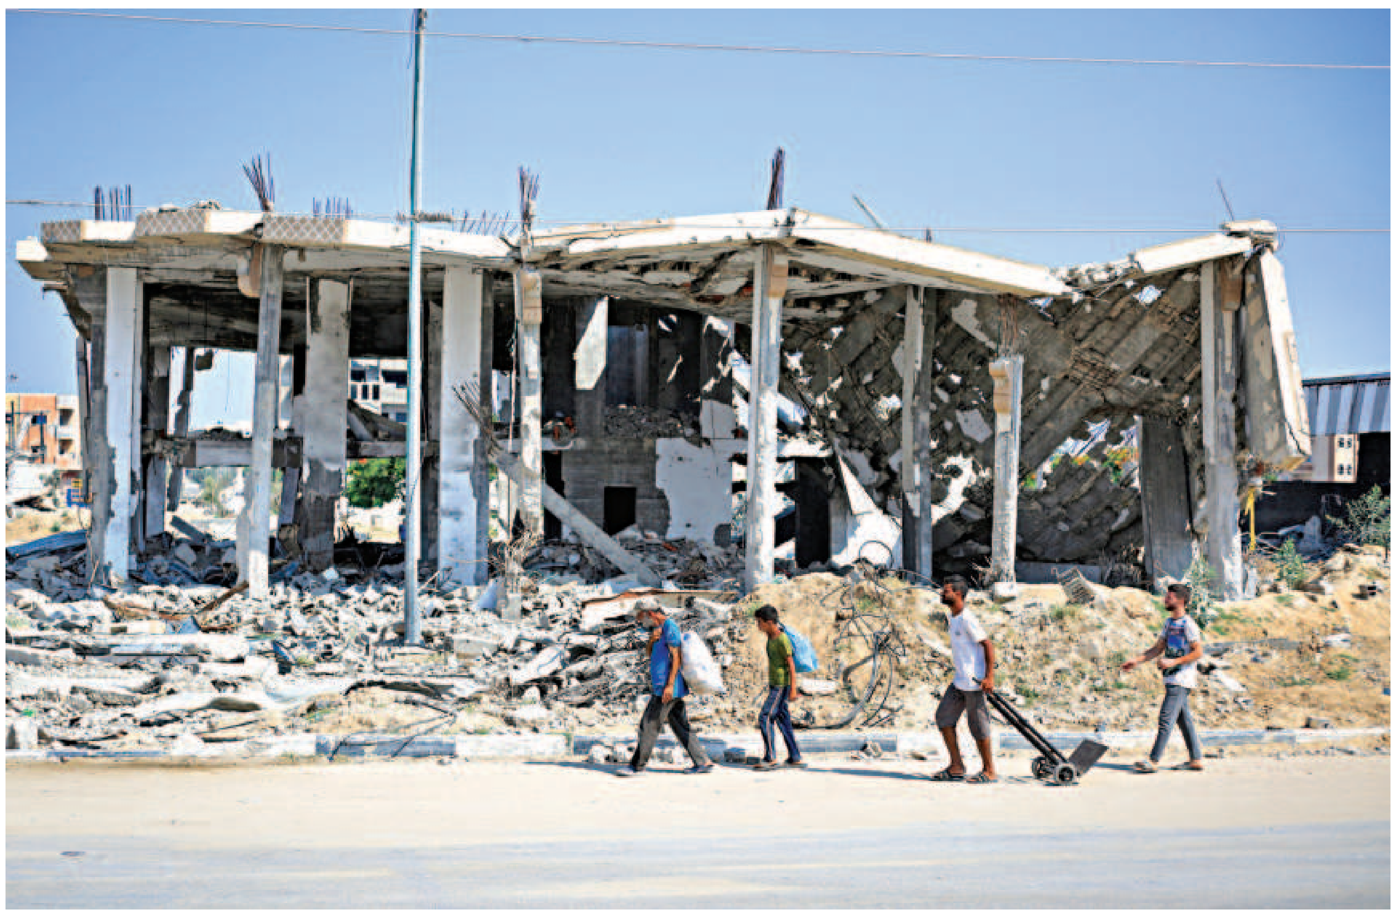
"We need a plan to control immigration. If we don't have rules, we get prejudices," he added.

Blair, the only Labour leader to lead his party to three consecutive election victories starting with his own landslide win in 1997, couched his "advice" in an article about harnessing the power of artificial intelligence (AI).

He said he believed digital ID technology offered the best solution to controlling irregular immigration, a key issue on the doorstep during the election campaign.

"We should move as the world is moving to digital ID. If not, new border controls will have to be highly effective," he wrote.

Other suggestions included "a tough new approach to law and order" due to the fact that "at present criminal elements are modernising faster than law enforcement".



Displaced Palestinians carry belongings as they walk in front of a destroyed building in Deir el-Balah in the central Gaza Strip yesterday. An Israeli air strike on a house in the town of Zawayda, in central Gaza, killed at least six people and wounded several others.

'Bulldozed and shelled'

Gaza farming sector ravaged by Israeli offensive now in its 10th month

AFP, Palestinian Territories

Tank tracks still fresh on his field in southern Gaza's coastal area of Al-Mawasi, Nedal Abu Jazar lamented the damage offensive has wrought on his trees and crops.

"Look at the destruction," the 39-year-old farmer told AFP, holding an uprooted tomato plant. He pointed to his greenhouse's metal frame and its white plastic sheeting strewn across the plot, inside an area designated a humanitarian zone by the Israeli army.

"People were sitting peacefully on their farmland ... and suddenly tanks arrived and fired at us, and then there were (air) strikes."

Abu Jazar said the Israeli operation in late June destroyed about 40 dunams (10 acres) of land and killed five labourers.

His is not an isolated case. Across Gaza, 57 percent of agricultural land has been damaged since the offensive began, according to a joint assessment published in June by the UN's agriculture and satellite imagery agencies, FAO and UNOSAT.

The damage threatens Gaza's food sovereignty, Matieu Henry of the Food and Agriculture Organization told AFP, because 30 percent of the Palestinian territory's food consumption comes from agricultural land.

"If almost 60 percent of the agricultural land has been damaged, this may have a significant impact in terms of food security and food supply."

The Gaza Strip exported $44.6 million worth of produce in 2022, mainly to the West Bank and Israel, with strawberries and tomatoes representing 60 percent of the total, according to FAO data.

Across Gaza, 57 pc of agricultural land has been damaged since the offensive began: FAO

The damage assessment on the agricultural land comes as the UN's hunger monitoring system estimated in June that 96 percent of Gaza faces high levels of acute food insecurity.

Contacted by AFP, the Israeli army said it "does not intentionally harm agricultural land".

In a statement, it said Hamas "often operates from within orchards, fields and agricultural land".

The impact is worse in the Palestinian territory's north, where 68 percent of agricultural land is damaged, although the southern area encompassing parts of Al-Mawasi has seen the most significant increase in recent months due to operations.

UNOSAT's Lars Bromley told AFP the damage is generally "due to the impact of activities such as heavy vehicle activity, bombing, shelling, and other conflict-related dynamics, which would be things like areas burning".

Near the southern city of Rafah, 34-year-old farmer Ibrahim Dheir feels helpless after the destruction of 20 dunams (five acres) of land he used to lease, and all his farming equipment with it.

"As soon as the Israeli bulldozers and tanks entered the area, they began bulldozing cultivated lands with various trees, including fruits, citrus, guava, as well as crops like spinach, molokhia (jute mallow), eggplant, squash, pumpkin and sunflower seedlings," he said, before listing more damage in a testimony of the area's past agricultural abundance.

Dheir, whose family exported its produce to the West Bank and Israel, now feels destitute. "We used to depend on agriculture for our livelihood day by day, but now there's no work or income."

Farmer Abu Mahmoud Za'arab also finds himself with "no source of income". The 60-year-old owns 15 dunams (3.7 acres) of land on which crops and fruit trees used to grow.

Biden back on campaign trail as pressure mounts

AFP, Washington

US President Joe Biden headed back out on the campaign trail yesterday, desperate to salvage his re-election bid as senior Democrats meet to discuss growing calls that he quit the White House race.

The 81-year-old Democrat kicked off a grueling week with two campaign rallies in the battleground state of Pennsylvania, before hosting the Nato leaders' summit in Washington. He will do so under an increasingly unforgiving spotlight, as pressure mounts for him to drop out after his disastrous debate against Donald Trump last month ignited panic over his age and fitness to serve another four years.

Biden has remained defiant, unequivocally declaring -- at a rally, to reporters and on social media -- that he is fit to serve, the only one who can defeat Trump, and staying in the race.

"I beat Trump in 2020. I'm going to beat him again in 2024," his campaign social media account posted later on Saturday.

But a televised interview with ABC News on Friday has failed to quell concerns. His next major test in the public eye will be a press conference scheduled for Thursday, during the Nato summit.

Eight killed in gun battles in India's Jammu & Kashmir

Two soldiers among dead

AFP, New Delhi

Two soldiers and six suspected militants were killed in two separate gun battles in Indian's Jammu and Kashmir (J&K), police said yesterday.

Kashmir police inspector general Vidhi Kumar Birdi told AFP that authorities in the disputed territory had "carried out two different operations" in villages in the Kulgam district.

Birdi said two members of the security forces had been killed, with clashes continuing in Modergram and Frisal Chinnigam villages.

"We have retrieved the bodies of two terrorists from Modergram, and four others from Frisal Chinnigam," said Birdi.

This is the latest incident in an uptick of attacks in the disputed territory.

India and Pakistan both claim Muslim-majority Kashmir in full and have fought three wars for control of the Himalayan region.

Rebel groups have waged an insurgency since 1989, demanding independence for the territory or its merger with Pakistan.

The conflict has killed tens of thousands of civilians, soldiers and rebels.

In June, nine Indian Hindu pilgrims were killed and dozens wounded when a gunman opened fire on a bus carrying them from a shrine in the southern Reasi area.

Dorival takes responsibility

card given to Uruguay's Nahitan Nandez in the 74th minute, Brazil failed to break the deadlock as the feisty encounter featuring a tournament-high 41 fouls finished 0-0 after 90 minutes to go to penalties.

In the shootout, Eder Militao and Douglas Luiz failed to find the net for Brazil, while Alisson Becker denied Uruguay defender Jose Maria Gimenez. However, Manuel Ugarte converted the winning spot kick to send Uruguay into the last four and Brazil to an early exit.

Brazil head home after earning just one win in the group stage before being defeated by Uruguay in the first knockout round.

The result also represents a downward turn for the Brazilians, who were finalists (2021) and champions (2019) in the two previous editions of the Copa.

"This is a process; in general, you come across difficulties when you're creating a team," said Dorival, whose team was without the suspended Vinícius Júnior in the quarterfinal.

"This was our first official tournament, and the result was far from what was expected ... our main objective now is to qualify for the World Cup."

Dorival, who has just eight games under his belt, defended his players after they only recently wrapped up their club campaigns before the competition.

"Many of them joined us after long seasons," Dorival said. "Considering what we saw at the training sessions and every day, I think we can still grow as a team ... many people might not understand, things are like this when you're creating a team from scratch. There are ups and downs in football."

Voter turnout high

through the European Union at a time when populist parties are strengthening support across the continent.

Voting was due to close at 6:00 pm in towns and small cities and 8:00 pm in bigger cities. Pollsters was due to deliver initial projections based on early counts from a sample of voting stations at 8:00 pm.

Macron called the snap election after his ticket was trounced by the RN in European Parliament elections last month, a move apparently aimed at wrong-footing his rivals in a legislative election. The vote is pitting a centrist government against opposition movements from the left and far right.

"The country is facing three radically opposed views of society," said Olivier Grisal, a retiree, as he walked towards his polling site in the middle-class town of Conflans Sainte-Honorine, west of Paris, with his wife.

Opinion polls forecast Marine Le Pen's RN will emerge the dominant force as voters punish Macron over a cost of living crisis and being out of touch with the hardships people face.

However, the RN is seen failing to reach the 289-seat target that would outright hand Le Pen's 28-year-old protégé Jordan Bardella the prime minister's job with a working majority.

The far right's projected margin of victory has narrowed since Macron's centrist Together alliance and the left-wing New Popular Front (NPF) pulled scores of candidates from three-way races in the second round in a bid to unify the anti-RN vote.

"France is on the cliff-edge and we don't know if we're going to jump," Raphael Glucksmann, a member of the European Parliament who led France's leftist ticket in last month's European vote, told France Inter radio last week.

Political violence surged during the three-week campaign. Interior Minister Gerald Darmanin has said authorities recorded more than 50 physical assaults on candidates and campaigners.

Some luxury boutiques along the Champs Elysees boulevard, including the Louis Vuitton store, barricaded windows and Darmanin said he was deploying 30,000 police amid concerns of violent protests should the far right win.

A longtime pariah for many due to its history of racism and antisemitism, the RN has broadened its support beyond its traditional base along the Mediterranean coast and the de-industrialised north, tapping into voter anger at Macron over straitened household budgets, security, and immigration worries.

person was seriously wounded, police said. Hezbollah said it had fired rockets at an army base.

In Gaza, Palestinian health officials said at least 15 people were killed in separate Israeli military strikes yesterday. An Israeli airstrike in Gaza City killed the Hamas-appointed deputy minister of labour in the Palestinian enclave, Hamas media reported.

Another air strike on a house in the town of Zawayda, in central Gaza, killed at least six people and wounded several others, while six others were killed in an air strike on a house in western Gaza.

Tanks deepened their raids in central and northern areas of Rafah on the southern border with Egypt. Health officials there said they had recovered three bodies of Palestinians killed by Israeli fire in the eastern part of the city.

Electrocution kills five

Those who were in the chariot jumped from it to save themselves," he said.

"We rescued 20 injured people from the spot and hospitalised them. Four of them died at the Shaheed Ziaur Rahman Medical College Hospital and one at the Mohammed Ali Hospital," Arup told The Daily Star.

Contacted, Khorajita Krishna Das, principal of ISKON's Bogura chapter, said, "We tried to move the procession very carefully. When the chariot came near the electric wire, we warned the devotees so that they lower the dome. But they could not hear us due to noise."

Abdul Wadud, deputy director of the Shaheed Ziaur Rahman Medical College Hospital, told The Daily Star that four died at the hospital as of filing of this report around 11:00pm and 38 others were undergoing treatment there. Two of the injured were in the ICU, he said.

Shafiq Amin Kajal, resident medical officer of the Mohammed Ali Hospital, said four people were admitted there, of them Joly Rani, 35, died.

In a statement last night, Bangladesh Puja Udjapan Parishad expressed deep shock and conveyed condolences to the bereaved family members.

Its leaders called upon the government to take effective measures for treatment of the wounded.

The local administration formed a five-member committee to investigate the incident and asked it to submit the report within 10 working days.

Quota protests bring capital to a standstill from underdeveloped districts; 5 percent for members of indigenous communities and 1 percent for persons with physical disabilities.

"With due respect to the prime minister, we want to say that the students have provided the logic for the quota reform movement in 2018," said DU student Nahid Islam, one of the protest organisers under the banner of "student movement against discrimination".

The country's constitution speaks of equality for all and that goes against the quota system, he said.

"There is no point in showing us court -- we are fighting in favour of the constitution. The prime minister herself gave the verdict in favour of the quota cancellation in parliament," he said, adding that the protests will continue indefinitely.

Yesterday, several thousands college and university students gathered in front of the Dhaka University Central Library around 3:00pm in line with their earlier announcement of holding "Bangla Blockade".

They blocked the Shahbagh intersection at about 3:50pm and lifted the blockade around 8:00pm. Many protesters moved towards the Banglamotor and Sonargaon intersections at 6:00pm. They left Sonargaon intersection at about 6:50pm and Banglamotor around 7:00pm and returned to Shahbagh.

A section of DU students first blocked the Chankharpul intersection near Mayor Hanif Flyover around 3:30pm. The blocked the on and off ramp of the flyover for about four hours.

Another group of protestors also blocked the Science Lab intersection.

Meanwhile, students of Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University blocked a street near their university in the capital's Agargaon around 3:45pm, said Ahad Ali, officer-in-charge of Sher-e-Bangla Police Station.

Student also blocked the Dhaka-Chattogram, Dhaka-Aricha, Chattogram-Khagrachhari, Barishal-Kuakata and Dinajpur-Dhaka highways.

Hundreds of students of Jahangirnagar University blocked the Dhaka-Aricha highway near the campus for around two hours from 11:00am.

The protest caused a six-kilometre tailback on the highway, said AFM Sayeed, the officer-in-charge of Ashulia Police Station.

Many passengers were stuck for hours in a six-kilometre-long tailback in Kotbari crossing area of the Dhaka-Chattogram highway as the protestors from Cumilla University kept the highway blocked for four hours from 4:00pm.

Thousands of students of the University of Chittagong blocked the Chattogram-Khagrachhari highway for about two hours from around 4:00pm.

"If the talented people are not evaluated properly, then there will be a brain drain," said Mubarak Hossain, a student at the University of Chittagong's department of economics.

Hundreds of students from Barishal University kept the Barishal-Kuakata highway blocked for more than three-and-a-half hours from 11:30am, creating tailbacks on both sides of the highway.

Local and long-distance buses could not depart Nathullabad due to the protest, said Arichul Haque, the officer-in-charge of Kotwali Police Station.

Students from Hajee Mohammad Danesh Science and Technology University (HSTU) in Dinajpur blocked the Dinajpur-Dhaka highway for an hour from 11:00am, leaving hundreds of vehicles stuck.

Meanwhile, Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhury yesterday said it would not be appropriate for him to comment on the protest against the quota system as it is a sub-judice matter.

"Commenting on the matter will be tantamount to contempt of court. Any citizen of Bangladesh can comment on the street. But it is not possible to comment from a responsible place in government," he said.

The government is closely monitoring the ongoing movements of the university teachers and the students against a new pension scheme and quota in government jobs, said Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader, also the road transport and bridges minister, while talking to reporters at the secretariat.

BTI THE DAILY STAR STELLAR WOMEN-2023

Glimpses of Brilliance

bti The Daily Star
STELLAR WOMEN
Spark Your Inner Power

In Bangladesh, women are forging paths of success by harnessing their inner strength to confront and overcome societal challenges. These women exemplify resilience and determination, breaking traditional roles and excelling in various sectors. Their stories of triumph not only inspire but also redefine societal norms, paving the way for broader empowerment and equality. The Daily Star and building technology and ideas ltd (bti) joined forces to launch the initiative 'Stellar Women – Spark Your Inner Power' to recognize these inspiring women. After successful completion of season 1, "bti The Daily Star Stellar Women 2023" Gala was held on June 8, 2024, at the banquet hall of Kurmitola Golf Club in the capital. At the event, twelve outstanding women from 12 different sectors in Bangladesh were honored for their exceptional accomplishments in fields ranging from development sector and technology to architecture, education, culture, corporate, agriculture, sports, writing, start-up & entrepreneurship, social welfare, and journalism. The Honorable Minister of Housing and Public Works, R.A.M. Obaidul Muktadir Chowdhury, graced the event as the chief guest.

"Now, we see that 60 percent of attendees in village high schools and colleges are women. This didn't happen overnight. The government provided various facilities to women, offered incentives and implemented numerous measures that led to their enormous empowerment."

R.A.M. OBAIDUL MUKTADIR CHOWDHURY,
Minister of Housing and Public Works

"The main theme of this whole effort is to highlight the brilliant roles that women are playing in the country. The leadership emerging at practical, enterprise, company, and small business levels is setting a trend and contributing significantly to the nation's progress."

MAHFUZ ANAM,
Editor and Publisher of
The Daily Star

"Through this initiative, we're honouring those women who've been working for the society and having a profound impact in building the nation, despite facing enormous challenges. The stories of these stellar women and their determination will inspire and empower other women in the society."

FR KHAN,
Managing Director of bti

"bti has unwavering commitment towards women empowerment and with this aim bti has initiated 'bti The Daily Star Stellar Women' for those who have enormous contribution to the society in different sectors, including education, development sector, architecture, agriculture and technology."

CEO of bti

SHAMSIN AHMED

Shamsin Ahmed, the visionary founder of Identity Inclusion, was inspired by a loved one's struggle with psychosocial issues, and the subsequent bias they faced. Identity Inclusion focuses on training youth to provide psychosocial support and advocate for more inclusivity in all spheres. Over the past years, Shamsin has successfully assembled a team of social workers to assist people with severe mental illnesses and disabilities. The organization promotes the integration of individuals with special needs into mainstream society. Additionally, Shamsin offers consultancy services for disability inclusion. Through her dedicated efforts, she strives to reshape societal systems and policies, paving the way for a more inclusive world.

TASFIA TASBIN

Tasfia Tasbin co-founded markopolo.ai with her friend Rubaiyat during the COVID-19 pandemic to provide digital marketing solutions for entrepreneurs. During the early stages, they partnered with some digital marketing agencies to establish their business. Their innovative product gained global recognition after being showcased at one of the world's largest product exhibitions.

Currently, markopolo.ai operates in 31 countries, offering data-driven and automated digital marketing solutions that empower small businesses. Tasfia notes that many of her customers are unaware that the product is entirely developed in Bangladesh. Her contributions to the industry have earned her a spot on Forbes' 30 Under 30 list and a BIG win in 2023.

NAZLI HUSSAIN

Nazli Hussain completed her education at BUET and honed her skills as a Project Manager at the British Council. With over five years of experience in architectural projects for banks, Nazli gained invaluable insights into Bangladesh's construction sector. She attributes her practical experience to her studies as pivotal in mastering the intricacies of architecture.

Nazli's passion for sustainability led her to earn LEED accreditation from the U.S. Green Building Council while pursuing studies in sustainability. She proudly holds the distinction of being the country's first LEED Accredited Professional and serves as the Founder and architect at Praxis Architects.

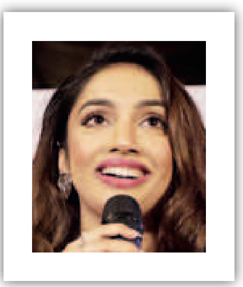
Her journey underscores a commitment to integrating sustainability into architectural practices, setting a profound example in the field.

SADIA JAFRIN

Sadia Jafrin, a pharmacy graduate, embarked on a transformative journey in 2019 when she founded the 'Grow Your Reader' Foundation. Driven by a desire to make a more significant impact on society beyond her career in pharmaceuticals, Sadia's foundation has become a beacon of educational empowerment.

Recognized as an Acumen fellow in 2022 and a Top 100 Leader in Education, Sadia also serves as a Young Leader of the Queen's Commonwealth Trust, advocating for improved education for underprivileged children. The 'Grow Your Reader' Foundation has pioneered initiatives such as a mobile library (Wheels of Wisdom), Book Garage, reading circles (online book library) , and a dedicated school called 'School er Baire Shikkha', in Jessore.

RIDY SHEIKH



Ridy Sheikh, born and brought up in Moscow, has maintained a strong bond with her Bangladeshi heritage due to her mother. Her passion for dance ignited at the tender age of 5 with Bangladeshi folk dance, marking the beginning of a lifelong journey in the arts. By 15, she was already serving as a junior choreographer at her school, eventually gaining recognition through her participation in 'So You Think You Can Dance', Ukraine edition. Today, Ridy stands as the founder and choreographer of Starbase Dance Studio and has also ventured into the world of fashion with her brand, Gemini. She is among Bangladesh's eight content creators selected by UNDP Bangladesh to promote Sustainable Development Goals, emphasizing clean energy and environmental conservation.

SHAMIMA AKHTER

Shamima Akhter's journey is a testament to her unwavering passion for mountaineering and her bold decision to transition from a successful 8-year NGO career to corporate leadership.

Starting her career as a Communication Officer at the UN, Shamima swiftly progressed to managing USAID projects before transitioning to corporate roles at Qubee and Coca-Cola. Her ascent culminated in becoming the first Bangladeshi female director at Coca-Cola and she now holds the prestigious position of Director of Corporate Affairs, Partnerships, and Communications at Unilever Bangladesh Limited. Shamima's tenure at Unilever highlights her dedication to overcoming gender biases and fostering a gender-equitable workplace. Her story inspires others to challenge norms and forge paths to success in male-dominated industries.

DR. SAKINA KHANAM

Dr. Sakina Khanam, Principal Scientific Officer at BINA (Bangladesh Institute of Nuclear Agriculture), became the Stellar Woman 2023 in Agriculture for being the leader of the team that spearheaded the development of the BINA-25 rice variety. Her keen awareness of climate related threats to agriculture motivates her quest for sustainable crop cultivation methods, crucial for regions grappling with saline soils and land scarcity. Currently, Dr. Sakina focuses on combating food insecurity in remote Bangladesh by cultivating climate resilient strains of rice, peanuts, jute, and mung beans with her team. Her pioneering efforts not only aim to boost crop yields but also reduce the nation's reliance on imports. Dr. Sakina's dedication and groundbreaking achievements in agriculture positioned her as an inspiring figure for aspiring Bangladeshi women.

SALMA AKTER MONE

Salma Akter Mone's passion for football, her favorite sport, led her to practice late at night on the streets of Netrokona, where facilities for women's sports were scarce and limited. Her breakthrough came in grade 9 when her coach recognized her talent, paving the way for her to finally play on the fields and enroll in referee courses. In 2021, Salma achieved her dream of becoming a FIFA assistant referee. By 2023, she became the first Bangladeshi female AFC Elite Assistant Referee. Salma's journey exemplifies her resilience, illustrating how perseverance and familial support can help someone overcome barriers and achieve success in professional sports.

LUTFUNNAHAR PIKI

Lutfunnahar Piki embarked on a remarkable journey from becoming an Assistant Commissioner of Taxes to achieving her PhD. Her creative spirit, rekindled by her husband's encouragement, culminated in the publication of her debut novel "Otopor" in 2019, marking a significant milestone in her literary career. Piki's story is an evidence to the timeless nature of creativity, demonstrating that it can flourish at any stage of life. Her pursuits in literature began during her HSC level, when she wrote columns for 'Torun Kontho' in 'The Daily Ittefaq'. Currently serving as Additional Commissioner of Taxes at the National Board of Revenue, Piki continues to inspire with her scholarly achievements and professional dedication.

MONOSHITA AYRUANI

Monoshita Ayruani boldly challenged societal taboos surrounding women's undergarments by fostering open conversations about diversity and consulting on undergarment sizes. Recognizing Bangladesh's prowess in exporting lingerie abroad but the absence of quality options for local women, she founded SHAPE Industries Limited to provide affordable and diverse innerwear for all body types. What began with a team of 5 has grown to employ 12 individuals, driven by Monoshita's vision to empower women through inclusive fashion. SHAPE Industries not only meets a market need but also champions body positivity and dismantles stereotypes associated with lingerie, marking a transformative shift in Bangladesh's apparel sector towards inclusivity and empowering choices in women's innerwear.

TAWHIDA SHIROPA

Starting with personal funds, Tawhida Shiropa founded 'Moner Bondhu' to address mental health needs, a cause close to her heart. Overcoming initial hurdles, including securing grants, Tawhida's journey is a testament to her dedication. Her initiative initially targeted the RMG sector and its workers, organizing 5 to 7 successful programs before the pandemic.

Despite challenges posed by COVID-19, Moner Bondhu continued its work, contributing to Tawhida earning international acclaim. The Tommy Hilfiger Fashion Frontier Award further bolstered her motivation, recognizing her year-long efforts and commitment to improving mental health access in Bangladesh. Tawhida Shiropa's transformation from journalist to mental health entrepreneur underscores her impact in reshaping mental healthcare accessibility nationwide.

ROZINA ISLAM

Rozina Islam, now a Senior Reporter at Prothom Alo, started working with BRAC after her HSC exams. Even after taking a gap, she persisted in her career path, eventually contributing to 'Ajker Kagoj,' where she wrote for the business page. Her scholarship in Delhi in 2005 played a pivotal role in shaping her journalism career. Rozina's steadfast dedication to exposing corruption earned her the prestigious 'Anti- Corruption Champions' Award from the US Department of State in 2022. The previous year, she was honored with the 'Free Press Award' in Amsterdam, recognizing her complete dedication to journalism amidst challenging circumstances.

Govt should reform the quota system

Public service recruitment should be based primarily on merit

The revival of the student movement for reformation of the quota system in public service was wholly predictable, given the way the government had reacted to the previous movement in 2018. Since, in totality, 55 percent of government jobs used to be reserved under the quota system—including 30 percent for freedom fighters' children and grandchildren—the protesters had legitimate grounds to demand a revaluation of the system. The glaring lack of good jobs in the country and the need to ensure that the majority of public-sector recruits enter the service on merit warrant such a demand.

During the initial stages of the 2018 movement, the government refused to have an open dialogue with the protesters, labelling them as being involved with vague conspiracies. Once the students refused to budge from their position, we saw how Chhatra League cadres unleashed severe beatings upon protesters, with law enforcers often acting as bystanders. When the protesters still refused to back down, the government decided to do away with all quotas altogether—which the protesters had never asked for. The decision was regressive in nature given that it failed to reserve any seats for marginalised groups that are necessary for their upliftment.

On June 5, 2024, the High Court declared the circular that cancelled the quota system as illegal. After the government appealed the ruling and the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court upheld the HC directive, students once again were forced to launch a movement. While we cannot condone the blockades being implemented by protesters, we do find their demands rooted in logic. Reserving 30 percent of government jobs for the children and even grandchildren of freedom fighters goes against the spirit of our independence. Our valiant freedom fighters laid down their lives for equality; and although we honour their memory and hold the deepest respect for them, continuing to provide such a huge number of seats for their grandchildren makes little sense at present.

But that's not all. The government needs to reevaluate—as it should have the last time around—the whole quota system. We have heard previously that many of the seats reserved for marginalised groups used to remain vacant, another fault line in the erstwhile quota system. So, the government should involve all stakeholders in dialogue to find a solution that suits the needs of our time. Neither doing away with all quotas, nor simply continuing with the previous quota numbers, are appropriate solutions. The government needs to figure out suitable quota figures for marginalised groups, while reserving the majority of seats for meritorious students. We cannot steer the nation towards greater heights without having efficient and committed public servants at the helm.

Another public project gone awry

Abysmal pace of progress in hi-tech parks project raises questions

It is totally unacceptable that a project that was slated for completion in three years has achieved only 14.34 percent of physical progress after seven years. This glacial and, frankly, ridiculous pace of work has been noticed in an undertaking meant to build 12 hi-tech parks in various districts. Considering its nature, you would have thought a government so intent on bringing about the country's digital transformation would take it more seriously, especially when most of the budget is being borrowed from outside the country, indicating its significance. But this is how the project has ended up, like so many others before it, according to a report citing findings of the Implementation Monitoring and Evaluation Division (IMED).

The government initiated the project in April 2017, with the strategically placed hi-tech parks envisioned to prepare the nation for the future by fostering a skilled workforce in the information technology sector. It was originally scheduled to be complete by June 2020, but has since seen its deadline extended multiple times. The latest proposal is asking for a 2027 deadline, and an increase from the original budget of Tk 1,796 crore to Tk 2,000 crore. Even though project authorities claim more progress than shown by the IMED, current physical progress still varies widely among the parks, with some barely even started.

How will the authorities justify this abysmal pace of work? As per our report, it has been attributed to various financial and logistical issues, including insufficient allocations, COVID-19 pandemic, land acquisition issues, etc. But this is hardly convincing. Those behind the project should have accounted for potential challenges and have contingency strategies in place to deal with them. A proper feasibility study would have resolved many of the issues that arose. Clearly, what has really slowed the progress is systemic neglect and mismanagement which, combined with a lack of accountability for public officials, have undone so many projects before. The economic implications of such cost and time overruns cannot be stressed enough.

The hi-tech parks project was meant to be a cornerstone of Bangladesh's vision for a digital future. Instead, it has become a cautionary tale of how ambitious plans can falter without effective execution. We urge the authorities to put their foot on the accelerator and resolve all issues preventing the timely execution of this project.

What options are left for us to fight unbridled corruption?

THE OVERTON WINDOW

Eresh Omar Jamal
is deputy head of editorial at The Daily Star. His X handle is @EreshOmarJamal.

ERESH OMAR JAMAL

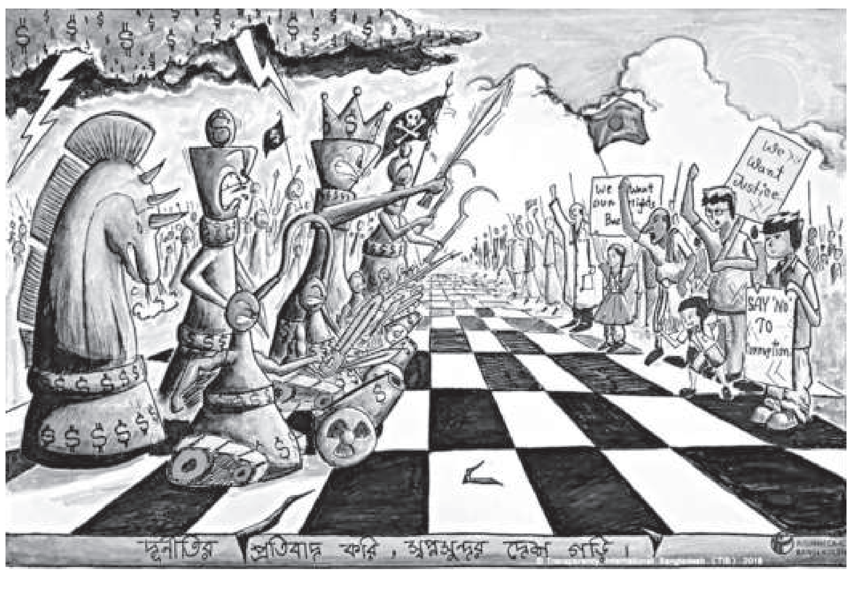
In recent times, allegations of serious corruption against a number of government officials have come to light. From former army chief Aziz Ahmed, former IGP and Rab chief Benazir Ahmed, and former Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) Commissioner Asaduzzaman Mia and his family members, to public servants working in much lower positions in the government, corruption seems to have spread its tentacles across the country's public service sector.

During the Covid pandemic, we learnt how a driver of the Directorate General of Health Service (DGHS) named Abdul Malek acquired crores of taka through corruption. At the same time, graft allegations emerged against former DGHS chief Abul Kalam Azad as well. These two stories illustrate how corruption has become institutionalised from the very top to the very bottom echelons of our government.

Another recent case of sensational corruption involves a National Board of Revenue (NBR) official named Md Matiur Rahman, and his wife Laila Kaniz Lucky, chairman of Narsingdi's Raipura Upazila Parishad. What's interesting about their case is how they came to light. Matiur's corruption was revealed only after a video of Matiur's son buying a goat at Tk 15 lakh for Eid-ul-Azha went viral. Ironically, even the sellers of the goat were allegedly involved in corruption in the selling process as well as in other operations. Matiur's wife Lucky even submitted her tax files to the Election Commission (EC) before the upazila parishad polls earlier this year. But the commission failed to unearth the corruption of Lucky and her family at that time.

This brings into question how well our public institutions are doing in terms of identifying and addressing corruption. How is it that the EC failed to notice that Lucky had understated her wealth? In fact, prior to the last national election, this newspaper had reported how this election witnessed the highest number of candidates with movable or liquid assets of Tk 1 crore or more. A number of ministers saw their wealth increase by more than a few thousand percent. And the EC showed no curiosity as to how these ministers managed to multiply their wealth by such absurd amounts. Are they just that good at business and investment? If they are such financial geniuses, why isn't our economy doing as well under their leadership?

And the same absurd wealth increase was seen among candidates during the upazila parishad polls. Again, the EC showed the least bit of interest to find out how these candidates managed to acquire such massive wealth, similar to the national election candidates.



What can ordinary citizens do to put a stop to the rampant corruption taking place in our government institutions? SOURCE: TIB

Far from addressing corruption, our public institutions seem to be doing the opposite. For example, right after the reports of alleged corruption concerning former law enforcement high-ups came out, the Bangladesh Police Service Association (BPSA) released a statement which seemingly threatened the media against reporting on corruption by law enforcers. Without being able to identify a single victim who was maligned by the media reports, the BPSA labelled the reports as "partial, motivated, exaggerated, and misleading."

The BPSA also claimed that the reports were "tarnishing the police's image," while ignoring the damage done by the alleged corruption of its former members. Such claims have become the go-to tactic whenever allegations of corruption are raised. For example, Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader recently alleged—as many of his party members had previously done—that corruption accusations were being brought forth to portray AL as a corrupt party. Making such claims, without verifying the authenticity of the allegations, can often be seen as the most commonly used tactic in kleptocracies around the world.

And this is what the Opposition Leader and Jatiya Party Chairman GM Quader recently pointed out in parliament: that corruption, at the scale that it is happening, has become the biggest threat to our economy. Quader rightly said that a wealthy circle has emerged comprising corrupt individuals, loan defaulters, and money launderers; in other words, we are being ruled by a kleptocratic and corrupt elite. And this has come about as a result of lack of accountability and governance failures.

Awami League MP AFM Bahauddin Nasim also rightly spoke about the fact that government bodies are doing the nation a huge disservice by coming to the defence of the corrupt. But the fact remains that it is his party that has weakened the law when it comes to identifying and preventing corruption by public servants—through the Government Services Act, 2018, for example, which even AL leader and lawmaker Mahbubul Alam Hanif said could be "considered a law to protect criminals."

Through an amendment to the Government Servants (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, 1985, the authorities in 2018 included "reprimand" as a penalty for corruption that has been proven through investigations. Before this amendment, the punishment was either "compulsory retirement," "removal from service" or "dismissal from service." To simply "reprimand" a public servant who has been found to be involved in corruption, while allowing them to remain in "service," is a slap in the public's face. And since 2018, numerous public servants proven to be involved in corruption have continued to remain in service due to this amendment, with only a slap on the wrist.

And it's not only the AL, but the BNP too, which through the 2002 amendment to the Government Servant (Conduct) Rules, 1979 relaxed the anti-graft rules for public servants. This only demonstrates the mindset of our political class in general: their primary motivation is to curry favour from public servants, rather than ensure transparency and accountability in public service for the sake of the public.

The only way to change this mindset is to get honest politicians into positions of power and hold to account those who are not truly serving the people. Unfortunately, all the mechanisms meant to do so seem to have been weakened, if not completely destroyed, one after another in recent decades. That's why the AL managed to make such an amendment to the public service rules, which can easily be argued to have breached Article 20 (2) of the constitution, while no other branch of government stepped in to prevent it.

So, ordinary citizens have only two options now: 1) allow corruption to run rampant and cost them in every sphere of life as a result; or 2) form mass movements that are strong enough to force politicians, public servants and other government authorities to not only rectify the legal issues that they have created, but enforce them to the letter, which will automatically deter government employees from getting involved in corruption.

Bangladesh's way forward to biodiversity conservation is independent consultant working on environment, climate change, and research system and visiting research fellow at the University of Liberal Arts Bangladesh (ULAB). He can be reached at hmirfanullah@outlook.com.

Dr Haseeb Md Irfanullah

HASEEB MD IRFANULLAH

The global biodiversity is in a bad shape and a couple of numbers can confirm that: 12.5 percent of the world's eight million species will be lost forever in the next few decades; and between 1970 and 2020, big animals' numbers reduced by 68 percent. For Bangladesh, the numbers are not any better. Two studies led by International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN), Bangladesh and the Forest Department, and supported by the World Bank, showed that 24 percent animal species (data of 2015) and 39.4 percent of plant species (data of 2023) of the country will be extinct soon, if no measures are taken to save them.

Although these numbers are relatively recent, biodiversity loss was recognised as a problem much earlier. That's why the Convention on Biological Diversity was adopted by the world in 1992, the 2010 Biodiversity Targets were set in 2002, the Strategic Plan for Biodiversity (2011-2020) and Aichi Biodiversity Targets were adopted in 2010, and in 2015, the world agreed upon the 14th and the 15th Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) aiming at biodiversity conservation.

In the same vein, in December 2022 in a meeting in Montreal, Canada, the countries adopted the Kunming-Montreal Global Biodiversity Framework to save the world's remaining biodiversity by 2050. This most ambitious-ever global plan to conserve biodiversity is also known as the "Biodiversity Plan" and has two main parts. The first part has four global goals to be achieved by 2050—protection and restoration of biodiversity, prosperity with nature, fair sharing of the benefits from biodiversity, and enhanced investment and collaboration. The second part includes 23 global targets to be achieved by 2030. The first eight targets refer to reducing threats to biodiversity, the next five talk about sustainable use and benefit-sharing to meet people's needs and the final 10 outline different tools and solutions for implementation and mainstreaming biodiversity conservation.

While many of these targets are qualitative in nature, some have ambitious numbers to fulfil. For example, Targets 2 and 3 talk about restoring 30 percent degraded ecosystems and conserving another 30 percent of diverse ecosystems, respectively. Target 18 wants to reduce harmful incentives every year by at least $500 billion, while every year $200 billion should be allocated for biodiversity from a wide range of sources as envisaged by Target 19.

I believe Bangladesh is already a part of this new global plan. Our recent legal instruments, for example, Ecologically Critical Area (ECA) Management Rule, 2016, Protected Area (PA) Management Rule, 2017, and Bangladesh Biodiversity, Act 2017, are in line with the Biodiversity Plan, and these also have provisions to create new funds for conservation actions. Species conservation action plans, such as those on vultures (2016-2025), gharials (2016-2015), tigers (2018-2027), elephants (2018-2027), dolphins (2021-2030), and sharks and rays (2023-2033), also indicate our progress in conservation planning. Numerous projects implemented since late 1990s underscore Bangladesh's participatory and co-management experience—one of the oldest and latest examples are Management of Aquatic Ecosystem through Community Husbandry (1998-2003) and Protibesh (2021-2026) projects, respectively.

I also think, in some cases, Bangladesh exceeds the Biodiversity Plan's expectations. In 2011, the 15th Amendment of the Bangladesh Constitution confirmed that preservation of biodiversity is the state's responsibility. In 2019, Bangladesh Parliament unanimously adopted a motion on "Planetary Emergency" bringing biodiversity loss and climate emergency together. In the same line, the Mujib Climate Prosperity Plan (2022-2041) and the National Adaptation Plan (NAP2050, 2023-2050) have integrated biodiversity conservation and climate change actions for dual benefits.

To take the Biodiversity Plan forward over the next decade or so, Bangladesh could take three specific actions. First, we need to contextualise it in our own way. The Department of Environment and environment ministry are currently updating the National Biodiversity Strategy and Action Plan (NBSAP), which should align with country's recently adopted Green and Climate Resilient Development Policy. It should mainstream our 30 years' experience of co-management of ecosystems by strongly adopting the ECA and PA Rules in all projects in and around biodiversity-rich areas. To maximise our financial resource utilisation, we should blend our climate and conservation actions. As the NAP2050 has strongly adopted Nature-based Solutions (NbS), the updated NBSAP should appreciate the climate emergency.

Second, Bangladesh should adopt evidence-guided policy making. To do that, it can establish a conservation portal for Bangladesh managed by the Forest Department to map out the portfolios of all recent-past and on-going conservation projects. In this way, we will know what to fund, where to fund, and how to fund, in real time. Finally, we need sustainable financing for conservation. By using the experience of climate budget and gender budget, the government should prepare a conservation budget through a collaboration between finance and environment ministries. Similar to Bangladesh Climate Fiscal Framework, (2020), they should also prepare Bangladesh Conservation Fiscal Framework to guide the country's conservation funding. After all, national finance will be crucial for implementing the updated NBSAP.

The pension debate

Teachers of 35 public universities across the country have launched a simultaneous strike since July 1, protesting their mandatory inclusion in the universal pension scheme and putting forth their own set of demands. What are those demands, and what do others think of the protest? Four stakeholders share their views with The Daily Star.

The new pension scheme creates further discrimination is chairman at the Department of Sociology in the University of Dhaka.

Dr Zeenat Huda

When a teacher goes to retirement at the age of 65, it is important that they get a one-time allowance to secure their future and that of their children. The new universal pension scheme does not have any provision for the teachers to receive this amount upon retirement. Another huge issue is the age of retirement. Up until now, the retirement age was 65. The new pension scheme aims to make it 59, creating a gap of six long years. Since we started protesting, there have been government press releases saying that it would remain 65 for university teachers, even though the government-mandated retirement age would be 59. Does this not create discrimination, the very thing they wanted to remove with the universal pension scheme?

Moreover, the University of Dhaka is an autonomous institution, like many other universities and institutes in the country. The government cannot force an autonomous institution to participate in a universal pension scheme without dialogue or any sort of consultation.

The scheme also requires us to participate in a contributory fund, where we have to deposit Tk 5,000 out of our monthly salaries. Does it make sense for a newly appointed lecturer in a university, who gets Tk 22,000-30,000 per month in remuneration, to deposit Tk 5,000 each month out of their salaries? What are they left with? How will they cover their living expenses?

In the existing system, the nominee of a university teacher is also eligible for a life-long pension. In the new scheme, if a university teacher passes away at the age of 75, their nominees will not be eligible for pension benefits. They are left with little to nothing. The new scheme will only make teachers and their dependents more financially vulnerable. This cannot be the characteristic of a universal pension scheme, where one group is left off worse to supposedly benefit another group. This is discriminatory, to say the least.

We never wanted things to get this far where we had to stop taking classes. Students are our first and foremost priority. We have been protesting this move ever since the universal pension scheme was announced. We organised teachers from other universities and submitted a compiled, written document of our displeasure with this new scheme to the education ministry. We also prepared an evaluation report comparing the existing scheme to the new one, with the help of expert economists and business school teachers. As the general secretary of the teachers' association, I submitted the report to the ministry on behalf of all my colleagues. There have been no follow-ups on those reports.

When nothing worked, we started with two-hour strikes, eventually moving to half-day and full-day strikes. We did not start protesting all of a sudden, whereas the finance ministry issued the notice for the new pension scheme on March 13 without any consultation with the stakeholders. We only scaled up our protests after we were left with no other options.

We have not held our students hostage in this situation; rather, we have been held hostage by the finance ministry. Our students will take on the roles of teachers in the future. The new scheme will not affect the existing teachers as much as it will affect the future generation of faculty members. So this is a battle we are fighting to protect our successors, our students who will take on our responsibilities in the near future.

Universal pension scheme aimed at helping people

Md Golam Mostofa
is a member of the National Pension Authority under the Finance Division.

Firstly, the goal of the universal pension scheme is to bring all the citizens of Bangladesh under its coverage. Currently, government and independent bodies provide pensions, but there is no specific funds allocated for them. Instead, every year, a specific amount is reserved in the budget for paying pension. As the number of employees and related expenses increase, the budget allocation for pension also increases. This is why the government has decided to transition to a funded pension scheme.

With a funded scheme, the government won't need to create a new budget for pension every year. Currently, it operates as an unfunded defined benefit pension system, but it will become a funded contributors' pension system under the new universal pension scheme. This scheme will provide pension to people who previously had none. Additionally, the Prottoy scheme, targeting autonomous government bodies, has been announced. Bangladesh has 403 autonomous government bodies, of which around 90 had a pension system, while 313 did not. The goal is to bring all these organisations under the same pension scheme.

As this will be a funded scheme, the benefits are clear: all citizens can be covered, and it will ensure the sustainability of the pension system. Another reason for the universal pension scheme is to address the demographic changes in Bangladesh. The country is currently experiencing a demographic dividend, but after 2040, the working-age population will start to decrease. The prime minister's vision of a smart Bangladesh by 2041 will not be achievable if a large portion of the population is elderly without a pension support system. Therefore, this scheme shows foresight in protecting the future.

Regarding the current state of the Prottoy scheme, it's important to note that pension systems in many countries undergo reforms as needed. Similarly, Bangladesh is reforming its existing pension system. The government aims to introduce the universal pension scheme with the flexibility to make adjustments, additions or removals as necessary.

When the Prottoy scheme was announced, university teachers had some questions, which the pension authority addressed through the Finance Division and a press briefing. The teachers were still not satisfied. If we could clearly understand which specific parts are still dissatisfying for them after our press briefing, we could work on further addressing these issues. For example, the retirement age is set at 65, and while it cannot be decreased, it can be increased if needed. Many developed countries have raised their retirement age to manage demographic shifts, as seen recently in France where they raised their retirement age by two years. Recently we visited South Korea, and they also plan on increasing it.

When the demographic dividend decreases and the working-age population declines, increasing the retirement age becomes necessary to maintain a sufficient workforce.

So it is clear that just because a pension system has been announced, it doesn't mean that it is going to be the same forever. The reason for the pension system is to help people. Whenever there is a need to reform or change the pension system for the sake of the people, of course necessary changes will be made.

Decisions about teachers made without consulting them

Nasir Uddin Ahmed
is associate professor of english at Jagannath University.

We have been protesting the new universal pension scheme from the very beginning. The strike is a step we are being compelled to take. So far, no officials have spoken to us, nor have there been discussions on how we would proceed to have a dialogue. The teacher's demands thus far have been for a separate pay scale, the creation of an environment for students where necessary skills can be developed, exclusion of teachers from the Prottoy scheme and a separate pension system for them, and assurance that under no circumstances will teachers be deprived of the existing benefits.

The scheme is not "universal" as it does not encompass government officials. My question is, why should teachers be deprived of the existing benefits? We did not ask for this new scheme, so why is this being forced upon us? In the previous scheme, public university teachers would receive a lump sum amount of around Tk 80 lakh after retiring. What a teacher earns while working is spent trying to pay for basic necessities, and hence the amount left at the end of a teacher's career is not significant. Even this amount is not going to be available under the new Prottoy scheme.

There is also a lack of clarity regarding the pension being given at 60, whereas the retirement age for a teacher is 65. This confusion extends to festival bonuses and other such benefits, all of which were mentioned in the previous scheme. Why would the teachers, especially those who are new, willingly agree to a new scheme that is less beneficial for them?

Decisions regarding teachers are being made without any consultation with teachers. All stakeholders must be engaged in a discussion if it has an impact on their lives. If you won't consider teachers of the primary, secondary and tertiary levels as worthy of engaging in a conversation, who will be spoken to regarding a decision that will significantly affect teachers? It displays a blatant disrespect toward teachers from the government.

The government is completely dependent on the bureaucrats who are not qualified to make decisions impacting teachers.Teachers have been speaking of a separate pay scale for so long, with the issue being raised even in 2015-2016, yet no action has been taken in that regard. Not only are they not thinking of teachers, but they are not thinking of students either. What is the government doing to help students gain the necessary skills for employment?

In the realm of politics, there has been a severe issue of nepotism, with relatives of MPs getting appointed to positions of authority in various educational institutions. But it's the qualified people who must be the ones in the position to make decisions.

If you can't take into consideration the fate of the students, then for whom is all this development? How can I allow someone younger joining my profession to be in a worse condition than me? It is completely unacceptable and inhumane. If you destroy the education system by putting teachers at a disadvantage, the intelligent will leave the teaching profession. This will spell trouble for the nation.

Constructing buildings alone is not development. There are lakhs of Benazirs today because the government is unable to control its corrupt officials. Teachers will never want to take actions that harm students. Over the past three months, we have been protesting while keeping students safe. We need to think about the nation and respect teachers. Teachers need to be paid the appropriate amount to have a decent life.

Are students sympathetic to the teachers' protest?

Returning to the classroom after nearly 18 months in 2021 due to the Covid pandemic was a daunting prospect. The thought of lost time weighed heavily on my mind. Session jams are a common issue at public universities, as everyone says, and seeing my peers at private universities make up for the lost time only added to my worries. The ongoing strike of teachers at 35 public universities demanding exclusion from the contentious Prottoy pension scheme adds to the worries of the students.

The finance ministry announced a pension scheme titled "Prottoy" on March 13 this year. Since then, many peaceful protests have been staged, including the distribution of memoranda, sit-in programmes, human chains, issuance of statements, and gathering signatures from the public. However, a full-scale strike started on July 1. Teachers at public universities across the nation, including Dhaka University (DU), have been abstaining from holding classes and exams in protest against the government's decision to force them to enrol in the Prottoy pension system.

As the teachers push for their demands, it is the students who face the harshest consequences. University classes and departmental offices remain closed, putting their education on hold. The suspension of official activity in the DU administrative building causes disruptions in critical academic support services. The closing of Dhaka University's Central Library deprives students and job seekers of critical study tools. This extended disruption not only postpones the students' schooling and future ambitions, but it also increases stress and worry about their academic and professional prospects.

The ongoing strike has caused tremendous frustration among students, making them increasingly unsympathetic to the teachers' protests, because with classes and departmental offices closed, students are experiencing a significant academic disruption. As students bear the brunt of these effects, their initial understanding of the teachers' demands is being gradually obscured by their immediate struggles, resulting in a growing lack of solidarity.

Another reason behind the growing lack of sympathy is the teachers' poor communication with the students about the situation. Without a clear explanation of the reasons behind the strike and its goals, students feel blindsided by the sudden disruption. This lack of transparency makes students feel that the strike has been imposed on them without considering their future, further eroding their sympathy for the teachers' cause. Students, including myself, have been informed about the situation primarily through the media. There has been no direct communication from the respective departments to update students on the current circumstances.

Protests are a big part of our student identity. However, teachers rarely show solidarity with our protests, regardless of their cause or goal. This recurrent lack of support from teachers during student demonstrations undermines students' sympathy for teachers' own protests, such as the current strike demanding exclusion from the universal pension scheme. The observed disparity in cooperation between students and teachers indicates a lack of solidarity in the educational environment.

There are various critical concerns at public universities that require joint efforts from students and teachers, for instance hall seat allotment, quota reformation, etc. Students' issues frequently overlap with those of teachers, showing a shared stake in overcoming institutional shortcomings. However, the prevalent culture frequently encourages a sense of detachment, in which student difficulties are considered only as related to students while teachers' concerns are viewed solely as their own. Genuine empathy and mutual support require both parties to recognise and comprehend each other's contexts and concerns. To solve structural difficulties, we need to transition to a more inclusive conversation and cooperative approach. Public universities can better align their efforts to improve educational settings and promote the welfare of all stakeholders by cultivating a culture of shared responsibility, open communication, and solidarity.

CARTOGRAPHIC IMAGINATION AND COLONIAL LANDSCAPE PAINTINGS in and around Bengal

When the British began their mapping project in India, they were hardly equipped with enough information lying outside their immediate foothold. In fact, mapping was itself a way to gather, assimilate and document knowledge acquired on the ground to triumph over uncertainties. The colonial capital of Calcutta located on the Bengal delta was the only convenient location to begin this operation. Mapping activities began soon after the Battle of Plassey (1757) as the East India Company steadily took control over Bengal and expanded from there. The cartographer appointed to carry on the project was James Rennell (1742-1830), but he was only a hydrographer, who specialised in charting water and waterways. This proficiency was ideal to test out and chart regional connections through rivers tracing the Hooghly upstream.

SPATIAL IMAGININGS IN THE AGE OF COLONIAL CARTOGRAPHIC REASON

MAPS, LANDSCAPES, TRAVELOGUES IN BRITAIN AND INDIA

NILANJANA MUKHERJEE

Cartography in India might have had its roots in this expansionist ambition but went on to achieve much more than this. Rennell's Map of Hindostan, published by an act of Parliament in 1782, inaugurated the cartographic identity of modern India for the first time on the world stage. It geographically integrated the eastern entrepot all the way to the Himalayan hinterlands and the north western Punjab-Sind, reorienting existing land into a fresh geo territorial unit heavily dependent on its eastern delta for overseas commerce. This is not to say that this outlying terrain was unexplored for exactly these reasons. Earlier regimes and powers, both local and foreign, had their stakes all over the Bengal littoral region, making it one of the most coveted and strategic locations in the world for a very long time. However, it was the British East India Company which was responsible for the territorial transformation of the region as the fulcrum of power.

With James Rennell's surveying operations surging outwards across India while being focalized in Calcutta, large parts of India which were thus far outside the scope of the colonial information grid were fast brought under detailed observation. The utility of a panoptic knowledge of routes that was sought from the administrative class was stressed by Rennell in his book, A Description of the Roads in Bengal and Bahar (1788). Rennell lists four major centers, Calcutta, Murshidabad, Patna, and Dacca: "the first being the seat of government, and the others either the capital military stations, or factories or both." Since the grant of the Dewani to the English East India Company by the Mughal Emperor Shah Alam II in 1765, the seat of power shifted from Murshidabad to Calcutta, which now needed to be connected with all major stations throughout the region. The British colonial regime, with its growth of mercantile capital, commercial manufacture, and a drive towards the monetization of social relations, transformed the existing circulatory practices. The decline in commerce and attrition of urban centers in the early phase of British colonization of India was therefore generally seen as a breakdown of an earlier circulatory regime. Many of the arguments foregrounding the importance of transport infrastructure, roadways, navigation, and later on the railways in British India, were based on this foresight of bringing products and capital into a disciplined and efficient system of circulation.

The Dacca paintings share a similar format with the Calcutta paintings and capture mofussil life in its plebeian detail. Most depict Mughal architecture then in ruins, hovering atop dense oppressive vegetation taking root in it, exuding a sense of decadence and a passing away of an old order. Also depicted are roads, rivers, and nullahs (streams) fallen into disuse.

Cartographic practices were not limited to academic mapping alone. Pictorial representations flourished in abundance as riverine landscape paintings became a popular medium to portray journeys into the subcontinent. William Hodges and the Daniells were major forerunners in initiating the genre, making landscape paintings popular and lucrative for later European traveling artists to participate. From the late eighteenth century onwards, many amateur artists in the East India Company's service explored innumerable opportunities to record the sights of India. Among the most productive of amateur artists in India was probably Sir Charles D'Oyly (1781-1845). Son of a senior Company official, John Hadley D'Oyly, the Company's Resident to the Nawab Babar 'Ali at Murshidabad, Charles was educated in England from where he returned to India in 1797. He held minor posts in the Company at the beginning of his career but gradually rose to higher and more responsible positions in the service. His first major appointment was as Collector of Dacca from 1808 to 1812. Following this, he returned to Calcutta, first as Deputy Collector and then Collector of Government Customs and Town Duties, a post he held until 1821 when he was appointed Opium Agent in Patna. D'Oyly's specific aesthetics are infused with geographical knowledge. In his movement away from riverine landscapes into the mofussils and hinterlands, his art can be seen as depicting 'spatial stories,' which link together, draw itineraries, and hence organize places as though in a map. Be it his paintings of Calcutta, Dacca, or Gyah or his monumental work titled Sketches of the New Road in a Journey from Calcutta to Gyah (1830), a project undertaken on the occasion of the inauguration of a new military road linking the Grand Trunk Road to Calcutta, his drawings contextualise the new colonial circulation evolving from existing routes. His topographic drawings are a kind of spatial practice which narrativise the fresh emergence of space, supplanting the space and network of the ancien regime. D'Oyly's The Sketches of the New Road celebrated the initiation of the idea of geographical improvement and mobility as the signpost of British triumph. The areas surveyed by the artist's eye were brought under cartographic surveillance and military order. The Sketches simulated an ideal tour through a coherent visual experience. In this series, D'Oyly adopted the European style of the 'prospect,' by then a widely accepted format, for his panoramic views. A bird's eye view of an entire terrain, the style could include with fields, forests, roads and rivers, sometimes towns and cities, travelers on the road, tiny as against the scenic landscape. The road interlaced with semaphore towers, as it were, paved the way to India's modern future.

In Views of Calcutta and its Environs, D'Oyly ventured away from the banks of the Ganges into the black town in search of local experiences: the streets, bazaars, huts, rituals, fairs, and festivals of the locals. In 1808, when he was appointed Collector of Dacca, he promised Warren Hastings that he would offer "as companions a few of the ruins of the city of Dacca which [...] are exquisite for their magnificence and elegance and are calculated to tempt the pencil of an artist." The result was the drawings for Antiquities of Dacca (1830), planned as a joint venture with another professional artist, George Chinnery (1774-1852). His sketches and paintings dealing with Dacca were brought out from 1823 onwards in the form of folios from London. Each of these folios had about four to five sketches or paintings in it together with topical and historical descriptions of them. These brief explanatory notes were submitted by an acclaimed historian, Persian scholar, and artist, Military Surgeon James Atkinson (1780-1852). The roping together of image and accompanying explanatory letterpress was a relatively established convention at the time. D'Oyly granted greater significance to the vernacular and public architecture of an erstwhile important port township. He insisted on replacing the established hierarchical distinction between places, largely through preceding artistic ventures of Hodges and the Daniells, with a more fundamental equivalence. The Dacca paintings share a similar format with the Calcutta paintings and capture mofussil life in its plebeian detail. Most depict Mughal architecture then in ruins, hovering atop dense oppressive vegetation taking root in it, exuding a sense of decadence and a passing away of an old order. Also depicted are roads, rivers, and nullahs (streams) fallen into disuse.

D'Oyly starts off by recalling the strategic location of Dacca not only because it had once been the capital of Bengal, which rose to pre-eminence during the time of Aurangzeb, but also because of the presence of other European powers prior to the coming of the British and the East India Company:

> Long before the English settled at Dacca, the Dutch had established a factory there, and transacted their business through native agents; [...] The English factory at Dacca, having been preceded by that which Tavernier terms "a tolerably good one", was rebuilt about a century ago by Mr. Stark, with the permission of Iltizam Khan, [...] previous to which native agents had been employed to purchase cloths, and convey them for sale to Calcutta. It was not till the year 1742 that the French succeeded in getting permission to rebuild a factory here, which is now, as well as that erected by the Dutch, a heap of ruins.

In both his Dacca and Behar paintings, D'Oyly reinforces his identity as an administrative officer in the colonial service by commenting on the state of decay and administrative lapse the regions had suffered in the recent past. The Antiquities deal with descriptions and depictions mainly of the architectural past and present, and there is inevitably an attempt to draw comparisons between past elegance and the poverty-stricken present.

> Thus Ducca for more than half a century was the capital of Bengal, and continued to be enriched by the multitudes which crowded to the courts of its governors. The stupendous remains of gateways, roads, bridges, and other public works, which present themselves on every side, sufficiently prove the former grandeur and magnificence of the city.

While correcting earlier records such as that by the French traveller, Tavernier, D'Oyly takes credit for his own 'discovery', his detailed research and production of original knowledge:

> It would appear from this account by Tavernier, that almost the whole of Dacca at that time consisted of habitations built of mud, straw, wood, matting, and bamboo, such as are constructed by the common people at present. He mentions no public buildings excepting those of the Europeans; although the Great Kuttra, a most magnificent edifice, as well as the Mosque of Syuff Khan, had been erected many years before, and the small Kuttra more recently; but still several years before the celebrated French traveller visited Ducca. These splendid buildings, as well as several others, seem to have eluded the observation, or escaped the memory of Tavernier.

While D'Oyly takes pride in exhibiting his discoveries through his drawings, he does not miss an opportunity to point out existing flaws in the survey of a representative of a rival European power, namely the French. In a move that marked the age, he disentangles what he sees from what is already known. When he mentions the Daniells and their inability to identify the picturesque significance of the location, he simply flaunts his artistic vision to complete an unfinished agenda – to reveal in sight an entire terrain which had been left out for so long.

From Chinnery's drawings, he finally chose only three that contrasted "present poverty with Mohammedan importance, and rusticity with architectural elegance" and explicitly commented on the decline of Dacca. The work ends with a high romanticist note contemplating on the passage of time, the fall of empires, and the vicissitudes of life and human endeavors:

> To the noise of mariners and shipwrights which once resounded along the nulla – to the bustle and pomp of commerce and princely equipage – has succeeded a degree of loneliness and silence. [...] The bridge before us is fast following its predecessors [...] Though now mutilated and mouldering under the effects of time and neglect, and the ruder dilapidations of war, it is still an interesting object to the eye of the landscape painter and poet.

Such comments establish connections between the medieval and the modern, nature and industry, to the detriment of the latter. The ruined mill of an earlier colonizing power proved purposeful in establishing a continuum, granting a timeless quality to the scene and the place. The seemingly romantic statement obliquely refers to the failure and falling apart of the earlier system of mobility and circulation, thereby suggesting the possibility of repair by a stronger force. This idea is reiterated in a number of his paintings in the series, such as in depictions of collapsed bridges such as the 'Paugla pool'. A picturesque scene could be granted a sublime status if it could nobly inspire the artist with elevated thoughts.

Topographic representations framed by philosophical and sentimental utterances reaffirmed the sublime prospect of the place, reflecting that cartographic amassment of geographic space was not wholly incongruous with the aesthetic predilections of the day.

Shootout voodoo exorcised but concerns remain for England

REUTERS, Duesseldorf

England fans woke up on Sunday not quite sure whether to celebrate a remarkably confident shootout performance that sent them into the Euro2024 semifinals or lament another display of caution and inertia by their players and manager.

On the profit side of the ledger was a shootout that should, finally, banish the folk memory of all the penalty pain that preceded it since the first of many defeats by West Germany in the 1990 World Cup semifinals.

Cole Palmer, Jude Bellingham, Bukayo Saka, Ivan Toney and Trent Alexander-Arnold all looked as if they would score, and all did so, expertly.

It should not have come as a surprise as Palmer, Toney and Saka are all regular and hugely impressive penalty takers for their clubs, while Bellingham and Alexander-Arnold are among the sweetest strikers of a ball in the game.

With goalkeeper Jordan Pickford going through the full repertoire of "taking control" before saving Manuel Akanji's weak effort, it was an exemplar of how to go about a shootout.

Factoring in a Nations League playoff, also against Switzerland, England have now won three of their last four shootouts under Southgate, having lost six of their seven before that.

England now have a very winnable game against the Netherlands, who have stumbled and scrapped their way into the last four, with the possibility of a third major final appearance and first on foreign soil tantalisingly close.

And yet, behind the singing and dancing, looms the uncomfortable truth that England have got this far largely playing very poorly, certainly in attack.

Their defence has been very good, with every opponent generally kept at long range, but despite boasting an extraordinary array of talent in their ranks, England have been nothing short of boring.

On Saturday, Saka's 80th-minute equaliser was their first shot on target, just as Bellingham's extraordinary equaliser against Slovakia was, in the 95th minute.

The average world ranking of the teams they have beaten -- Serbia, Denmark, Slovenia, Slovakia and Switzerland -- is 35, yet, other than in fleeting patches and moments of individual brilliance, never have now fifth-ranked England looked a dominant team.

They were better on Saturday in terms of probing for openings, but on the few occasions they did get behind the Swiss defence, the quality of cross or final pass was awful.

Southgate had, laughably, said on Friday that his mentality was to "go for it", yet England did anything but. On one occasion late in the game they took a short corner that, three touches later, ended up at the feet of their own goalkeeper.

For all the problems, however, England are still there, while Germany, Italy, Belgium and Portugal et al are not, and that's a scenario the fans would have gobbled up at the start of the tournament, however, it has been achieved.

» England have won just four penalty shootouts in their history but two of them have come against Switzerland, in 2019 in the UEFA Nations League and tonight at Euro 2024.

» England have reached the UEFA Euro semi-finals in consecutive tournaments for the first time.

» Switzerland have now been eliminated in all five of their major tournament quarter-final appearances: the 1934, 1938 and 1954 World Cups, and Euro 2020 and 2024.

» For just the second time in their 10th shootout at a major tournament (World Cup/Euros), England scored every single one of their penalties in the shootout (5/5), also doing so against Spain at Euro 96 (4/4).

Neer wins chess championship with heavy heart

ANISUR RAHMAN

FIDE Master Manon Reja Neer, a 14-year-old chess prodigy, emerged as the undefeated champion in the 48th National Chess Championship yesterday ahead of three Grandmasters, but rather than being on cloud nine, the teenager was going through a whirlwind of emotions, still coming to terms with the sudden demise of his beloved 'Zia sir'.

"I had nearly confirmed my championship win with two rounds in hand and was really happy about it. But now I am shocked and can't find the words to express my emotions after the death of my beloved Zia sir," Neer told The Daily Star yesterday.

Grandmaster Ziaur Rahman, who passed away on Friday after suffering a cardiac arrest during the 12th round match of the championship, had started coaching players in the last few years and Neer was one of his students.

Neer, who left for Sri Lanka yesterday to take part in two tournaments, emulated Zia with his championship win as the latter had also won his first title at 14 in 1988.

"Zia sir was my closest rival in the just-concluded championship, I was ahead by only one point. He probably would have been happy to see me to become champion as I had once trained under him for 11 successive days, travelling from Narayanganj to his Mohammadpur resident," said the ninth-grader, adding that he could never beat GM Zia.

The teenage chess prodigy has become the 16th player to win the national championship. With his triumph, the ninth-grader also emulated GM Zia, who had also won his first championship at the age of 14.

However, the record of the youngest national champion in chess still belongs to GM Niaz Murshed, who won it in 1979 at the age of 13.

Neer surprised everyone by securing 10 points in 13 matches including three draws against three GMs – Niaz, Zia and Enamul Hossain Razib.

Neer feels his performance in the 21st Bangkok Chess Club Open in April, where he secured 6.5 points out of nine helped him to win the championship after three unsuccessful attempts.

"Since I started playing in the national championship, my target was to become champion. I think good performances in Thailand helped me a lot to play better," said Neer, who earned his first International Master norm from the Bangkok Chess Club Open and secured the second IM norm from the just concluding national championship.

Asked about his future plan, Neer said, "My ultimate target is to become world champion which is hard but not impossible. The immediate target is to secure the IM title and then become the country's sixth GM within next two years. For that, I need financial help, sponsorship and training," said Neer who also thanked Bangladesh Cricket Board's media committee chairman Tanvir Ahmed Titu for providing him air tickets to participate in tournaments overseas.

'Lion-hearted' Dutch to 'go for it'

REUTERS, Dortmund

The Netherlands feel they have an unexpected opportunity to achieve something special at the European Championship after a gritty comeback to beat Turkey on Saturday and advance to the semifinal.

Their 2-1 victory in a tension-filled quarterfinal in Berlin has set up a last-four meeting with England in Dortmund on Wednesday and a chance to move closer to reprise their only major tournament success, at the last Euros that Germany hosted in 1988.

"We are going to play two more games, if all goes well," coach Ronald Koeman -- who played in the 1988 winning side -- said after his men put together a determined showing to overcome a halftime deficit against Turkey.

"Nobody expected this. But our mission is not over yet. If you play a semifinal, you also want to reach the final."

Koeman looked to get ahead of himself, however, when asked which country he would like to face in Sunday's final. "I prefer to play against Spain because we have already played against France in the group stage," the coach said.

Then he checked himself: "We have to beat England first."

Koeman will know better than most what it takes to win the tournament, having been part of the side that won it 36 years ago by beating the Soviet Union in the final in Munich.

But this time his side have not had a convincing road to the semis, with the Dutch only advancing to the knockout stage of the tournament as one of the four lucky losers -- the teams finishing third in their group.

"As the Netherlands, we must be proud of our team. We have sometimes been criticised that other countries play more with their heart, but we have really shown a lion's heart," he insisted.

"We had to go very deep," added captain Virgil van Dijk.

Substitute striker Wout Weghorst agreed. "We are close. This is a unique opportunity. We are going for it."

The 'Uruguayan style' shines

REUTERS

Uruguay's diligence and resilience under pressure after going a man down against Brazil in Saturday's Copa America quarterfinal victory put the team's distinctive character in the spotlight, coach Marcelo Bielsa said.

Uruguay lost Nahitan Nandez to a red card on a VAR review, which reduced their side to 10 men for the final stages of the second half, but they shut shop and defended resolutely to take the match to penalties where they prevailed 4-2.

"Everything that happens, happens in Uruguayan style, because the players are the ones that give their all to the team," Bielsa told reporters.

"It was a match with very little goal opportunities, highly contested, very close, even with very little changes in possession. When we were one man down, we decided to dedicate ourselves to defending in our half.

"So holding on to that result as the Uruguayan team did shows the profile of Uruguayan football. And they were very calm in the penalty shootout that demands not only accuracy but also character."

Bielsa's teams are usually characterised by relentless attacking football and no team has scored more goals in the tournament than Uruguay, who netted nine times in the group stage.

But three straight clean sheets have also helped Uruguay book a semifinal against Colombia and Bielsa was quick to praise his squad's mentality rather than take credit for their defensive record.

"I am a bit more drawn to the offensive than the defensive game, but in a match that was as tight as this one, we created one more opportunity than our opponent and we defended well," Bielsa added.

Saifuddin paints Bangladesh cricket's sorry picture

SHABAB CHOWDHURY

Bangladesh seamer Mohammad Saifuddin does not always make things easy for himself whenever he speaks to the media.

From re-assuring that he wanted to play as a batter in an edition of the Bangladesh Premier League to complaining about BCB not paying enough attention to him while he was in rehab, Saifuddin has a history of landing in hot water for his statements.

This time, however, he exposed the fragility of Bangladesh cricket's dying pipeline by saying that the country hardly has 20-25 players capable of playing international cricket, meaning that there is a serious drought in the emergence of quality players.

Saifuddin, who trained for the first time in Mirpur yesterday since being left out of Bangladesh's T20 World Cup squad earlier this year, also said that his fitness was key for a return to the national side.

"To be honest, there are 20-25 players in Bangladesh who are capable of playing international cricket; there aren't that many players," Saifuddin told reporters on Sunday.

"Opportunities will come if I can stay fit. If you look at other countries, you'll see that there is way more competition. I think the number of players who are of international standard is very low [in Bangladesh]."

Two major takeaways can be made from what Saifuddin said.

Naturally, the first one is that a current player is convinced about the fact that Bangladesh's pipeline is drying up as evidenced by the lack of quality players coming through the ranks which is why the BCB as well as the team management often resort to players like Soumya Sarker and Afif Hossain – both of whom have done very little in recent times to warrant a place in a Bangladesh squad. BCB, under the leadership of Nazmul Hassan Papon, has always flaunted the idea of having a strong pipeline but its boasting in this regard has, time and again, been deflated when they go to major events and play relatively superior sides. Even the composition of the squads heading to these events portrays the harsh reality of Bangladesh's limited talent and a jeopardised future.

The second is a much more common loop in the country's cricketing scenario which has established a culture of failure. The loop brings forth how a player who gets dropped from the national team can bank on another player to underperform in order to make a return. In most cases, the player who gets dropped has very little urgency to perform his way into the team and can bide his time for someone else to lose his spot to get back in contention.

Saifuddin's case seems to be aligned with the latter as he may feel that the number of quality players in the pool is reasonable enough for him to make a comeback by dishing out average performances. The 27-year-old faltered when he had to compete with Tanzim Hasan Sakib in the Zimbabwe series before the team left for the USA for the T20 World Cup. Despite picking up more wickets than Sakib, he struggled to get his bearings right at the death in the final Zimbabwe T20I and that was enough for the selectors to axe him from the 17-member squad.

In an attempt to talk about a potential return to the national side and the general picture of Bangladesh cricket from his perspective, Saifuddin perhaps blurted out the reality of Bangladesh cricket and the mediocre mentality that a lot of players might harbour.

Electrocution kills five at Ratha Yatra

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bogura

Five people were electrocuted to death and 41 others injured during Ratha Yatra (chariot procession) in Bogura town yesterday afternoon.

The incident happened when the dome of the Ratha came in contact with the overhead electric wire around 5:15pm.

The deceased were Ranjita, 60, of Shahjahanpur upazila, Naresh Mahanta, 40, of Adamdighi upazila, Atoshi Rani, 40, of Sadar upazila, Alok Kumar, 42, of Shibganj upazila, and Joly Rani Saha, 35, of Sariakandi upazila, said police.

Ratha Yatra is one of the major festivals of the Hindu community.

Police and locals said the Ratha Yatra, participated by several thousand devotees, started from a temple in Seujgari area around 5:00pm.

When the procession reached Amtala intersection around 5:15pm, Ratha's dome came in contact with the electric wire. The dome was made of steel, it electrocuted those holding it.

The procession was heading to Satmatha intersection area, said Arup Ratan, who joined the procession, adding that the dome caught fire and smoke was billowing.

"Everyone started shouting and running in panic.

UP chairman shot dead in broad daylight

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Munshiganj

Chairman of Panchgaon Union Parishad, HM Sumon Howlader, was shot dead in broad daylight by a supporter of a president candidate of a school's governing body in Munshiganj's Tongibari upazila yesterday.

Police and eyewitnesses said the management committee polls for Panchgaon Waheed Ali High School was going on from 10:00am yesterday.

Sumon Howlader

Sumon was backing Dewan Moniruzzaman for president. Noor Mohammad, a supporter of another president candidate Milan and also a "friend" of Sumon, got angry with Sumon and a brawl ensued.

At one stage, Noor shot Sumon in the chest around 1:00pm and left the school ground.

Sumon was rushed to the local upazila health complex. He was later sent to Dhaka Medical College Hospital but he died on the way.

Munshiganj Superintendent of Police Mohammad Aslam Khan said that they learnt that the assailant was a friend of the victim.

Police arrested three people in this connection.

Voter turnout high in French election

Far right hopes to win, but may fall short of absolute majority

REUTERS, Paris

French voters turned out in force for the second round of a parliamentary election yesterday that could see the far-right National Rally (RN) emerge as the strongest party, severely denting President Emmanuel Macron's authority.

Turnout stood at 26.3 percent by around noon, up from 18.99 percent during the second round of voting in 2022, the Interior Ministry said. It was the highest midday turnout level since 1981, pollster Harris Interactive and Ipsos said, illustrating strong public interest in an election that has polarised political views.

The latest opinion polls have forecast the RN to win the most seats in the National Assembly, but predicted it may fall short of an absolute majority. A hung parliament would herald a prolonged period of instability and policy deadlock in the euro zone's second-biggest economy.

If the nationalist, eurosceptic RN did secure a majority, it would usher in France's first far-right government since World War Two and send shockwaves

4 BNP city units get new convening committees

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP yesterday formed convening committees for its South and North Dhaka, Chattogram and Barishal city units.

All the previous committees, which were also convening committees, were dissolved recently as part of the party's revamping.

BNP Senior Joint Secretary General Ruhul Kabir Rizvi made the announcement in a press release.

It said that Rafiqul Alam Mojnu has been made the convener of the Dhaka South, while Tanvir Ahmed Robin was appointed as the member secretary.

Saiful Alam Nirob has been selected as the convener of the Dhaka North, with Aminul Haque as the member secretary.

Ershadullah has been appointed as the convener of the Chattogram city and Nazimuddin Rahman its member secretary.

For Barisal city, Moniruzzaman Khan Faruk has been made the convener while Ziauddin Sikder Zia is the member secretary and Afroza Khanom Nasreen the joint convener.

Previously, Mojnu and Tanvir served as member secretary and joint convener of the Dhaka South respectively.

Nirob was earlier the president of BNP's youth wing Jubo Dal, and Aminul was a member secretary of the previous committee of Dhaka South.

Ershadullah earlier served as the vice president of the Chattogram City committee while Nazimur was the president of the district's pro-student body Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal.

The newly appointed leaders of the four city units have been given three months to form the full committees of their respective units.

GAZA CEASEFIRE PROPOSAL

Hamas waiting for Israeli response

55 more Palestinians killed as Israeli offensive enters 10th month

- Tanks raid northern areas of Rafah

- Gaza death toll now 38,153

Hamas is waiting for a response from Israel on its ceasefire proposal, officials from the group said yesterday, five days after it accepted a key part of a US plan aimed at ending the offensive in Gaza now in its tenth month.

"We have left our response with the mediators and are waiting to hear the occupation's response," one of the two Hamas officials told Reuters, asking not to be named.

The three-phase plan for the Palestinian enclave was put forward at the end of May by US President Joe Biden and is being mediated by Qatar and Egypt. It aims to end the offensive and free around 120 Israeli hostages being held by Hamas.

Another Palestinian official, with knowledge of the ceasefire deliberations, said Israel was in talks with the Qataris. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has said that negotiations would continue this week but has not given any detailed timeline.

US Central Intelligence Agency Director William Burns will travel to Qatar this week for negotiations, a source familiar with the matter said.

Meanwhile, the health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 38,153 people have been killed in the Israeli offensive now in its tenth month. The toll includes at least 55 deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

The UN agency for Palestinians, UNRWA, called the situation in Gaza increasingly tragic, saying in a post on X, "families continue to face forced displacement, massive destruction and constant fear. Essential supplies are lacking, the heat is unbearable, diseases are spreading".

Fighting also continued to rage across Gaza yesterday, and north Israel came under rocket attack from Iran-backed Hezbollah in Lebanon.

Air raid sirens sent residents of 24 Israeli towns running for shelter. One

Dorival takes responsibility after Brazil exit

AGENCIES

Brazil coach Dorival Junior said he takes "full responsibility" for his team's underwhelming Copa America quarterfinal exit after losing to 10-man Uruguay 4-2 in a penalty shootout on Saturday.

"This type of work requires a great amount of patience," said Dorival, who took charge in January, after the defeat at Allegiant Stadium.

"I do have to acknowledge that these weren't the expected results, and I take full responsibility for them, but I do think as well that this team has great room to grow and evolve and improve."

Ruins of 4,000-yr-old temple found in Peru

REUTERS, Lima

A team of archaeologists have discovered the ruins of what appears to be a 4,000-year-old ceremonial temple buried in a sand dune of northern Peru, alongside skeletal human remains which may have been offerings for religious rituals.

The ruins were discovered in the sandy desert district of Zana, in the South American country's Lambayeque region, a short stretch from the Pacific Ocean and some 780 km north of the capital Lima.

"We are still waiting for radio-carbon dating to confirm the date, but the evidence suggests this religious construction could be part of a religious tradition of temples built on Peru's northern coast during that period," said Luis Muro, an archaeologist from Peru's Pontifical Catholic University who led the research.

Muro's team found the skeletal remains of three adults between the walls and bases of what was once a multi-storey structure, one of which was accompanied by offerings and possibly wrapped in a kind of linen or clothing, he said.

Quota protests on; govt looks to SC for a way out

STAR REPORT

For the second consecutive day, students demonstrating against the quota system for government jobs occupied key city intersections, bringing traffic to a halt for hours.

They also blocked rail lines and major highways at places across the country.

The students' "Bangla Blockade" had a cascading effect on traffic on other streets. Thousands were stuck in gridlocks on city streets and thoroughfares for hours on end since 4:00pm.

The protesters, however, decided not to enforce any blockades today. Instead, they would continue their boycott of classes and exams.

"We will coordinate with students across the country tomorrow [today] to launch a tougher demonstration on Wednesday," said Nahid Islam, a Dhaka University student and an organiser of the movement.

"We have not called off the blockade. Instead, we are preparing for a large-scale blockade," he said.

Students of different public universities and colleges and jobseekers have been demonstrating for the last seven days demanding reinstatement of a 2018 circular that abolished the quota system in government jobs.

The Supreme Court on June 4 upheld a High Court verdict that declared the government circular illegal.

Attorney General AM Amin Uddin said his office would take the next steps after receiving the full text of the HC verdict.

He said the government's petition against the HC verdict was scheduled to come up before the Appellate Division on Thursday.

He said the students should have patience and avoid public demonstrations since the matter was pending with the Supreme Court. "I don't know why they are carrying out the movement," he said.

Meanwhile, three ministers and two state ministers discussed the students' movement in a closed-door meeting yesterday at the Awami League president's political office in Dhanmondi.

- » People suffer on 2nd day of "Bangla Blockade"
- » Protesters will not enforce blockades today
- » Students to continue boycott of classes, exams
- » Students preparing for "large-scale blockade"
- » Ministers meet to discuss anti-quota protests
- » "Govt sympathetic towards demonstrators"

5 fall from train roof to their deaths

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

Five people, including children, were crushed to death under the wheels of a train after falling off its roof in Narsingdi's Raipura upazila yesterday.

The incident occurred around 6:20am in the Ashrafpur area near Methikanda Railway Station in the upazila.

The deceased could not be identified till the filing of this report at 8:15pm.

However, the victims are presumed to be between the ages of 12 and 20, Shahidul Islam, in-charge of Narsingdi Railway Police Station, told The Daily Star.

"They were travelling on the roof of the Dhaka-bound Chattogram Mail train."

Quoting witnesses, he said they were on the roof of the first compartment. All five were seen jostling and fighting over something. "At one point, all of them fell off and were crushed under the wheels of the train."

The bodies were taken to the Narsingdi Sadar Hospital morgue around 5:00pm.

Shahidul said, "We could not determine the specific ages of the deceased as their bodies have been dismembered. Experts from Dhaka are expected to arrive soon to help us identify them."

Meanwhile, another man was run over by a train in Raipura town around 12:15pm.

Parimal Sutradhar, 70, of the West Kandapara area in Narsingdi town, was run over by the Kalani Express at Srirampur Railgate area.

Dr Mohammad Mahmudul Kabir Bashar, resident medical officer of Narsingdi Sadar Hospital, said, "Six bodies were brought to the hospital by railway personnel around 5:00pm. The bodies were dismembered and could not be identified immediately. Once the post-mortems are complete, we will return the bodies back to the railway police."

Shahidul further said, "If the bodies are not identified by tomorrow, they will be buried at the government cemetery."

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina reaches Beijing Capital International Airport yesterday. Top Chinese officials and the Bangladesh ambassador to China received her at the airport. She is on a four-day official visit to China.

Russian strikes on Ukraine kill 36

Gut Kyiv children's hospital; UN condemns attack

AFP, Kyiv

Russia struck cities across Ukraine yesterday with a missile barrage that killed 36 people and heavily damaged a Kyiv children's hospital in an assault condemned as a ruthless attack on civilians.

Dozens of volunteers, doctors and rescue workers were digging through debris of a part of Okhmatdyt paediatric hospital in a desperate search for survivors after the rare day-time bombardment.

First responders ran for cover when sirens and a blast sounded hours after the initial strikes that hit as Ukraine struggles to protect itself from Russian aerial attacks.

President Volodymyr Zelensky said Russian forces fired more than 40 missiles at least five major civilian hubs mainly in the south and east of the country, as well as Kyiv.

The attack came as Zelensky visited Warsaw before heading to the Nato summit in Washington, where he was expected to appeal for more military support from the country's allies.

The UN harshly condemned wave of deadly Russian strikes across Ukraine, including on Kyiv, saying "dozens of people have been killed and injured".

AFP reporters at the scene of the attacks heard air raid sirens and explosions ring out as the missiles crashed into the capital and debris from downed projectiles rained down over the city.

Natalia Svidler, 40, was in the hospital at the time of the strike with her two-year-old son, who was due to have surgery this week, when the air raid sirens sounded.

"The nurses told us to go down to the basement. After a while we heard a loud rumble and then the ceiling in the basement collapsed a little," she said at the scene.

"Everyone got very scared, of course. Everyone started screaming and running," she told AFP.

City officials said the attack had also damaged several residential buildings and an office block in Kyiv where AFP reporters saw cars on fire and shredded trees in charred courtyards.

Ukrainian energy operator DTEK also said three electrical substations had been destroyed or damaged in the attack, the latest in series of strikes that have halved the country's energy generation capacity in recent months.

Zelensky said that there were an unknown number of people trapped under the rubble of the Okhmatdyt children's hospital and it was not immediately clear how many had been killed.

An AFP reporter saw one body at the scene, covered with an emergency blanket.

Municipal officials said that five people had been pulled from the rubble while at least 10 people had been killed in the barrage that hit Kyiv.

Russian forces have repeatedly targeted the capital with massive barrages since Moscow invaded Ukraine in February 2022, and the last major attack on Kyiv with drones and missiles was last month.

FARIDPUR MOB BEATING

UP chairman, member removed from posts

UNB, Faridpur

Shah Asaduzzaman and Ajit Kumar Biswas, chairman and member of Dumain union parishad under Madhukhali upazila of Faridpur, have been removed from their posts over allegations of their involvement in the fatal beating of two construction workers accused of torching an idol at a local temple on April 18.

The decision was announced on July 7 in a notification, issued by the Local Government Division under the Ministry of Local Government, Rural Development and Co-operatives, signed by Senior Assistant Secretary Purabi Goldar.

On April 18, two construction workers were beaten to death by villagers after being suspected of setting fire to an idol at the Panchpalli Sarbojonin Kali Temple in Panchpalli under Dumain union.

According to the notification, Shah Asaduzzaman and Ajit Kumar Biswas were allegedly involved in the incident, and as such, both officials were suspended as per recommendation from the deputy commissioner of Faridpur.

The notification also directed the Madhukhali upazila nirbahi officer to declare the posts vacant and issue a gazette notification in this regard.

Following the mob beating on April 18, video footage of the incident surfaced on social media, which showed Shah Asaduzzaman participating in the assault. Since then, both the chairman and the member have been in hiding.

Hijra tortured by BSF along Tentulia border

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Thakurgaon

A 45-year-old Bangladeshi transperson was tortured allegedly by the Indian Border Security Force (BSF) along the Banglabandha border in Panchagarh's Tentulia upazila early yesterday.

Kiron alias Raju, 45, of Narayanganj Sadar upazila, is currently undergoing treatment at Panchagarh Sadar Hospital.

According to the victim, 11 people from the hijra community reached Banglabandha border area around 1:00am to illegally enter India with the help of a local broker, whom they each paid Tk 10,000.

Ten of them managed to enter India, but Kiron got caught by BSF members.

Kiron was then beaten by BSF men with sticks and rifle butts before being left near Bangladesh territory around 5:00am.

Later, BGB men rescued and admitted Kiron to Tentulia Upazila Health Complex. Kiron was later transferred to Panchagarh Sadar Hospital for better treatment.

Contacted, Lt Col Ziaul Haque, commanding officer of 18 BGB Battalion, said a letter was sent to the BSF to hold a flag meeting over the incident but they were yet to get a response.

Quota protests on; govt looks to SC for a way out

AL General Secretary and Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader; Law Minister Anisul Huq; Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury; and State Minister for Information Mohammad Ali Arafat; State Minister for Education Shamsun Naher along with AL office Secretary Biplab Barua were at the meeting.

Sources said the participants expected a solution to the issue soon. They said the government was sympathetic towards the demonstrators and that it would act sensibly. They were of the opinion that the protesters should not carry out any programme that causes public suffering.

DEMO IN DHAKA

Like the previous day, the protesters blocked Shahbagh, Science Lab, Nilkhet, Technical, Karwan Bazar, Farmgate, and Zero Point intersections for at least four hours.

Hundreds of students of Dhaka University gathered in front of the Central Library around 3:30pm and headed for Shahbagh in processions.

Holding placards and chanting slogans, they blocked Shahbagh intersection around 4:00pm.

Other groups of mostly Dhaka University students blocked the Chankharpul intersection near Mayor Mohammad Hanif Flyover, and Banglamotor and Sonargaon intersections.

Around the same time, students of Dhaka College and Eden Mahila College blocked the Nilkhet and Science Lab intersections.

"We have been left with no other options other than taking to the streets. We will not stop our movement until our demands are met," Rashed Al Hasan, a student of Dhaka College, told The Daily Star.

Defying police obstruction, students of Jagannath University blocked the Zero Point intersection in Gulistan for three hours from 4:00pm.

Around 4:15pm, students from Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University blocked the street near their university in Agargaon.

Some students blocked the Paltan intersection around 5:00pm.

Several hundred students marched towards Farmgate around 5:00pm, halting traffic on Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue.

A huge number of people were seen walking to their destinations.

There, the students ended their blockade for the day around 7:30pm and marched towards Shahbagh.

HIGHWAYS, RAIL LINES

Students blocked rail lines in Dhaka's Karwan Bazar level crossing for nearly an hour from 6:40pm. Besides, rail lines in Mymensingh, Rajshahi, and Chattogram were also blocked for several hours.

They also blocked the Dhaka-Chattogram, Dhaka-Aricha, Chattogram-Khagrachhari, Barishal-Kuakata, and Dinajpur-Dhaka highways.

Cumilla University students blocked the Dhaka-Chattogram highway for four hours from 4:00pm. They staged a sit-in on the highway at Kotbari in Cumilla Sadar.

Students of Chittagong University along with students from various CU-affiliated educational institutions first blocked the road in front of Gate-2 of Sholoshahar and then staged a sit-in in Tigerpass area of Chattogram city.

Hridoy Ahmed Rizvi, a Chhatra League activist at the university, allegedly threatened an organiser of the movement at CU.

Khan Talat Mahmud Rafi, a first-year honours student of Dramatics, alleged that Hridoy called his father in Netrakona on Sunday night and said that there would be dire consequences for Rafi if he did not quit the movement.

Contacted, Hridoy claimed that his phone had been "hacked".

Rail communication between Dhaka and Mymensingh was suspended for two hours from 1:30pm as students of Bangladesh Agricultural University (BAU) blocked the Dhaka-Mymensingh rail line for the third consecutive day.

The students set up barricades at Jabbarer Mor, halting the Jamalpur Express on its tracks. Rail communication resumed at 3:10pm, reports UNB.

Hundreds of students from Rajshahi University blocked the Dhaka-Rajshahi rail line near the campus for nearly five hours from 11:30am.

WHAT MINISTERS SAID

Talking to The Daily Star last night, Law Minister Anisul Huq said the government has no decision about the quota system, as the matter is now pending with the Supreme Court.

He said the protesters can place their arguments before the court through lawyers.

"When the High Court was holding hearings on the case filed for keeping the quota system, those who were demonstrating had no lawyers. They did not present their arguments before the High Court.

"Now the case is before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. They can now place arguments before the Appellate Division through lawyers. The Appellate Division will give a fair verdict after hearing their arguments," he said.

Road Transport Minister Obaidul Quader said programmes that cause public sufferings should be avoided.

"The court scrapped the circular that abolished the quota system. The government has appealed against that decision. Creating public suffering by blocking roads should be avoided until the court delivers its verdict," Quader said.

Education Minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury said he would not comment on a matter pending with the court.

Hasina in Beijing on 4-day visit

Speaking at a press conference at the foreign ministry in Dhaka on Sunday, the minister said inauguration of a number of projects will also be announced during the PM's visit to China.

Chinese President Xi Jinping visited Bangladesh in October 2016 when the relationship between the two countries was elevated to a strategic partnership.

The two countries would celebrate the golden jubilee of the diplomatic relations next year.

The Bangladesh premier's visit to China is taking place within 15 days after her tour of India from June 21 to 22.

Jin Liqun, president of Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank, will pay a courtesy call on Hasina at the meeting room of her place of residence today.

The premier will join a summit on Trade, Business and Investment Opportunities between Bangladesh and China at the China World Summit Wing in Beijing.

In the afternoon, a meeting is scheduled to be held between the prime minister and the president of Consultative Party at the Great Hall of the People, Beijing.

Hasina will also place a wreath at the Monument to the People's Heroes at Tiananmen Square.

In the evening, she will attend a dinner hosted in her honour by the Bangladesh envoy to China at the Bangladesh House in Beijing.

On July 10, a delegation-level bilateral meeting, led by Hasina and Li Qiang, will be held at the Great Hall of the People.

She will later attend a banquet hosted by the Chinese premier at the same venue.

In the afternoon, Hasina will call on Chinese President Xi Jinping at the Great Hall of the People.

The Bangladesh premier is scheduled to depart from Beijing Capital International Airport at 11:00am (Beijing time) on July 11 by a special Biman flight.

The flight is scheduled to land at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport, Dhaka, at 2:00pm (Bangladesh time) the same day.

Six PSC officials, 11 others arrested

Hossain, a trader; Sayem Hossain, Liton Sarker, Sayed Sohanur Rahman Siam, son of Abed, Jahidul Islam, Mamunur Rashid, and Noman Siddiqi.

Touhidul Islam, special superintendent of CID's cyber investigation and operation, told The Daily Star, "We have arrested them after conducting raids in different areas over the last two days."

"The arrestees were involved in leaking questions of the deputy assistant engineer recruitment test of Bangladesh Railway held on July 5. They were also involved in the leak of questions of multiple non-cadre examinations."

"We are interrogating them at the CID office," he said, adding that a case was filed against the arrestees with Paltan Police Station in connection with leaking question papers.

According to sources, Abed Ali, driver of a former PSC chairman, was involved in the question leak. His son Sohanur, a Chhatra League leader, was also involved.

Abed Ali, of Dasar upazila, owns crores of taka.

His son Sohan studied abroad and then at a private university in the country. It is also learnt that Abed has two multi-storey buildings in Dhaka and a luxurious house in Madaripur.

Abed also campaigned seeking candidacy for the post of chairman in the last upazila parishad election.

Earlier, Channel 24 aired an investigative report on the question leak. There have been allegations of question paper leak in various PSC examinations, including for cadre and non-cadre posts, said the report.

According to the report, questions of the test for recruiting 516 people in Bangladesh Railway were leaked.

The report said question papers of 30 cadre and non-cadre examinations, including BCS, were leaked and some PSC officials were involved. The racket has amassed a huge amount of money by selling questions, the report added.

Sources in the CID said arrested PSC Office Assistant Sajedul took the railway recruitment exam question paper from Deputy Director Jafar.

The racket made around Tk 2 crore leaking the question papers.

Sajedul earlier leaked questions of PSC exams and driver Abed abetted him, the sources added.

In another development, Dhaka north city Chhatra League yesterday relieved Abed's son Sohanur, relief and disaster management secretary of the unit, for his alleged involved in leaking questions.

A press release of the unit said Sohanur was removed due to his involvement in anti-organisational and unethical activities.

In another development, the Public Service Commission yesterday said there was no scope for leaking questions of cadre and non-cadre exams held over the last 12 years.

There have been no complaints from any quarters about the exams, said a PSC statement.

The negative report aired by Channel 24 about the exams has tarnished the image of the institution.

The reporter concerned got a copy of a question via WhatsApp an hour before the exam, the statement said, adding that to ensure transparency and prevent question leaks, at least six sets of questions are prepared for each BCS exam and at least four sets for any non-cadre tests.

A lottery is held to determine which set will be used 30 to 35 minutes before a test begins, it said.

"The same procedures were followed for the July 5 recruitment test."

If any person or groups are found to be involved in leaking questions or cheating in this exam, the commission will take action against them following a probe, it added.

The Nabil Group companies include Nabil Naba Foods Ltd, Nabil Cold Storage, Nabil Feed Mills Ltd, Nabil Auto Rice Mill, Nabil Auto Flour Mill, Shimul Enterprise, Naba Agro Trade International, Anwara Trade International, Naba Pharma Limited, Nabil Green Crops Limited, and International Product Palace.

The 11 Nabil Group companies maintained accounts with Islami Bank's Gulshan Corporate Branch, New Market branch in Rajshahi and Pabna branch in Pabna.

The ACC also sought information on M/s Murad Enterprise and its affiliates (client of IBBL Chaktai branch in Chattogram), United Super Traders and its affiliates (client of IBBL Jubilee Road branch in Chattogram), and Century Food Products Limited and its affiliates (client of IBBL Khatunganj Corporate branch in Chattogram).

Golam Kibria Chowdhury, owner of United Super Traders, and others have allegedly embezzled crores of taka from Islami Bank.

A three-member ACC committee is investigating the allegations, said the letters.

According to a Bangladesh Bank inspection report, the IBBL in its 1,970th executive committee meeting on June 5, 2022, approved loans of Tk 950 crore for Nabil Grain Crops Ltd to be disbursed from the bank's Gulshan branch.

The company is groupedin the marginal category (new company) as per the Internal Credit Risk Rating System (ICRRS), said the central bank in its observation report.

BB officials said the IBBL should have taken at least Tk 230 crore as collateral money, including Tk 110 crore as deposits, from the company. As ensuring such safeguards is not mandatory for banks under the easy loan conditions, the loans become risky.

The IBBL Rajshahi branch approved Tk 3,100 crore loans to 11 Nabil Group companies, including Tk 700 crore to Nabil Feed Mills Ltd, also in June 2022.

In the meeting minutes, the IBBL claimed that Nabil Feed Mills Ltd and Nabil Grain Crops Ltd are not companies of the same group. However, the central bank suspected that the companies are owned by Nabil Group, according to the BB report.

If this is the case, then the IBBL has exceeded the single borrower exposure limit, which is a violation of The Bank Company Act, said the central bank.

In November 2023, the ACC wrote to the central bank seeking information on this alleged loan fraud.

In January this year, the BB said that the inspection of those institutions was underway and that it would sent the report once the inspection is completed.

Court issues travel ban on customs official Enamul

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday issued a travel ban on Mohammed Enamul Haque, commissioner of Customs, Excise and VAT Commissionerate in Sylhet, in a case filed over acquiring wealth worth Tk 9.76 crore illegally.

Judge Mohammed Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain of the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka passed the order after the Anti-Corruption Commission's Deputy Director Farzana Yasmin, also investigation officer of the case, appealed to the court, an official of the anti-graft watchdog told The Daily Star.

On June 4, the court ordered the authorities concerned to confiscate all immovable properties

BNP not fueling ongoing protests

Says Fakhrul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP has no reason to be involved in the current teachers' and students' movements on university campuses, said the party's Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday.

He said this in response to Awami League's claim that BNP had been patronising these protests.

"As teachers and students are carrying out these movements independently based on their professional perspectives, why would BNP instigate those agitations?" said Fakhrul.

Fakhrul said his party believes the teachers'

Quota protest intensifies, so does public suffering

MD ABBAS

From Shahbagh to Farmgate, with Banglamotor in between, major intersections of Dhaka were paralysed for several hours as protests against quota in government jobs swept through the capital yesterday.

The blockades enforced by students also extended to the Government Science Lab intersection, Chankharpool, areas adjacent to Dhaka University and in front of other educational institutions.

The ripple effect of these blockades created severe congestion at key locations such as Tantibazar, Ray Saheb Bazar, Bangshal, Gulistan, Purana Paltan, Shahbagh, Karwan Bazar, Farmgate, Agargaon, Kazipara, Sheorapara, Mirpur-10, New Market, and Science Lab.

By 6:00pm, the congestion spread to Mohakhali, Banani, Uttara, and other areas. There were long lines of private cars, buses, and CNG-run auto-rickshaws.

The students also blocked the railway at Karawan Bazar level crossing for half an hour.

Many inter-district passengers also had to suffer as the protesters blocked major railways and highways, disconnecting Dhaka from different parts of the country.

The ordeal began at 3:30pm when hundreds of students demanding quota reforms started their "Bangla Blockade" programme from Shahbagh.

They even blocked the Farmgate ramp of the Dhaka Elevated Expressway leaving hundreds of vehicles stuck there.

The sufferings intensified after the office closure as many job holders were forced to walk to their destinations. Some bikers were seen quarrelling with the protesters.

The protestors blocked the railway at Karawan Bazar level crossing around 6:40pm, halting train movements, which they withdrew an hour later.

Vehicular movement resumed in Farmgate, Karawan Bazar and Bangla Motor areas around 7:45pm.

The protesters finally lifted the blockade at Shahbagh around 8:35pm, after almost four hours.

It took Pankaj Malakar, a private job holder, two and a half hours to reach Farmgate from Bailey Road on his bike. "I was stuck multiple times and had to take several detours," he said.

Mushfiq Alam, a private service holder, was seen waiting at Farmgate for public transport. "I have been waiting for 40 minutes but there's no sign of any transport," he said.

Rumana Jannat, a medical technologist, was stuck in a gridlock near Pan Pacific Sonargaon Hotel for over an hour. She eventually left the bus she was on and started walking.

College students Rafi Ahmed, Sujan Maiti, and Ishtiaq Hossain also expressed their dismay as they were stuck in the Bijoy Sarani area for over 40 minutes.

Meanwhile, the students demonstrating

COMMUNAL VIOLENCE

45 died in 1,045 incidents

Says Oikya Parishad report from July 2023 to June 2024

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Oikya Parishad has claimed that 45 people were killed in 1,045 incidents of communal violence between July 2023 and June 2024.

The organisation released these findings in its latest report at a press briefing, titled, "Report launching on torture and persecution of religious-ethnic minorities in Bangladesh in the past year," at Jatiya Press Club yesterday.

While reading out the written statement, Advocate Rana Dasgupta, general secretary of the organisation, said from July 2023 to June 2024, ten people were targeted in attempted killings in various incidents of communal violence, 36 people were threatened with death, and 479 people were physically tortured.

There were 102 incidents of attacks, vandalism, looting, and arson on the houses and businesses of minority communities, he said, adding that there were 47 incidents of encroachment on houses and lands.

Additionally, 45 incidents of grabbing houses and lands, attempted evictions, and threats were reported.

There were also 11 cases of threats or attempts to force people to leave the country, 15 cases of grabbing or attempting to grab the properties

PROTEST OVER PENSION

Univ teachers vow to continue strike

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Public university teachers yesterday vowed to continue their work abstention movement until their demand to reinstate the previous pension scheme is met.

Teachers and staff members boycotted all classes, examinations, and administrative activities to press home their demands.

At Dhaka University, officials and staff members held a protest rally in front of the administrative building after a campus procession. A separate rally in front of the Arts Building was also held.

Prof Nizamul Hoque Bhuiyan, secretary general of Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association (FBUTA) and president of the Dhaka University Teachers Association, told the media that they have been in contact with the government, but no formal meeting has been scheduled yet.

"Since our demands were not addressed, we started with a half-day strike, then escalated to a full-day strike. We have now initiated this full-day work abstention movement. We will not return to classes until our demands are fulfilled," he said.

Teachers at other public universities, including Buet, Jagannath University, Chittagong University, Rajshahi University, Ruet, BSMRSTU, and Comilla University, among others, continued the movement to demand the reinstatement of the previous pension system.

Flood situation unchanged in the north

Over 1.60 lakh marooned in Kurigram, Lalmonirhat; 400 families stranded in Rangpur

STAR REPORT

The flood in the north remains unchanged.

In Kurigram, the Brahmaputra, Dharla, and Dudhkumar rivers continue to flow above the danger level, while the water of Teesta and other rivers are rising.

The flood situation also remains unchanged in three unions along the Dharla river shoal in Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila.

The Kurigram District Relief and Rehabilitation Office reports that all nine upazilas of the district have been affected, impacting 1,35,939 people from 40,000 families.

Only 2,395 people have taken shelter in 404 flood shelters.

Local administration has distributed 397 tonnes of rice, Tk 21.85 lakh in cash, and 21,330 packets of dry food to affected individuals.

An additional 1,079 tonnes of rice and Tk 23.5 lakh in cash are reserved for future needs.

In Lalmonirhat, 25,000 people from 7,000 families are affected.

Tk 5 lakh, 100 tonnes of rice, and 500 packets of dry food have been provided as relief.

Water Development Board officials said the Brahmaputra at Chilmari point is flowing 56cm above the danger level, Dudhkumar at Pateshwari 39cm, and Dharla at Bridge Point in Kurigram 32cm above the danger level.

6,500 hectares of agri land under water

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

Farmers have suffered significant losses due to the ongoing flood in Kurigram, as around 6,500 hectares of agricultural land -- including Aman seedbeds and vegetable fields -- have been under water over the past week.

Officials of Department of Agriculture Extension (DAE) said out of the 6,500 hectares, various vegetables were being grown on 2,000 hectares, 500 hectares were used as Aman seedbeds, and 4,000 hectares were used for jute and other crops. While jute cultivation has not suffered much damage yet, there is a concern that prolonged flooding might also impact these crops.

Meanwhile, farmers in the affected areas claimed that the damage was much higher than the DAE estimates.

Surjamal Mia, a farmer of Char Madhya Kadamtala village in Kurigram Sadar, said his three-bigha land where he was growing pepper and pointed gourd (potol) has gone underwater.

He also feared that the jute he is growing in four bighas of land will also be damaged if the flood gets prolonged.

Farmer Nazrul Islam of Kalatipara village in Ulipur upazila said he cultivated pepper on five bighas of land, planning to sell Tk 4 lakh worth of peppers.

"But now the flood has damaged everything. This year's flood has affected farmers the worst," he said.

Sudhir Chandra Das, 70, a farmer of Jorgach village in Chilmari upazila, said his Aman seedbed on 40 decimals of land was completely damaged.

"I'll have to prepare the seedbeds again once the water recedes, but I don't know when that will happen," he added.

Contacted, Abdullah Al Mamun, deputy director of DAE in Kurigram, said vegetables and Aman seedbeds submerged under the floodwater are completely destroyed.

protest against the new universal pension scheme and the students' agitation against the reinstatement of the quota system in government jobs are justified.

"We will call a spade a spade and we will talk about what is logical," he said.

The BNP leader also admitted that the united movements of public university teachers and students have inspired the party. "When the people of the country unite in their own interests, it inspires us with great hope," he said.

The BNP leader said even after 50 years of the country's existence, keeping a 56 percent quota in government jobs is entirely illogical because it hinders the development of merit.

DAE staff are still assessing the full extent of the damage at the field level, he added.

However, Rakibul Hasan, executive engineer of WDB in Kurigram, said there is no possibility of flood water receding in the next 3-4 days.

In Lalmonirhat, the Dharla at Shimulbari point is 16cm above the danger level, while the Teesta is 32cm below the danger level at Teesta Barrage's Dalia point.

Rakibul Hasan, executive engineer of the Water Development Board in Kurigram, said the flood situation is expected to persist due to water rushing in from upstream India.

Meanwhile, many flood victims said they were yet to receive any government assistance.

Lutfar Rahman, 60, of Char Madhya Kadamtala in Kurigram Sadar, said they have been living amid floodwater since last Tuesday and have not received any government or private relief assistance till yesterday.

Kurigram Deputy Commissioner Mohammad Saidul Arif assured that they have enough stock of relief aid and that materials are being distributed through upazila and union parishads.

Meanwhile in Kaunia upazila of Rangpur, villages in Shahidbagh, Tepamadhupur, Balapara, and Haragach unions went under water on Sunday, affecting approximately 400 families, said Ahsan Habib Sarkar, the upazila project implementation officer.

Many residents have moved their children, elderly, and livestock to higher ground.

In Char Dushmara, a government primary school halted classes due to flooding. Additionally, a bamboo bridge over the Manas river, a branch of the Teesta, was washed away by strong current.

According to the Flood Forecasting and Warning Center, Teesta was flowing just 0.19cm below the danger level as of 3:00pm yesterday.

Kaunia Upazila Executive Officer Mahidul Haque stated they are closely monitoring the rising water levels and have taken all necessary precautions.

against quotas in government jobs decided not to hold any blockade programmes today.

However, they would continue to boycott classes and exams, demanding the reinstatement of a 2018 order that abolished quotas.

Nahid Islam, a DU student and one of the organisers of the movement, said, "We will coordinate with students across the country tomorrow (today) to go for a tougher movement on Wednesday."

Deadly Ctg drains get bamboo band-aid

ARUN BIKASH DEY, Ctg

Bamboo fences, that's all the Chattogram City Corporation could come up with as a temporary solution to the problem of unguarded canals this monsoon, as projects worth crores of taka continue to linger on.

At least 11 people have died and many others were injured after falling into the city's drains and canals since 2017.

The city has a total of 57 canals stretching 161 kilometres, of which 36 are now under a mega project by the Chattogram Development Authority to address the city's waterlogging woes.

Besides, there are a total of 765-km of drains in the city.

According to CCC officials, they have nothing much to do with the canals under the CDA's project.

However, the CCC has recently identified at least 100 vulnerable spots in the remaining 21 canals that are not under the CDA's project.

The list of the spots has been submitted to the CCC's engineering department, said Farhadul Alam, executive engineer of CCC.

In total, the city has a total of 5,527 risky spots in its drains, canals and footpaths, according to a 2021 CCC survey.

"Protecting all the open canals and drains with concrete walls is time consuming, so we will mark the risky spots with bamboo sticks to make people stay cautious," said CCC chief engineer (acting) Shahin-ul-Islam Chowdhury.

Unsurprisingly, residents and experts are less than impressed.

"Marking the vulnerable spots with bamboo sticks is not a proper solution to save lives from unprotected canals and drains during waterlogging," said Subhash Barua, vice-president of Planned Chattogram, a forum of town planners.

"CCC authorities must be accountable for their failure to secure the unprotected drains and canals over the years," he added.

of Enamul, former commissioner of the Commissionerate of Customs Valuation and Internal Audit, in connection with the case.

The properties are: 11 flats in Kakrail, Mohammadpur, and Gulshan areas of the capital, five kathas of land in Gazipur, and eight kathas in Dhaka's Badda.

On July 31 last year, ACC Assistant Director Mahbubul Alam in Dhaka filed the case, accusing Enamul of amassing Tk 9.76 crore, which is inconsistent with his income and beyond his known sources of income.

According to the case statement, the accused bought land, flats, and commercial spaces at 64 places for Tk 21.52 crore between 1993 and 2022. He had gold ornaments, savings, and investment in share market, and fish farm worth Tk 58.32 lakh.

Prof Habibur Rahman, president of RU Teachers Association, said, "We are being mentally tortured. We seek relief from this ordeal. This movement is not just for the current teachers but for future generations who aspire to join the teaching profession."

Teachers from 35 public universities have been refraining from work since Monday, demanding the reinstatement of the previous pension benefits instead of the newly introduced "Prottoy" scheme under the Universal Pension System.

Renovation delay

Mehedi Hasan, an official of Max Infrastructure Limited, claimed that they could not complete the work within the deadline despite having adequate logistical capacity as BR could not pay them money in due time.

Contacted, Zishan Dutta, bridge engineer of the BR (eastern zone), admitted that BR failed to pay the contractor due to a fund crisis.

"However, the renovation work is now progressing fast. About 80 percent of the work has been completed and the bridge is expected to open to the public by July this year," he added.

FERRY SERVICE: FROM CONVENIENCE TO DEATH TRAP

Although the ferry service was launched to mitigate the suffering of people due to the bridge's closure, it has instead turned into a death trap for commuters.

Accidents on the ferry so far have claimed two lives. Besides, lax monitoring, insufficient ferries, and illegal boat movement on the river using the ghat have heightened the risk.

Ashraf Uddin, a director of Bangladesh Rural Electrification Board, was killed when a boat hit a ferry while crossing the river last week, while Fatema Tuz Johora, a college student, died while getting into an auto-rickshaw at the ferry ghat on April 29.

"The boats recklessly ply the river using the ferry ghat," said Kanak Das, a resident of Boalkhali upazila.

Asked how boats are illegally using RHD's ghat, Moslem Uddin, executive engineer of RHD in Chattogram, said they have already taken measures to stop the illegal boat movement.

Constructed as a metre-gauge single-line rail bridge in 1931, the Kalurghat Bridge was later reconfigured in 1962 to allow vehicular movement too.

However, BR has long been working to replace Kalurghat Bridge.

A proposal to construct a new rail and road bridge has already been approved. The Korean Exim Bank will fund its construction.

of deities, temples, and churches, seven cases of grabbing or attempting to grab cremation grounds, 94 incidents of attacks, vandalism, looting, and arson, and 40 cases of vandalism and attempted destruction of idols.

There were also 12 cases of kidnapping, disappearance, and forced conversion, while eight people were arrested on fictitious charges of defamation of religion, he added.

In the last year, 32 incidents of communal violence took place during the national elections and five during local government elections, he said, citing the report.

"This statistic is only a mere part of the communal violence," he said, adding that a comparative review of communal violence over the past years shows that the incidents of violence have not changed much even today.

"In such a prevailing communal situation, it is noticeable that during the election period of 1970, the minority population decreased from 19 percent to 8.6 percent now," Dasgupta said.

The environment for the free practice of religion has been completely curtailed, he added.

"The communal evil forces, which are hiding in the administrative and political fields, did not allow the religious and ethnic minorities and indigenous people of this country to ensure their land rights," he observed.

"The religious minority groups are still in fear. Their fate has not changed. They have no security for their lives," he said.

He alleged that the Awami League government has not implemented its commitments towards minorities pledged in their previous election manifesto, including the formation of a National Minority Commission.

BCL man 'threatens' CU quota protest leader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

An organiser of the ongoing anti-quota protests at Chittagong University received a death threat from an alleged member of CU unit of Chhatra League.

Khan Talat Mahmud Rafi, a student of the dramatics department and a resident of Alaol dormitory, claimed that his father, Tariqul Islam Khan, who resides in Netrakona, received a phone call on Sunday night. An unknown person said if Rafi did not back down from the protest, he will face dire consequences, he alleged.

The call came from a phone number used by Hridoy Ahmed Rizvi, a student of the same department and a BCL activist, he added.

Rizvi is associated with the shuttle train-based BCL faction "CFC group", said university sources.

"I told my father to lodge a general diary with the police station in Netrakona," Rafi said.

Asked, Rizvi said his cell phone got "hacked" recently.

"I don't know who called his family. My phone was shut down due to a technical issue for nearly 24 hours. After learning about the incident, I informed my political seniors to take steps in this regard. Apart from that, I will inform the proctor's office to investigate the incident," said Rizvi.

CHITTAGONG MEDICAL COLLEGE HOSPITAL

MRI machine non-functional for 2yrs

Patients bearing extra cost to do tests from outside

ARUN BIKASH DEY, Ctg

Jahangir Alam, 65, suffered a brain stroke on Friday and was admitted to the Neuro Medicine Ward of Chittagong Medical College Hospital.

Doctors advised his family to get a Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) test.

However, the lone MRI machine at CMCH has been non-functional for two years, leaving the family in a dilemma about how to afford the expensive test elsewhere.

Many poor patients like Jahangir come to CMCH for treatment, only to find themselves unable to afford the costly MRI tests at private diagnostic centres, which range from Tk 9,000 to Tk 20,000.

Before the machine broke down on May 16, 2022, CMCH provided MRI services for Tk 3,000-5,000.

"I am retired and spent most of my savings on my daughters' marriages while another daughter is still studying. I am struggling to collect money for this expensive test," said Jahangir from his hospital bed.

Md Nasir, 32, a vegetable vendor from Fatikchhari upazila in Chattogram, faced a similar ordeal after suffering a spinal cord injury.

"If CMCH's MRI service was available, it would have benefitted us. Now, we had to do the test from outside spending much more than we can afford," said his wife, Mamtaz Akter.

"MRI is a modern diagnostic test that takes very clear images of internal organs to detect specific diseases or abnormalities," explained Pradip Kumar Kayasthagir, a professor at CMCH's Neuro Medicine Ward.

He said around 120 patients are admitted to his ward daily, and at least 10 percent need an MRI.

HOW THINGS UNFOLDED

The health ministry allocated a Tk 9.84 crore new MRI machine of the Japanese Hitachi brand to CMCH in 2017 after the old one failed in 2014, according to Dr. Rajib Palit, CMCH's deputy director. The machine was installed in the hospital's cardiology building.

After its inauguration on October 24, 2017, it couldn't be fully utilised due to a lack of films. Full service began in January 2018, but the machine faced a technical glitch in October 2020, halting service for seven months until May 2021.

The machine kept having glitches until it finally stopped working on May 16, 2022.

"There is no post of biomedical engineer at the hospital, so medical equipment are not being properly maintained," said Dr Subas Majumder, head of CMCH's radiology and imaging department.

CMCH PAYING FOR HIS OWN DECISION

Since the machine's warranty expired in August 2020, it will now take Tk 7 crore to repair it.

CMCH could have repaired it for Tk 1 crore with a maintenance contract with the supplier company, but the hospital only wanted to pay Tk 65 lakh, according to sources.

"I have informed the health ministry about our requirements, including the need for an MRI machine. We need Tk 7 crore to repair the existing one and Tk 17 crore to buy a new machine," said CMCH director Brig Gen. Shamim Ahsan.

Health Minister Dr Samanta Lal Sen in a recent visit to CMCH said, "I feel bad knowing that the MRI machine in the hospital is out of order. Chattogram is the second largest city after Dhaka. I will do whatever is necessary to fix the problem."

EMPHASIS ON FINANCIAL AUTONOMY

At least 20 MRI tests were performed daily when the machine was operational between 2018 and 2020. With each test costing a minimum of Tk 3,000, CMCH could collect at least Tk 60,000 daily, amounting to Tk 5,18,40,000 over three years.

"We deposit all the money realised from patients' diagnostic tests to the government fund," said the CMCH director.

Dr Faisal Iqbal Chowdhury, general secretary of the Bangladesh Medical Association's Chattogram chapter, said government-run hospitals need financial autonomy to get urgent repairs done.

The current system requires hospital directors to request funds from the health ministry even for minor emergencies, leading to unnecessary delays in providing essential services, he added.

Fun trip to Cox's Bazar ends in tragedy

2 teens killed in bike crash

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

What started as a joyful trip by six teenage friends to Cox's Bazar ended in a tragedy as one of their motorcycles was hit by a truck on the Chattogram-Cox's Bazar highway early yesterday morning, killing two of the friends.

Md Emon, 17, son of Md Yusuf, and Ariful Islam, 17, son of Abdur Rob, died in the accident that occurred at the Dohazari-Dewanhat intersection around 4:00am yesterday, said OC Khan Mohammad Erfan of Dohazari Highway Police Station.

Both were residents of Noakhali district and 10th-graders at a school in Maijdee.

The six friends, on three motorcycles, were returning home from their trip to the seaside town when the truck, coming from the opposite direction, hit the motorcycle that Ariful and Yusuf were riding.

Locals rushed them to Chandanaish Upazila Health Complex where Emon was declared dead.

Ariful died at CMCH.

Ahsan Ullah, maternal uncle of Ariful, said the six friends had travelled to Cox's Bazar on Friday, but they told their families that they were going by bus.

When asked how a 17-year-old could own a motorcycle, he said Ariful, being the youngest child, was favoured by his parents and they may have bought him the motorbike after repeated requests.

DENGUE

One dies, 63 get hospitalised in a day

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

One more dengue patient died and 63 others were hospitalised in the last 24 hours till yesterday morning.

With the new death, the total number of deaths rose to 47 while the total number of cases reached 4,041.

Some 266 dengue patients are receiving treatment in different hospitals. Of them, 138 are from outside Dhaka.

KALURGHAT BRIDGE IN CHATTOGRAM

Renovation delay prolongs suffering

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

Abdul Malek, 52, was waiting at the ghat beside Kalurghat Bridge in Chattogram to board a ferry on his way back from the port city to Boalkhali upazila after visiting his doctor on Thursday.

Even after waiting for 30 minutes, he failed to board the ferry as it was packed.

"It is very difficult to remain standing for this long with multiple physical complications that I have. If the bridge had been opened to traffic, it would have saved us from a lot of miseries," he told this correspondent.

Like Malek, thousands of commuters who need to cross the Karnaphuli river are suffering immensely every day to board the ferry due to the delay in renovation work of the 93-year-old Kalurghat Bridge.

"The delay in the bridge's renovation work has prolonged our sufferings," said Jalal Uddin, a university student.

In particular, people from the port city as well as from south Chattogram's three upazilas -- Boalkhali, Rangunia, and Patiya -- have no alternative to crossing the river without using the bridge.

According to the Roads and Highways Department, around 22,000-25,000 commuters cross the bridge on every working day.

The Tk 43 crore renovation work on the bridge, being implemented by Bangladesh Railway and carried out by Max Infrastructure Limited, a contractor firm, began in August last year.

Since the renovation work began, the bridge has remained closed while RHD launched a ferry service next to the bridge for vehicles to cross the river.

The work was supposed to be completed by October 31, 2023.

Locals blame the negligence of both BR and the contractor firm for the delay in renovation work.

Youth stabbed to death in Chattogram

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A young man was stabbed to death allegedly by his friend in Pakhir Goli area of the port city on Sunday night.

The deceased is Md Mona, 25, said police.

Mona got into an altercation with his friend Jewel and some of Jewel's accomplices, and at one stage, they stabbed him, said SM Obaidul Haque, officer-in-charge of Kotwali Police Station.

Locals took him to Chittagong Medical College Hospital where the doctor declared him dead. Police are conducting drives to arrest the criminals, he said.

16 grenades found in Gazipur construction site

STAR REPORT

Police evacuated and sealed off a privately owned land in Gazipur city yesterday after the construction workers dug up 16 grenades at the property.

The bomb disposal unit from the Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) visited the spot and defused the grenades around 2:30pm, said Syed Rafiul Karim, officer-in-charge of Gazipur Metropolitan Police Station.

While digging up the northern end of the land in the city's South Chhayabeethi area, workers came across those buried in the ground in an urn around 9:00am, said the OC quoting locals.

On information, police sealed off the spot, the OC said.

Abul Kashem of the district's Kapasia upazila had bought and fenced the land in the city's South Chhayabeethi area years ago. He recently decided to build a house there and appointed workers, according to locals.

Rahmat Ullah Chowdhury, the chief of the bomb disposal unit, told The Daily Star, "We have recovered around 16 live military-grade grenades from the spot. All of those were disposed of successfully with adequate precaution and proper procedures."

It took around three hours to dispose of all the grenades, said Rahmat, also the deputy commissioner of the Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime unit of DMP.

"We assume the grenades were hidden under the soil during the Liberation War or later," he added.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Six months in review
BEST OF DHALLYWOOD

During Eid-ul-Azha, five films were released. The standout was Shakib Khan starrer 'Toofan', directed by Raihan Rafi, which was both commercially successful and well-received by audiences.

ZAHID AKBAR

In the first six months of this year, around 30 films have been released in the country, with only a few achieving notable commercial successes. However, several movies and songs have generated significant buzz in the entertainment industry and among audiences.

Early releases: A slow start

From January to March, a few films, including Shesh Bazi, Rukhe Darao, Chhaya Brikkho, Kagojer Bou, and Peyarar Subash, were released, but none made a significant impact commercially or critically. The situation changed with the arrival of April.

Eid-ul-Fitr releases

The festival of Eid has always been an opportune time for film releases due to higher audience turnout. Eleven films were released during Eid-ul-Fitr. Leading the charge was Himel Ashraf's Rajkumar, starring Shakib Khan. Although it had an extended run in multiplexes, it fell short commercially compared to last year's blockbuster Priyotoma.

Among other notable releases, Mishuk Moni's Deyaler Desh, starring Sariful Razz and Shobnom Bubly, received praise for Bubly's performance. Mostafa Kamal Raz's Omar, featuring Razz as its lead, also garnered attention and was released internationally.

Gias Uddin Selim's much-anticipated Kajol Rekha, featuring Sariful Razz and Mondera Chakroborty, sparked discussions among critics and audiences but did not perform well at the box office. The simultaneous release of three films featuring Razz failed to engage as many viewers as anticipated. Additionally, Mona: Jinn-2 had a modest run in multiplexes.

Post-Eid-ul-Fitr releases

After winning awards at various international film festivals, including Iran's prestigious Fajr Film Festival, Fatima, featuring Tasnia Farin in her first Bangladeshi silver screen project, generated buzz but failed commercially.

Eid-ul-Azha releases

During Eid-ul-Azha, five films were released. The standout was Shakib Khan starrer Toofan, directed by Raihan Rafi, which was both commercially successful and well-received by audiences. According to the production house Alpha-i, Toofan set a record for the highest number of shows at Star Cineplex and was released internationally, winning the hearts of viewers.

Chart-topping songs

Despite numerous releases, few songs gained widespread attention. However, songs from Shakib Khan's films stood out. The duet O Rajkumar from Rajkumar, sung by Somnur Monir Konal and Balam, became a crowd favourite. Prince Mahmud's Borbaad, sung by Alif, from the same film was also well-received. The duet Ninduke from Lipstick, sung by Nancy and Imran, and Mithun Chakra's Bisorjoner Betha from Deyaler Desh were popular among listeners.

The biggest hit of the first half of this year is perhaps the song Laage Ura Dhura from Toofan. A duet by Pritom Hasan and Debosrie Antara, it gained significant popularity across all audience segments, bringing emerging musician Antara into the limelight. The song Dushtu Kokil by Dilshad Nahar Kona from the same film is currently trending and well-received by listeners.

Although the beginning of the year didn't quite start on a high note for Dhallywood, it picked up its pace during Eid as audiences flocked to theatres to watch their favourite stars. Anticipation mounts high for the remaining six months of the year, hoping to prove fruitful for the industry.

Rituparna Sengupta to star in Bangladeshi film

Indian actress Rituparna Sengupta is set to collaborate with Rashid Polash on his latest directorial film Tari.

The director informed The Daily Star that the actress has given her initial confirmation over the phone. "We will officially sign the agreement with the actress soon," Polash said.

He also mentioned that some parts of the film have already been shot in Rajshahi. They plan to complete the remaining scenes in September when Rituparna arrives in Dhaka. In the movie, Rituparna will play the role of an extra artiste.

The story of Tari is written by Ahadur Rahman, with the screenplay and dialogues by Golam Rabbani. The director plans to release the film this year under the Punya Films banner.

'Despicable Me 4' tops box office on opening weekend

Animated comedy Despicable Me 4 soared to the top of the North American box office during its opening weekend, according to figures from industry tracker Exhibitor Relations released Sunday.

The fourth main instalment in the Minions franchise, featuring Will Ferrell as the voice of a new villain, garnered USD 75 million in ticket sales in the United States and Canada since its release on Friday by Universal Pictures.

This is an exceptional opening for the fourth instalment of an animated series, second only to Toy Story 4, stated box office analyst David A Gross.

Lavish lifestyle with illegal money is the sign of cowards. Rather, an organisation becomes efficient through proper self-criticism. We do not want to shy away from criticism. We want to accept criticism and ensure maximum transparency in the judicial process," he said.

The National University organised the discussion titled "Bangabandhu's commentary on corruption and building corruption free society" at the International Mother Language Institute in the capital's Segunbagicha.

The chief justice said corruption has increased in comparison with the gradually increasing rate of literacy.

"Laws alone do not solve all problems and address corruption. Awareness and social movement are needed for this."

Justice Obaidul said young people have to ask whether their parents earned their money in a fair way.

"Wives must be curious about whether a part of the wealth of their husbands is illegal. Friends and families should be aware whether their relatives were making their incomes in the right way. This is the first step of social awareness. If the corrupt father, husband or colleague cannot be isolated and boycotted, the deep wounds from corruption will never be healed and the disease will not be cured," he added.

He said corruption is not only depriving the people from the benefits of development, but is also destroying the traditional values.

"The show of wealth has now become a matter of competition and enjoying luxury services with illegal money has become the latest fashion. No one wants to know about the source of this money. Rather, many are feeling jealous ... . Corruption has exhausted our sense of shame and made the pride of honesty meaningless."

The chief justice said strict enforcement of laws is needed to fight corruption.

Canada stand

Emiliano Martinez to get past Ecuador in the last eight and while Lionel Scaloni's team have yet to really hit top gear they start as clear favourites against Canada.

American coach Jesse Marsch has made an instant impact with Canada, taking over in mid-May and quickly implementing his high-energy, pressing style to great effect.

Marsch, who was reported to be close to taking over as USA coach before the decision last year to re-hire Gregg Berhalter, has had the last laugh as his team have produced a memorable run to the last four while the Americans failed to get out of their group.

Canada got past a Venezuela team that had won all three of their group stage games, winning on penalties at the end of a pulsating encounter on Friday.

However, they know that Lionel Messi and Argentina represent a very different proposition.

The teams met in the opening group game of the tournament with Argentina winning 2-0, but there is no shortage of confidence in Marsch's team.

"It's going to take everything," said Bayern Munich wing-back Alphonso Davies.

"Going into this game, we know what's on the line. We win and go forward, we lose and go home. They're going to come out with everything. We're hungrier than ever, we expect a battle -- as they should," he said.

Three of the four quarterfinals were decided on penalties, but Marsch insists his team will play their usual attacking style.

"The game against Argentina will have to be the best we've ever played ... We're not going to sit back and just try to defend. We will be aggressive. We're going to try to play the way we want to play and see if we can keep it up," he promised.

France faces

common ground.

Prime Minister Gabriel Attal, a centrist and close ally of Macron, tendered his resignation but the head of state rejected it.

"The president has asked Gabriel Attal to remain prime minister for the time being in order to ensure the country's stability," Macron's office said in a statement.

A fragmented parliament will make it hard for anyone to push through a domestic agenda and is likely to weaken France's role in the European Union and further afield.

Interior Minister Gerald Darmanin was seen entering the Elysee presidential palace shortly after Attal, suggesting the president was canvassing opinions from his allies about what to do next.

Leaders of the component parties of the NFP met overnight and were due to meet again later yesterday to discuss who should replace Attal and what strategy the alliance should adopt, said a source at the Communist Party, one of its smaller members.

The NFP, hastily assembled for this election in an attempt to unify the left-wing vote against the far right, has no single leader and did not say before the election who would be its pick for prime minister.

Tondelier, one of a number of NFP figures seen as potential candidates for the post, said on France Inter radio it could be someone from the hard-left France Unbowed party, the Greens or the Socialists, the three largest parties in the alliance.

another year, read BB notice.

Under the facility, borrowers will not be eligible to get new loans until they have adjusted the full loan amount.

The central bank said that this facility would not be considered as rescheduling or restructuring of loans.

BB asked banks for proper provisioning against the loans and taking security before adjustment of the loans, it added.

Banks will have to take legal action to recover the loans if the borrowers fail to repay the loans after getting the facility.

Earlier in May 2019, the central bank introduced a one-time exit policy for defaulters to bring down the high bad loans in the country's banking sector. The bad loans then amounted to Tk 110,873 crore.

"The exit policy should have been left to the banks' discretion," said Monzur Hossain, research director of the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS).

This policy will affect the banks' profitability, while the loan defaulters will be tempted by the facility, he said.

Mohammad Nurul Amin, former chairman of the Association of Bankers of Bangladesh, echoed the same. "Defaulters are likely to be encouraged to not repay loans due to the facility."

against Hamas infrastructure in the Gaza Strip, and that it had taken out of action more than 30 fighters.

The new Israeli offensive comes as Egypt, Qatar and the United States stepped up efforts to mediate a ceasefire agreement between Israel and Hamas as the Gaza offensive entered its tenth month.

Mediators were in contact with Hamas amid "intensive Egyptian meetings this week with all parties", Egypt's state-linked Al-Qahera News said.

At least 38,193 Palestinians have been killed in Israel's military offensive in the enclave since October 7, and 87,903 have been wounded, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. A total of 40 Palestinians were killed in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

Gaza residents said tanks advanced from at least three directions yesterday and reached the heart of Gaza City, backed by heavy Israeli fire from the air and ground. That forced thousands of people out of their homes to look for safer shelter, which for many was impossible to find, and some slept on the roadside.

Medics at the Al-Ahli Arab Baptist Hospital in Gaza City had to evacuate patients to the already crowded and under-equipped Indonesian Hospital in the northern Gaza Strip, Palestinian health officials said. An Israeli strike in the eastern suburb of Shejaia killed four Palestinians, medics said.

Fakhrul alleged that the government was intentionally ignoring the issue of sending Khaleda abroad for treatment.

He voiced his concerns, saying Khaleda had to be admitted to hospital frequently as her illnesses were getting complicated.

Demanding her immediate and unconditional release, Fakhul said, "She has been subjected to serious injustice because of political vendetta. By denying her treatment abroad, she is slowly being driven closer to death."

The BNP chairperson returned home on July 2 after spending 10 days at Evercare Hospital following the procedure for pacemaker implantation.

The 79-year-old former prime minister has long been battling various ailments, including liver cirrhosis, arthritis, diabetes, and issues related to the kidney, lung, heart, and eyes.

Since her conditional release from prison in 2020, the BNP chief has frequently received medical care at the hospital under the supervision of a medical board headed by cardiologist Prof Shahabuddin Talukder.

Khaleda's doctors have advised sending her abroad since she was diagnosed with liver cirrhosis in November 2021.

On June 25, two Supreme Court lawyers, who are also accused in the same case, filed another petition with the HC challenging the Dhaka court's order that framed charges against Prof Yunus and 13 others.

SC lawyers Md Yousuf Ali and Jafrul Hasan Sharif submitted the petition saying that they have not committed any offence and that the trial court issued the charge-framing order using an AI tool, which is not permitted.

The entire amount of Tk 25.22 crore was part of the entitlement of Grameen Telecom's listed 164 employees. The employees contributed money to their trade union for paying for expenses, including lawyers' fees, they said.

The trade union representative paid the fees to them (lawyers Yousuf and Jafrul) out of that amount and the same does not constitute any offence and therefore, the instant proceedings are liable to be quashed to ensure justice, the SC lawyers stated in the petition.

Biden asks Democrats to stick with him

REUTERS, Washington

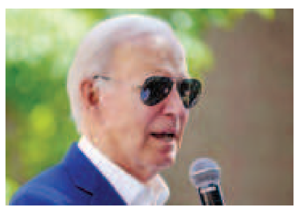
US President Joe Biden told his fellow Democrats yesterday that he is "firmly committed" to staying in the 2024 presidential race, seeking to head off concerns the party could lose both the White House and Congress in the November 5 election.

"I am not going anywhere," Biden told MSNBC after calling into the network's Morning Joe program.



A handful of House of Representatives Democrats have called on Biden, 81, to terminate a campaign that has been on defense since a shaky June 27 debate against Republican Donald Trump. A series of public events since then have not put an end to Democrats' questions about whether Biden can win or hold up through another four years in office.

Conversations were certain to intensify when lawmakers return to Capitol Hill.

Stranded aid trucks deepen Gaza hunger crisis

REUTERS, Al-Arish

Hundreds of trucks loaded with food and water have been stranded on a scorching Egyptian road, some for nearly two months, awaiting permission to deliver the much needed humanitarian supplies to Gaza.

About 50 kilometres from the Gaza border, trucks carrying flour, water and other aid line a dusty road in both directions. The drivers say they have been waiting for several weeks in the searing Egyptian summer heat.

The standstill is exacerbating Gaza's dire humanitarian crisis after nine months of offensive. Aid groups warn there is a high risk of famine across the besieged coastal territory.

The truck drivers, parked on the outskirts of the Egyptian city of al-Arish in the Sinai Peninsula, say they have been unable to deliver humanitarian supplies ever since Israel expanded its offensive on the Gaza-Egypt border in May. Some food has had to be discarded, they said.

"I swear to God, before this load, we came here and stood for more than 50 days and eventually the load was returned because it had expired," said truck driver Elsayed el-Nabawi. Israeli military started its assault on the southern Gazan city of Rafah in May.

Le Pen's and Orban's far-right groups unite

AFP, Brussels

Marine Le Pen's far-right party was yesterday poised to strike an alliance with that of Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban in the EU parliament, a day after being dealt a surprise defeat in French elections.

Officials from Le Pen's National Rally (RN) announced a "constitutive meeting of the new group, Patriots for Europe," which Orban launched just over a week ago, to be followed by a news conference in Brussels later yesterday.

Orban's spokesman Zoltan Kovacs said on X, formerly Twitter, that "Patriots for Europe continues to grow as Marine Le Pen's National Rally joins".

With the RN, the new grouping stands to become the third-biggest force in the European Parliament, behind the conservative European People's Party (EPP) of European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen, and the Socialists & Democrats.

The announcement came a day after French voters relegated the anti-immigrant National Rally to third spot in legislative elections.

India's PM Modi arrives in Russia

AFP, Moscow

Prime Minister Narendra Modi arrived in Russia yesterday, as the Indian leader treaded a fine line between maintaining a longstanding relationship with Moscow and courting closer Western ties.

The visit is Modi's first since Russia launched its campaign in Ukraine and since he was returned to power last month as leader of the world's most populous country.

"I look forward to reviewing all aspects of bilateral cooperation with my friend President Vladimir Putin and sharing perspectives on various regional and global issues," said Modi in a statement.

He will hold talks with Putin today.

Moscow remains a key supplier of cut-price oil and weapons to India.

Boeing to plead guilty to fraud in US probe

REUTERS, New York

Boeing BA.N has agreed to plead guilty to a criminal fraud conspiracy charge and pay a fine of $243.6 million to resolve a US Justice Department (DOJ) investigation into two 737 MAX fatal crashes, the government said in a court filing on Sunday.

The plea deal, which requires a judge's approval, would brand the planemaker a convicted felon in connection with crashes in Indonesia and Ethiopia over a five-month period in 2018 and 2019 that killed 346 people. The settlement drew swift criticism from victims' families.

The DOJ push to charge Boeing has deepened an ongoing crisis engulfing Boeing since a separate January in-flight blowout exposed continuing safety and quality issues at the planemaker.

Taliban slash govt salaries of Afghan women

AFP, Kabul

Afghan authorities have slashed the salaries of women government workers who have been forced to stay at home since the Taliban seized power, the finance ministry said yesterday.

After kicking out the foreign-backed government in 2021, the Taliban government stopped most women employed in the public sector from attending their offices while continuing to pay them.

"Women who are at home and do not go to the office... their salaries are 5,000 Afghanis ($70) a month," Ahmad Wali Haqmal, the finance ministry spokesman, told AFP.

Women who are permitted to work in segregated areas such as in government hospitals or schools would continue to get paid a salary according to their position.

Women had previously earned up to around 35,000 Afghanis in the public sector, including university professors forced off campus.

Administrative roles in ministries could pay around 20,000 Afghanis, although this was reduced for many to around 15,000 after the Taliban seized power.

A 25-year-old woman, who asked not to be identified for security reasons and who has worked for the Information and Culture department outside Kabul since early 2021, said her salary has dropped from 10,000 Afghanis.

"Making women stay at home is already a very big problem for us -- we are in a very bad mental and psychological condition -- and now that our salaries have decreased, this has only worsened," she told AFP.

She uses her salary to support the seven members of her family, including her sick mother, but said it would barely last her two weeks.

The salary change came into effect in July and is estimated to affect tens of thousands of women who work in the public sector, the finance ministry spokesman said.

Since returning to power in 2021, Taliban authorities have curtailed the freedoms of women based on a strict interpretation of Islamic law, which the United Nations has labelled "gender apartheid".

Women have been pushed out of public life, including bans on education, as well as visiting public parks, gyms and baths.

Afghanistan has been battered by decades of war, long propped up by international aid that has been dramatically reduced since the Taliban took back power.

Four Indian soldiers killed in clashes in J&K

Six others injured

AFP, New Delhi

Four Indian soldiers were killed and at least six others were wounded in gun battles with militants in Jammu and Kashmir (J&K) state, a senior police officer said yesterday.

The officer, who was not authorised to speak to the media, said fighting broke out after militants ambushed an army convoy in the Malhar area of Jammu.

This is the latest incident in an uptick of attacks in the disputed territory.

On Sunday, two soldiers and six suspected militants were killed in two separate gun battles in villages in the Kulgam district, police said.

India and Pakistan both claim Muslim-majority Kashmir in full and have fought three wars for control of the Himalayan region.

Rebel groups have waged an insurgency since 1989, demanding independence for the territory or its merger with Pakistan.

The conflict has killed tens of thousands of civilians, soldiers and rebels.

Inflation continues to break records

Lack of timely govt actions is costing us dearly

The government's inability to keep annual inflation anywhere near its target of 7.5 percent is deeply concerning. As reported by this daily, the annual average inflation has surged to 9.73 percent in the just-concluded fiscal year, according to Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS). This is the highest inflation experienced in 12 years since 2011-2012, when annual inflation was 10.62 percent. What is even more concerning is that this is the second consecutive year that the Consumer Prices Index has stood at more than 9 percent. This means that the tremendous inflationary pressure experienced by citizens has actually persisted for two straight years.

The resulting erosion of people's real income and the deterioration of their living standards—particularly of low-income groups—are there for all to see. According to an earlier survey by the South Asian Network on Economic Modelling (SANEM), as many as 70 percent of the households in Bangladesh had to change their food habits involuntarily to cope with rising prices. It further discovered that food insecurity among the poor had increased drastically, meaning that the prospect of malnutrition and various health concerns has also risen considerably. Despite such warnings, the fact that the government has failed to bring inflation down by now is completely unacceptable. True, there have been some measures to address it, but those were taken too late, and because of the "time lag effect," we are yet to see them really kick in.

The good news is that some of those measures may eventually pay off down the line. However, as experts have said, the government needs to do more. For starters, perhaps it should increase the interest rate further to tame inflation. Moreover, its failure to properly regulate the market means that a section of business groups is continuing to artificially prop up prices. These businesses, unfortunately, are either politically connected, or have acquired monopoly powers due to failed government policies, which makes holding them accountable difficult. But that is exactly what the government must do, without exception.

So, while its focus—although late—has so far been on demand containment, now it must also shift to addressing the distortions in the market and the problems in supply chain. And these issues have persisted in our country for years and have somewhat become entrenched. Despite that, the government needs to take a holistic approach to finally fix them. Parallel to that, it must ramp up its support for lower-income groups. That should include its rice distribution programme, as well as selling essential food items at subsidised rates to low-income earners.

Bring discipline back into politics

HRSS data on political violence paints a scary picture

A new study on political violence has once again underscored the treacherous currents of politics in Bangladesh. According to a report citing the findings of the Human Rights Support Society (HRSS), in the first half of 2024, political conflicts claimed as many as 91 lives. Strikingly, 71 of them were supporters of the ruling party. These incidents were linked to electoral violence, territorial dominance, party infighting, and clashes between police and the opposition. The fact that even an affiliation with the Awami League, which "helped itself" to a record fourth consecutive term in January, was no guarantee for safety goes to show the overall deterioration of our political climate.

These numbers came up in an overview of the state of human rights in Bangladesh between January and June. During this period, there were 1,004 incidents of political violence that also saw at least 4,026 people getting injured. The list of fatalities, however, gives only a partial view of the precarity of political activists as it was the opposition that suffered disproportionately in every other aspect. For example, 714 political workers and leaders were arrested during this time, 574 of whom belong to BNP and Jamaat. Additionally, law enforcement agencies and ruling party activists foiled at least 99 opposition rallies. We also saw how questionable legal tactics were used to weaken the opposition before the general election, including ghost cases, mass arrests, mass convictions, long pre-trial detentions, etc.—as if to justify the opposition's decision to boycott the election.

But the absence of a functional opposition led to the ruling party allowing its "rebel" members to run "independently", putting one segment of the party against another, disregarding the fracture growing within its fold. It is as if the chaos it sowed to derail the opposition campaign has come full circle to derail its own momentum. The lack of intraparty discipline far predates the January 7 election, however, and its "cultivation" over the years has led to constant infighting, so much so that ruling party members are now killing each other for their own gain.

This is deeply troubling. These political deaths—an apt description would be "murders"—are an extreme manifestation of a rot that has been eating away at our politics for a long time, and it will continue to spiral if steps are not taken to establish party discipline, rule of law, and of course, democracy in the country. As the party in power, the fallout of any chaos within it inevitably spills over into the public life, and as such, the party leadership must strictly discipline their rank and file. They also must ensure equal treatment and opportunities for all political entities.

How a flawed data ecosystem can distort economic reality

The recently published revised data on the Balance of Payment (BoP) by Bangladesh Bank (BB) is quite revealing, as it reconciled the discrepancy in export income reported by two government organisations: the Export Promotion Bureau (EPB) and the National Board of Revenue (NBR). According to the EPB, exports grew by 3.93 percent during July-April of the fiscal year 2024. However, the central bank has come up with a revised export figure indicating a negative export growth of 6.8 percent during the same period. The reconciled export statistics revealed a discrepancy of $13.8 billion, which means the actual export income was $33.67 billion as opposed to the $47.47 billion shown. In FY2023, the difference of export earnings between the EPB and BB was $12 billion. The reduced export income in the first nine months of FY2024—$13.8 billion—is equivalent to three percent of Bangladesh's gross domestic product (GDP). According to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS), the preliminary GDP estimate for FY 2024 is $459 billion.

Although the overall deficit in the BoP remains the same, there are internal changes within the BoP statement. The financial account now shows a surplus of $653 million for July-March of FY2024 instead of a deficit of $9.25 billion reported earlier by the BB. This has turned a positive current account into a deficit one. The earlier data by BB covering July-March of FY2024 showed that the current account surplus was $5.8 billion. The corrected data reveals that the current account is in a deficit of $4.1 billion during the same period.

Though the BB has passed the buck to the EPB and the NBR, saying that the NBR made multiple entries of export data received from the EPB, the mismatch of export values among the BB, EPB, and NBR raises a fundamental question regarding the precision of economic reporting and its ramifications for Bangladesh's economy.

The modification was made in response to extensive criticism of the significant difference between the actual export receipts and the shipment value that has been consistent for several years. For a long time, it has been a mystery how there could be such a large gap between export receipts and shipment values. This correction finally resolved the longstanding mystery surrounding the export data discrepancy. Exporters, who have been experiencing various challenges due to lower global demand and import control by BB, have consistently contended that the export data provided by EPB did not reflect the reality.

Due to time lag and disputes, there could be some differences between the BB and the EPB export value data. However, the astronomical difference between the numbers from the two sources in FY2024 surprised everyone. In the absence of any clarification from the government bodies responsible for collecting export data, various explanations have been floating around. For example, the export proceeds could have been brought into the country through informal channels or as remittances. Another plausible reason could be that only a portion of the export proceeds were brought in since there is an expectation of the devaluation of the Bangladeshi taka against the US dollar. The uncertainty before the national elections in early 2024 could also have been a reason for capital flight through not bringing the export proceeds into the country.

But now, the BB has reconciled data on export income from various sources such as EPB and NBR and found that the NBR has been making multiple entries of export income, which led to a discrepancy in export value data. The reconciliation of the data among the three important government bodies has led to a surplus financial account and a deficit current account, which, in the end, keeps the overall BoP the same.

However, the revised export figures have implications for Bangladesh's macroeconomic indicators and consequent policymaking. A reduction of $13.8 billion in export income during July-April of FY2024 will lead to a downward revision of GDP growth projections not only for FY2024 but also for FY2025. The Ministry of Finance has just announced the national budget for FY2025 in June 2024, which presents the economic outlook for the next three years—from FY2025 to FY2027—based on the Medium-Term Macroeconomic Policy Statement (MTMPS), where projections for various economic indicators are made.

ILLUSTRATION: BIPLOB CHAKROBORTY

The decline in exports reduces the contribution of exports to GDP, negatively affecting overall economic growth. Due to the export sector's interconnectedness with other sectors of the economy, including manufacturing, services, and logistics, this impact will be reflected in other economic activities as well. A decline in exports can lead to reduced industrial production, lower service demand, and decreased employment in export-oriented industries.

The export-GDP ratio is a key indicator of the economy. A lower export indicates a potential decline in export competitiveness or demand. Exports and remittances are the primary sources of foreign exchange earnings in Bangladesh. A decline in exports reduces the inflow of foreign currency, negatively impacting the country's foreign exchange reserves and its ability to finance imports and service external debt.

Similarly, the debt-GDP ratio is a critical indicator of fiscal health and economic stability. A lower GDP growth rate due to declining exports can lead to an increase in the debt-GDP ratio. A higher debt-GDP ratio implies higher debt servicing costs, which can strain public finances. Currently, Bangladesh's debt stock stands at 37.7 percent of GDP as per the revised budget of FY2024, which is estimated to increase to 38.6 percent in FY2025 as per MTMPS.

The discrepancy in export data and its impact on macroeconomic indicators bring back the broader issue of our data ecosystem.

Accurate economic data is crucial for effective policymaking. The revised export figures will necessitate adjustments in economic policies to address the challenges posed by declining exports. Policymakers will need to take measures to stimulate export growth, diversify the export base, and enhance competitiveness.

Discrepancies in economic data can affect investor confidence. Accurate and reliable data is essential for investors to make informed decisions. To restore confidence, the government and relevant institutions must enhance transparency and accuracy in economic reporting.

The anomalies in export data from various sources reinforce the need to integrate data from multiple sources, providing a more comprehensive and accurate picture of export activities. This also necessitates strengthening institutional coordination. Advanced data analytics and technology are now needed to improve the accuracy and efficiency of data collection and reporting processes.

Though late, this initiative has finally been taken. It is high time we developed standardised data collection and reporting methodologies to ensure consistency and accuracy across institutions. There should be adequate human resources to work on export data at NBR. Besides, the capacity of those engaged in data management should be raised to ensure quality and precision.

Transparency and accountability are crucial for maintaining trust in economic data and policymaking. Enhancing transparency involves public disclosure of data and methodologies. Unfortunately, various government institutions are still reluctant to share data with the public. Now that major economic indicators estimated in the past have become mostly irrelevant, policymakers should revise all economic data and restore transparency to the data ecosystem without delay.

FROM LECTURE HALLS TO THE STREETS

Universities submerged in dual protests

MEHERAB HOSSAIN

The monsoon rains lash against the paved streets of Dhaka University, but the downpour does little to dampen the fiery spirits on campus. Huddled under a sea of colourful umbrellas, thousands of students stand defiant, their voices rising.

What began as a localised protest in the heart of the capital has swiftly morphed into a nationwide movement. From Khulna University in the south to Rajshahi University in the north, students across Bangladesh are joining the chorus of dissent. Social media feeds are flooded with images and videos from campuses nationwide. In Dhaka, students have traded the comfort of dry lecture halls for the wet streets, their textbooks temporarily abandoned in favour of protest signs that run with ink in the relentless rain. As news of their stand spreads, it ignites similar actions nationwide. Students gather in solidarity in Chattogram, Sylhet, and beyond; their umbrellas are a colourful testament to their resilience and unity.

But this isn't just a student uprising. A parallel storm is brewing in faculty lounges and administrative offices nationwide. Professors and lecturers tasked with guiding the next generation find themselves locked in battle against a system they believe has failed them. It's as if the monsoon has washed away the thin veneer of normalcy, revealing the deep-seated frustrations that have long simmered beneath the surface of Bangladesh's academic world. Two distinct yet interconnected movements are unfolding, each threatening to reshape the foundations of higher education in Bangladesh. The students' grievances centre on the labyrinthine quota system that has long governed public sector jobs in Bangladesh, where 56 percent of government positions are reserved for various groups. It's as if the concept of affirmative action has been cranked up to eleven.

The students' demands are simple yet revolutionary. They want to tear down this quota tower, brick by brick, and build a new system where talent trumps all. They're calling for a return to a 2018 circular that promised a fairer shake.

But this isn't just about jobs. It's about a generation's hopes and dreams. These students envision a future where their hard work and abilities matter more than their family history or connections. They're fighting for themselves and the Bangladesh they want to see: meritocratic, fair, and full of opportunity.

On the other side of this academic coin, we find the teachers. These men and women have dedicated their lives to shaping young minds, only to be caught in a bureaucratic tangle. Their beef is with the "Prottoy Scheme"—a new pension system.

To understand their fury, you need to know that these educators have long felt like the forgotten cousins of the civil service family. They've clamoured for a separate pay scale for years, recognising their unique societal role. Instead, they got lumped in with everyone else in the 2015 pay scale revision. This new pension scheme makes them feel like they're being pushed further into the margins.

It's not just about money, though. It's about dignity. It's about feeling valued in a society that often pays lip service to education while treating educators as an afterthought. The teachers' protests might be less visible than the students' because of the smaller number of umbrellas and the higher number of closed-door meetings, but they're no less passionate. So here we are, a nation caught between two waves of protest, each threatening to overflow the banks of our higher education system. It's a crisis, yes, but it's also an opportunity. It is an opportunity to reimagine how we value merit, support our educators, and prepare the next generation for the challenges ahead.

The solutions won't be easy. Reforming the quota system means navigating a minefield of vested interests and historical obligations. Addressing the teachers' concerns requires fundamentally reconsidering how we value education. But the alternative—allowing this unrest to fester—is unthinkable. There's a palpable sense of déjà vu. Bangladesh has been at a crossroads where the choices will echo through generations. The question is: Do we have the courage to make the right choices? The students and teachers of Bangladesh have thrown down the gauntlet. It's time for the powers that be to pick it up. The future of a nation's education and perhaps the country itself hangs in the balance.

Let's hope wisdom prevails for all those young minds waiting to be shaped and all those dedicated educators ready to shape them. As the monsoon rains continue to fall, we're left wondering: Will these waters of discontent nourish the seeds of change, or will they wash away hope for another generation? Like the protests, the answer remains fluid and uncertain in the torrential downpour of Bangladesh's academic crisis.

Collective action can save us from a dystopian future

Twelve scholars, social entrepreneurs and advocates write about the International Panel for Social Progress (IPSP)'s new push to put social progress in the global centre stage.

VISUAL: STAR

The challenges of environmental degradation, social inequalities, democratic decline, disruptive technological innovation, and dysfunctions in global cooperation have never been more pressing. Pandemic, unjust wars, and extreme weather have threatened social cohesion and democratic institutions, revealed new vulnerabilities, and laid bare the weaknesses of prevailing development approaches and global governance. Addressing these challenges require new forms of coming-together to recognise the mutual interdependence of these challenges along with the diversity of local and national contexts, to fully grasp and unpack the complexity of systemic transformation and the timelines of ongoing dynamics on Earth and in societies. This is essential to imagine adequate solutions and to make the most of the emerging opportunities. We, representing a group of several hundred scholars, social entrepreneurs and advocates from across the globe, have come together as the new iteration of the International Panel for Social Progress (IPSP) to construct a vision that averts the looming dystopian future and drive a discourse that can put social progress in the global centre stage.

In 2018, the IPSP offered a general picture of the type of institutions and reforms which, by allowing substantial variations across the world, could inspire the advent of a society based on the values of equality, freedom, emancipation, participation, and inclusion. Such a perspective constituted a powerful narrative to support the implementation of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals. However, there is a growing sense that the piecemeal or sectoral implementation of good public policies or that inspiring but isolated civil society initiatives do not suffice to counter the negative social, environmental and governance externalities produced by the current power structures and by the predominant forms of economic organisations. The clear identification of the main causes of these negative externalities is key to developing a design, a sequencing, and an implementation of actions that would transform the dynamics at play.

A broad outline for better societies exists. It includes: creating an inclusive and responsible economy by taming markets and corporations through responsible socioeconomic and environmental regulatory systems and by fostering economic and social organisations with a broader purpose; bringing circularity into our value chains and way of life; reducing social inequalities and empowering people through universal services and through pre- and re-distribution; deepening democracy through participatory and deliberative mechanisms and better information systems; enhancing global cooperation and reforming global governance to preserve common goods such as biodiversity and to improve resilience under global changes; and harnessing technology for positive impact.

While recognising that many of the solutions for better societies already exist, the need of the hour is a renewed big push on a global scale, both at the level of ideas and actions, because progress has been decidedly mixed and new complexities and concerns have accentuated the challenge. There is an urgency of new coming-togethers adapted to local conditions, cast in long-term systemic visions and narratives of better futures, and co-constructed, promoted and implemented by fluid coalitions of public, private and non-governmental actors. The question that motivates us as the new iteration of the IPSP is how we can help coalitions of actors to emerge and to organise, and how we can help nurture them, to implement the social progress agenda.

In 2023, the IPSP, established 10 years ago, decided to reconvene, in a larger and more inclusive format, to continue its tradition of scientific objectivity and independent analysis, but now also to engage in co-construction with stakeholders and member-based organisations to ensure greater relevance of its work for change-makers, and thus aiming at much greater impact. It will gather cross-sectoral and transdisciplinary expertise, from science and from practice, to provide a comprehensive, systemic understanding of the complex dynamics of multi-actor interactions, with a special attention devoted to the Global South and to underrepresented voices. Starting in 2024, it will work towards operationalising the social progress agenda as a new global horizon through developing innovative formats and tools to support change-makers and to impact processes leading to the transition. It will work towards designing reforms and transformations that address the structural flaws of current economic and social institutions and regulations as well as the biases of power realities while fostering the potential for social change by supporting dissemination of social innovations and rethinking our relationship with living organisms to respect the system of complex and dynamic interactions in which we live. An International Platform for Social Progress as a web source will be available later this year to crowdsource the transformative initiatives and projects throughout the world and to provide a guide to the most inspiring and most replicable ones. Intergenerational dimensions will be central to our work and younger generations will be mobilised through networking, and social media.

There will be many options and possibilities to join the IPSP and to contribute to its work: from the local to the global, from inner communities to larger networks, from civil society to the largest corporations, from city governments to supranational organisations, from education circles to the general and social media. Technology will help us translate, communicate, transfer knowledge, and connect change-makers. The diversity of contributors will match the diversity of users of the knowledge base developed by the IPSP.

The new big push by IPSP to put social progress in the global centre stage starts with six priority work streams: mapping of the systemic interactions and power structures of societal challenges; measuring what we value; rethinking the information system as a public good in the age of social media and artificial intelligence; developing a framework for an ecological rule of law; defining performance for governments and businesses that reflects social progress; and identifying and promoting new pathways for global solidarity.

A dystopian future cannot be humanity's destiny. Coalescing the individual and collective will for sustainable and cohesive pathways towards better societies has never been more urgent. The task is huge and success far from certain. But the responsibility is existential, and the challenge must be seized now by everyone, everywhere, all at once.

Rememebering an educationist, artist, and socialite from the yester generation is chairman of the international think tank, The Institute for Policy, Advocacy, and Governance (IPAG).

Prof Syed Munir Khasru

SYED MUNIR KHASRU

Asma Abbasi, who breathed her last on July 4, was a personality who epitomised values and a lifestyle that were modern and progressive enough to dwarf many of us from later generations. Born and having lived in a time when women having a career and active social life was frowned upon, she sailed gracefully in both, as an educationist and much-loved celebrity in social circles. From being a professor of Bangla to deftly anchoring education programmes, from being culturally active to engagement in multiple social outfits—her energy and enthusiasm were boundless. One of her remarkable traits was her incorrigible positivity and instant warmth that would make even a stranger feel at ease with her.

She was married to Mustafa Zaman Abbasi, a well-known singer, promoter, and researcher of folklore music who was the son of Abbasuddin Ahmed, the legendary Bengali folk song composer and singer. Coming from a traditional, conservative Sylheti family with her father being the principal of a Madrasa while being married to such a culturally enriched family must have been challenging for Asma Abbasi. But she blended in seamlessly by actively supporting the cultural heritage of her in-laws. Her two daughters delved into creative fields: Samira Abbasi became a singer and Sharmini Abbasi a writer. Asma Abbasi, however, made sure that the core religious values and traditions remained strong within the family. She received education from the Islamic Centre, near their ancestral home in Purana Paltan.

When they were in their prime, the Abbasi couple was one of the most well known in Dhaka. While her husband has been a prolific singer and artist, Asma Abbasi was a well-known figure in most circles with the confidence to walk into any gatherings with poise and dignity. Her instant warmth would generate positive energy in the room. Never shy to take the stage, she would seize any opportunity to speak with her usual charm and ability to grab people's attention. She was equally prolific in her literary work; books authored by her include Komola Ronger Dinguli (The Orange-Coloured Days), Shey Kon Bon er Horeen (From Which Forest is the Deer), and Hason Raja.

She received the gold medal award from the Ministry of Education as the best college teacher. As anchor of programmes on education and religion on BTV, she was well accepted by the audience when BTV used to be the only electronic media for information and entertainment. She also did programmes for Radio Bangladesh. In addition, she served as a member of the Film Censor Board, Family Planning Board, and as advisor to Kochi-Kachar Mela (an organisation for children). Asma Abbasi was the longest serving cultural secretary of Ladies Club, one of the oldest and well-known social outfits for women of her generation. As member of Inner Wheel Club of Dhaka and District Chairman of Inner Wheel Bangladesh, she led social and philanthropic works in the community.

On a more personal note, Asma Abbasi was the younger sister of my mother, late Najma Khasru, and they were among five siblings whose father was the late Maulvi Habibur Rahman Chaudhury, former principal of Sylhet (Govt.) Alia Madrasah and mother the late Syeda Hifzunnesa Khanam, sister of well-known literary figure Syed Mujtaba Ali. As Asma Abbasi's nephew, I had the pleasure and privilege to enjoy her affection and be a witness to the childlike simplicity and candour that she had. Any of my friends she had met in our house would instantly become another nephew/niece and she would greet them with the warmth of a favourite aunt. She would also go out of the way to make people happy, even at the frail stage of her life. She would cook by herself to send me her signature achari gosh (pickled beef curry), in spite of my repeated requests not to go through so much trouble as we lived in two different parts of the city.

After the last Qurbani Eid, she asked me to send her home-made sheek kabab. It was easier to do this when we used to live in an independent house in the picturesque Ispahani Colony and a little tricky in an apartment due to the need to have a stove that can burn charcoal. To satisfy her culinary desires, I bought a special stove to make the kebab at home and then sent it to her. A few days back she called me around midnight and before I could pick up the phone, it got disconnected. Since it was quite late, I wanted to call her back later, thinking that she must have been calling to thank me. I had no idea that the unanswered call would be the last call from her and in hindsight, I regret that I had not immediately call her back.

The lesson learned is that when people reach a certain point in their life, when every single day lived is a blessing to be counted and not life taken for granted—we should be vigilant to attend to them. When the time comes for our last phone call, last meal, last walk, last talk, last sunrise and sunset, last prayers—it is likely that we will know little of it beforehand and can only hope that our loved ones will be there as we make the transit from this world to the other. So, for those in the twilight years of their life, let no phone call from them be unattended or messages unanswered, and let them not be left alone. May Khala's soul rest in peace.

FUTURE-PROOFING YOUR FINANCES

Saving up the first paychecks

Aside from emergencies, saving up also means that you are investing towards the future. This can mean earning that dream vacation you have always wanted, buying that expensive piece of gadget, or even starting your own business down the line.

SHAMS RASHID TONMOY

Congratulations! You finally landed your first full-time job. Even if it's not the one you had dreamt of since you were a kid, it's still going to help pay the bills - at least, however much possible. Of course, this also means a bunch of new responsibilities, some more tedious than others. Now that you are in charge of your own money, one key duty you will be burdened with is financial management, which is a task definitely easier said than done.

While your first paychecks might feel like a magic ticket to financial freedom, think about how your current financial habits can impact your future for years to come. So, before you rush out and celebrate with a well-deserved shopping spree - consider the alternative of putting some of that money aside. Whether you still have your parents' support or some other source of money flow, the money that you earn in your first proper job will always help you out, especially in the case of emergencies.

So, what entails the process of saving up your first full-time paycheck? Let's take a look at the 'why' and 'how' of it.

Why save?

As much as we may dislike it, life throws us curve balls at times. An emergency fund, ideally three to six months of salary, is a safety net that you can always depend on no matter how dire a situation may get. Are you facing car troubles, unexpected medical bills, or a sudden job loss? Keeping some money saved aside from your first paychecks will ensure that you won't spiral into debt during the worst possible scenarios.

Aside from emergencies, saving up also means that you are investing towards the future. This can mean earning that dream vacation you have always wanted, buying that expensive piece of gadget, or even starting your own business down the line. You might tell yourself that the money you are earning from your first full-time job isn't enough in quantity for a substantial investment. The truth is, it doesn't have to be.

If you start saving early, even a small amount tucked away now will grow significantly over time due to compound interest. Even aside from that, you are developing a valuable practice that will help you for the rest of your life. Soon into your adulthood, your personal expenses will pile up - more so if you decide to settle down and start a family of your own. At that time, you will be grateful to your past self for going through the arduous, yet rewarding path of saving up early.

How to save?

Now that you are well-acquainted with the benefits you will reap if you start saving early, the first thing you need to do to actually start saving is track your expenses. There are free budgeting apps that will help you track daily expenditures and monthly earnings on your phone. Or, if you are the traditional type, get a notebook and jot down your spending manually. Either way, identify areas you need to cut back. This could be not having a cup of coffee every day and using cheaper modes of public transport at times to save up on commute costs.

A popular budgeting strategy is the 50-30-20 rule, which simply means that you use 50% of your income for essential needs, 30% on wants, and 20% towards savings and paying debts. Of course, you are free to adjust this percentage based on your lifestyle and preferences. For example, reducing the frequency of going to movies or dining out can subsequently increase the amount of savings, which can be greatly beneficial for you in the long run.

Another method you could consider is setting up automatic transfers on your bank account, so that any money deposited in your checking account gets sent to your savings account. This way, you are forcing yourself away from the temptation to spend recklessly. Mentally label that savings account as "do not touch" money - unless of course, in the case of emergencies.

All in all, adopting the practice of saving money early - especially your first-ever paychecks - will be appreciated by your future self down the line. It's often common for youths and young adults to splurge their first earnings into whatever they fancy. While doing so will certainly make you happy, keep in mind that this satisfaction is short-lived at best. Take control of your finances today and start reaping the rewards of smart saving!

Sustaining energy at work

A holistic guide to beating the afternoon slump

SYEDA ADIBA ARIF

Ever found yourself struggling to function properly during the second half at your workplace? You're not alone. Extended meetings, prolonged desk hours, and periods of intense focus are quite commonplace in corporate jobs. Hence, it's quite easy to get fatigued and burnt out if you're not mindful about your work habits during your 9 to 5. The following techniques can be useful in efforts to stay energised throughout the workday, which is essential for both your wellbeing and productivity. And no, it's not just coffee.

Start with good sleep

Without adequate sleep the night before, no matter what you do will be futile in keeping your energy levels high. Good sleep is needed to feel fresh, focus where it matters and make meaningful contributions at work.

Dr. Philip Stieg, a neurosurgeon who founded the Weill Cornell Medicine Brain and Spine Centre, claims lack of sleep might impair creativity, short-term memory, and attention span. Try to get at least seven hours of sleep every night. Humans are not machines; but even machines have planned downtimes that keep them functional, and the same applies in a truer scale for humans.

Eat the right way

Make a personal rule for yourself to not take your lunch at your desk if you can avoid it. Find a nice place much away from your desk, be it in the cafeteria or a cosy lounging zone and take some time to eat your lunch with or without company. A nutrient-rich, well-balanced meal, devoid of excessive grease does an excellent job of preventing fatigue.

Always try to consume a balanced lunch consisting of lean meats, whole grains, fruits and vegetables. Carry practical snacks with you to refuel throughout the day. Make a realistic meal plan for your hours at work, and stick to it to the best of your ability. Additionally, always carry a bottle of water with you and take frequent sips throughout the day, refilling as necessary.

Get some movement

For any job, there will be some days that are busier than others. In corporate jobs, a busy day often translates to spending most of it at our desks or in back-to-back meetings. It's crucial to break free out of that & ensure at least some kind of movement throughout. Absorbing sunlight and fresh air, or stretching limbs and taking short walks, or simply getting up every hour for only a minute, works wonders in offsetting the weariness that comes with extended periods of immobility. Even the shortest bursts of physical activity can instantly make one feel revitalised. Besides, it is also important to focus on good posture at work. If you have the option, opt for an ergonomic set up.

Recharge with colleagues

Nobody can relate more to whatever workplace struggle you are facing, than the colleagues who you work with daily. Taking a few breaks to interact with coworkers goes a long way in inducing joy. Dr. Ben Waber, Prominent scientist at the MIT Media Lab, highlights the advantages of taking 'micro-breaks' of up to ten minutes. You can use these breaks to unwind with your favourite colleagues. To prevent burnout, view breaks as mandatory rather than voluntary, and plan your schedule accordingly.

Plan your time

It is not just the number of hours, but also the way those hours are arranged that play a role in your energy levels. Zhang, Spreitzer, and Qiu's (2023) research demonstrates that energy levels are influenced by the ratio of meeting time to individual work. A well-structured week alternates between solitary work and meetings. Instead of compacting meeting schedules or pairing critical meetings with intense individual tasks, pair high-stress meetings with low-stress one-on-one work whenever possible and vice versa.

Employers and employees alike can benefit from the enhancing productivity, creativity, and job satisfaction that sustained energy at the workplace can bring. Employees should adopt a well-rounded approach that includes good planning, nutrition and workload management.

Employers should prioritise employee well-being by actively listening to the needs of the employees, designing wellness programs that truly work and eschewing the "set it and forget it" approach. By fostering an environment that supports these practices, all parties can win.

Generous exit policy offered to borrowers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Bank yesterday unveiled the latest iteration of its exit policy that offers borrowers the option to close off their loan account within three years by paying only 10 percent as down payment and no interest.

The move, which comes at a time when interest waiver facilities are being widely criticised in the parliament, is aimed at window-dressing the country's bad loan scenario.

At the end of March, defaulted loans soared to a record Tk 182,000 crore -- which is 11.11 percent of total outstanding credit -- much to the displeasure of the International Monetary Fund. The exit policy is expected to make the situation more palatable.

"The financial condition of clients has been adversely affected by various uncontrollable factors -- that's why an exit policy is needed to recover the loans from them," the BB said in a notice yesterday.

The exit policy applies to defaulted loans, loans with a low probability of recovery and loans taken by defunct companies.

Borrowers will have to provide a minimum of 10 percent down payment in cash by the borrowers and in return, they will get an interest waiver under the policy.

However, the interest waiver facility cannot be extended to loans created by forgery and wilful defaulters, as per BB's notice.

Clients can repay the loans in one instalment or more than one instalment but the maximum repayment tenure will be two years. However, banks can extend the tenure by Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus and six others of Grameen Telecom yesterday filed a petition with the High Court challenging a Dhaka court's order that framed charges against them.

The case was filed over misappropriation of about Tk 25.22 crore of Grameen Telecom Workers' Profit Participation Fund.

Lawyer Abdullah-Al-Mamun submitted the petition on behalf of the accused seeking an HC order to scrap the trial proceedings.

Mamun told The Daily Star that the HC might hear the petition today.

The lawyer said his clients have not committed any offence. They paid the money to their workers in accordance with the law and that there was no question of money laundering.

AL INFIGHTING

Spare no one involved in killings

PM asks home minister

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has asked Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal to ensure the arrest of all those linked to killings that occurred during infighting within the ruling Awami League.

She gave the order at a meeting with the home minister at the Gono Bhaban on Sunday, and asked him not to spare anyone regardless of their political identities and positions, said sources.

The development came after two union parishad chairmen were shot dead in Munshiganj's Tongibari upazila and Khulna's Dumuria upazila reportedly over internal feuds.

Contacted, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan Kamal told The Daily Star that the PM has asked him to go for tough action against all those involved in the clashes and murders.

The issue of infighting was also discussed at a meeting, convened by AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader, at the party president's Dhanmondi office yesterday, where several ministers and AL leaders discussed the ongoing quota reform demonstrations and university teachers' protests over the new pension scheme.

According to meeting sources, AL leaders opined that the party's main concern is now infighting within the organisation and stressed the need to resolve it.

They said the meeting also decided that the party's top brass would sit with AL President Sheikh Hasina after her return from China and will seek her decision in this regard.

Many leaders at the meeting spoke of holding countrywide programmes by central AL leaders to bridge the gap between the partymen, which has widened over the last two polls, in order to bring discipline within the organisation, they added.

Infighting and killings have become almost regular within the Awami League as party-sponsored candidates and "party-independent"

France faces coalition puzzle

Difficult negotiations loom to form govt as left-wing alliance denies far right a majority in surprise polls result

REUTERS, Paris

French President Emmanuel Macron yesterday asked his prime minister to stay in the role for now, pending what will be difficult negotiations to form a new government after a surprise left-wing surge in elections that delivered a hung parliament.

The leftist New Popular Front (NFP) emerged as the dominant force in the National Assembly after Sunday's election, thwarting Marine Le Pen's quest to bring the far right to power.

Of all 577 constituencies, the left won 182 seats, Macron's centrist alliance 168 and Le Pen's National Rally (RN) and allies 143, Interior Ministry data cited by Le Monde newspaper showed.

Other media had slightly different counts, and final numbers will depend partly on individual MPs joining different groupings. To govern with an absolute majority, 289 seats were needed.

However, with no single group securing a working majority, the outcome heralded a period of political volatility just before the Paris Olympics and raised uncertainty among investors about who would run the euro zone's second largest economy.

"It's not going to be simple, no, it's not going to be easy, and no, it's not going to be comfortable," Green party leader Marine Tondelier told France Inter radio. "It's going to take a bit of time."

The range of possibilities include the NFP forming a minority government or the cobbling together of an unwieldy coalition of parties with almost no

Israeli forces bombarded Gaza City early yesterday and columns of tanks advanced into the heart of the city from different directions in what residents said was one of the heaviest attacks in the Palestinian territory since the start of the offensive.

The Gaza Civil Emergency Service said it believed dozens of people were killed but emergency teams were unable to reach them because of ongoing offensives in Daraj and Tuffah in the east and Tel Al-Hawa, Sabra and Rimal further west.

Residents said neighbourhoods in Gaza City, which lies in the north of the Gaza Strip, had been bombed throughout the night into the early morning hours. Several multi-floor buildings have been destroyed, they added.

One Israeli tank thrust pushed people towards the western road near the Mediterranean, residents said.

PSC QUESTION PAPERS

At least 30 leaks in 12 years

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

A syndicate involving officials and employees of the Public Service Commission has leaked at least 30 question papers for government recruitment tests, including those for the Bangladesh Civil Service exams, over the last 12 years.

Investigators, however, believe the syndicate has been active for about two decades.

This is according to CID officials and a first information report filed with the Paltan Police Station regarding the question leaks.

So far, 17 people, including six officials of the PSC, have been arrested. The arrestees include former PSC driver Syed Abed Ali, who lost his job in 2014 for involvement in leaking question papers.

Not having a job at the PSC did not deter Abed. He remained a key member of the syndicate and even got his son involved in the racket.

The CID filed the case on Monday night, accusing 31 named and 50 to 60 unidentified people. At least 14 named accused are on the run, read the FIR.

Investigators have found that at least two deputy directors -- Jahangir Alam and Abu Zafar -- and Assistant Director SM Alamgir Kabir and former assistant director Nikhil Chandra Roy, were involved.

Jahangir, Zafar, and Alamgir have been arrested while Nikhil is now on the run.

These officials used to leak question papers and hand those over to Abed through PSC dispatch rider Khalilur Rahman and office assistant Sajedul Islam.

These former and incumbent PSC officials and employees have been found to have become very wealthy.

Even though some of them were fourth-class employees, they own expensive cars, multiple flats, and commercial spaces in posh areas of the capital.

Over the last three months, there were

The assets include a six-storey building in Mirpur's Paikpara, three flats in West Shewrapara, a Toyota Harrier SUV and a Toyota Premio, along with cash in bank accounts, an investigator told The Daily Star yesterday.

The Criminal Investigation Department has already seized the vehicles.

Abed was arrested on Monday in a case filed for leaking the questions of 30 public service recruitment exams, including the BCS, over the last 12 years.

Bangladesh is mostly relying on imports for urea as gas shortage has brought local fertiliser production to a near halt, in a development that will cost the country dearly in terms of foreign currency reserves and food inflation.

The country's six urea factories need 329 million cubic feet of gas a day (mmcfd), according to Petrobangla. Since February, Petrobangla has been providing only 107 mmcfd to the fertiliser sector. Subsequently, four of the six factories have halted production.

Only Ghorashal Polash Fertiliser (GPFPLC) and Karnaphuli Fertiliser (Kafco) are getting their required gas and are in operation. Of the two, the government

Economy, trade to be in focus

Beijing will push for initiatives with strategic interests in Bangladesh and the Bay of Bengal, while Dhaka will focus on trade and economy as Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina meets Chinese President Xi Jinping and Premier Li Qiang today.

The joint statement that will come out following the meetings at the Great Hall of the People will lay the vision for the future relationship, which is now a "strategic partnership of cooperation".

Foreign policy analysts view the three-day visit to Beijing, which comes 16 days after the state visit to New Delhi, as a balancing act by Hasina, who hopes to be in the good books of the two competing regional powers as they jostle for influence in South Asia as well as in the Bay of Bengal region.

Court orders confiscation of Tk 11.34cr assets of Ctg cop, wife

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A Chattogram court has ordered the confiscation of movable and immovable properties worth Tk 11.34 crore of Kamrul Hasan, additional deputy commissioner of Chattogram Metropolitan Police, and his wife Saima Begum over corruption charges.

Chattogram Metropolitan Sessions Judge Begum Zebunnesa passed the order on Monday after the Anti-Corruption Commission sought the court's order to confiscate the couple's properties and freeze their bank accounts.

The court asked the commission to take measures to appoint an administratorto look after the properties, Kazi Sanowar Ahmed Lavlu, a public prosecutor of the ACC, told The Daily Star yesterday.

The ACC, during an investigation, found that the couple owned land in the port city's North Halishahar, West Nasirabad, Khulshi, Chandgaon, and Dhaka's Savar.

SC to hear petition against HC verdict restoring quota in govt jobs

STAR REPORT

After a one-day break in their blockade programme, students demonstrating against the quota system in government jobs have announced a nationwide blockade for today.

"As part of the programme, all highways and railways across the country will be blocked," Nahid Islam, a Dhaka University student and an organiser of the movement, told a press conference in front of the DU central library yesterday.

The daylong movement will begin at 10:00am and continue until dusk, during which students will enforce blockades at key intersections in the capital and highways adjacent to colleges and universities across the country, the organisers said.

However, many will be looking at the Supreme Court's Appellate Division today as it is scheduled to hear a petition against the High Court ruling that reinstated a 30 percent quota for the children of freedom fighters in the 9th through 13th grades of government jobs.

Regarding the hearing, Nahid said, "Since this case has reached the court, legal procedures will be followed. We have complete faith in the justice system.

LIBRARY LANE

The forgotten bookshops of NEW MARKET

ASHIF AHMED RUDRO

Nilkhet, Mirpur, Banglabazar -- many destinations are well known amongst bookworms of Dhaka. However, nestled within the bustling New Market lies a lesser-known, historical book market. What happened to Library Lane, this once vibrant hub of knowledge? Today, the future of the place hangs in the balance, its rich history fading into memory.

The forgotten lane

It used to fashion an apt moniker. Library Lane -- they used to call it. And fittingly so.

Once upon a time, there used to be more than 50 bookstores here. This fabled lane is on the left of the Gate-1 of New Market. Shopkeepers here say the bookstores used to expand from Gate-1, all the way to Gate-2.

One could find all sorts of books here. Novels, self-help, classic literature, books on religion and law -- you name it. It was also a major hub for academic and reference books. The books sold here are original, either collected directly from the publisher or imported. However, their collections have been fading, much like the lane itself, which has been dissipating for years.

From more than 50 to 40, at the moment, barely 10-12 shops remain. Some of them have yielded to the market demand and given up their identity, making room for stationary products. Iconic bookshops such as Zeenat Book Supply, which had been a popular go-to place for book lovers since 1963, closed its business in 2023. Others stubbornly stand, but barely so under the pressure of the present market.

What happened?

It's a good question to ask. What drove such a popular section of the market into the present sorry state? The answer is: a lot happened over the last few decades!

Firstly, reading habits changed. Md Jumma, the owner of one of the older shops in the market called Aligarh Library, which has been here since the '70s, holds a very strong opinion about this.

"Ever since passing became easy, reading habits went down. Nowadays, you can just write anything in the exam and still pass. There is no desire for knowledge, no desire to read. This has been one of the biggest issues that caused the decline in business. Of course, then came Covid," he said.

Md Reazul Hakim owns "Book Syndicate", one of the oldest bookstores in the market. He inherited the business from his father, who started the business back in 1954 when New Market was first opened.

"We sell original books and as you can imagine, they can be costly. Piracy has taken the market off balance by printing and photocopying books whenever they feel like it. And of course, they can sell at less than half price because of this," he said, referring to the declining state of the library lane.

The bleak future

At midday, when the Nilkhet book market is abuzz, the Library Lane feels desolate. Standing on the pavement in the middle of the clearing, one can feel how much this place has witnessed and now it's a decaying history of Dhaka itself. Whatever buzz you find here is less because of the bookstores and more because of the stationary, crockeries, and accessories shops.

Since 2019, six bookstores have bidden farewell to their business here. The past year alone has witnessed the fall of four of those. At this rate, the lane will be nothing more than a memory in a few years.

Whatever remains of this once popular hangout of bibliophiles is now a skeleton of its older self. Whether or not this place can be revived, remains to be seen. But don't miss your chance to visit this place if you have a soft spot for books.

BB CYBER HEIST CASE

CID gets 79th date for submitting probe report

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday asked the Criminal Investigation Department (CID) to submit the probe report in the Bangladesh Bank cyber heist case by September 4.

Metropolitan Magistrate Rajesh Chowdhury passed the order after Raihan Uddin Khan, additional superintendent of police and also the investigating officer of the case, failed to submit the probe report by yesterday.

CID has now taken 79 dates to complete its probe into the case filed over the heist of $101 million from Bangladesh Bank's account with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York in February 2016.

On May 6, the same court asked CID to submit the probe report on the case by July 9 (yesterday).

At least $81 million was transferred to the accounts of Manila-based RCBC, from where it disappeared into the casinos of the Philippines.

Bangladesh Bank Deputy Director (Accounts and Budgeting) Zobayer Bin Huda filed the case with Motijheel Police Station on March 15, 2016.

So far, Bangladesh retrieved $15 million from RCBC and recovered another $20 million sent to a bank in Sri Lanka.

On February 1, 2022, Bangladesh Bank sued Rizal Bank in a US court in order to recover $66m of stolen funds.

Chhatra Dal leader 'missing' for 9 days

BNP claims he was 'picked up' by plainclothes men

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka College Unit Chhatra Dal Vice President Atiqur Rahman Rasel has been missing for nine days, after he was allegedly picked up by plainclothes men from Dhaka's Azimpur on July 1.

His father Md Abul Hossain on July 2 filed a general diary with Lalbagh Police Station regarding his son's disappearance.

Talking to The Daily Star, Abul Hossain said he wants his son back safe. "We are anxious as we could not trace my son yet."

"If my son committed any crime, the law enforcers should produce him before a court. If they did not pick him up, it is their responsibility to trace him," he added.

Abul Hossain said they could contact Rasel on July 1 evening for the last time, when he said he was going to Azimpur. Shortly after, his phone was found switched off, he added.

Earlier, BNP in a statement, claimed plainclothes men picked Rasel up from Azimpur area.

transactions worth at least Tk 25 crore in the bank accounts of the syndicate members.

With assistance from the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit, the CID seized the bank account documents of 17 accused.

Sources said multiple money laundering cases could be filed after reviewing the documents.

Touhidul Islam, special superintendent of the CID's cyber investigation and operations, told The Daily Star yesterday, "We have found evidence that the 17 arrestees, including the PSC officials, were involved in leaking question papers for the railway recruitment exams held on July 5."

The syndicate was also involved in leaking questions of some other exams, he said.

Asked when the syndicate started leaking questions, Touhidul said one of the arrested PSC employees joined the commission in 1997 and began leaking questions within five years.

"We are investigating and conducting drives to arrest all those responsible," he said.

Asked about leaking questions of BCS exams, Touhidul said, "We have information, but we need to verify those."

Sources in the CID said they suspect more people from the PSC were involved.

During interrogation, Sajedul said he used to get the question papers from Zafar a day before the exam and that two members of the syndicate -- businessman Sakhawat Hossain and his brother Siam Hossain -- would teach examinees the answers at flats in Dhaka.

Abed and his son's job was to get the examinees who would pay for the questions, said sources.

According to sources, PSC DD Jahangir, who hails from Gaibandha, has multiple flats in Dhaka in addition to a home in his village.

He has a 2,000sqft well-furnished flat in Block-D of Bashundhara Residential Area. The CID arrested him from there on the night of July 7.

The CID also found multiple flats owned by Jahangir in Mirpur and Bhatara of the capital.

Investigators have information that there were transactions worth at least Tk 13 crore in his three bank accounts, sources said, without mentioning when the transactions were made.

On July 5, when the railway exam was being held, there were unusual transactions in his bank account.

PSC DD Zafar, who hails from Patuakhali, lives with his family in Azimpur Government Colony of Dhaka. However, he owns a plot of land and a flat in Mohammadpur.

Along with Jahangir, Zafar owns a coaching centre -- Jyoti Commercial Center -- for jobseekers at Chowdhurypara of Malibagh in the capital. The coaching centre is named after Zafar's wife, the sources said.

Asma Begum and Humayun Kabir, who run the coaching centre, used to gather jobseekers willing to pay for the leaked questions too, they said.

Meanwhile, six out of 17 arrestees yesterday made confessional statements before a Dhaka court. The 11 others were sent to jail.

Abed, Khalilur, Sajedul, Sakhawat, Siam and private university student Liton Sarker made the confessional statements.

Yesterday evening, the PSC suspended Jahangir, Zafar, Alamgir, Sajedul, and Khalilur.

The PSC also formed a three-member probe committee, led by Joint Secretary Abdul Alim Khan, to investigate the allegations of leaking questions.

The other members of the body are PSC directors Mohammad Azizul Haque and Dilawez Durdana.

The committee has been asked to submit a report within 14 working days, said PSC Chairman Sohorab Hossain at a press conference at his office.

He said the railway recruitment exam would be cancelled if evidence of question leak was found.

His announcement came following a protest rally of jobseekers in front of the PSC Agargaon office yesterday demanding scrapping of the test.

Second semi

is anything to go by, considering 12 encounters between the two teams have produced only a single drawn result with Uruguay leading 6-5, the Bank of America Stadium is poised to stage an even battle between two sides unwilling to take the game to a penalty shootout.

This type of high-stakes match calls for individual brilliance to become part of folklore, a tailor-made stage for attacking midfielders like Colombia's James Rodriguez or Uruguay's Real Madrid star Fede Valverde; players who possess the skill and nerve to conjure a long-distance goal out of thin air.

Colombia have continued to impress under Nestor Lorenzo, with the late-career "second wind" for playmaker Rodriguez providing them with a creative spark. Rodriguez has never quite lived up to expectations at the club level but has recaptured the electric form he showed at the 2014 World Cup in Brazil. "Everything is coming together," he said after providing two assists and scoring a penalty against Panama.

Uruguay, a side buoyant after eliminating pre-tournament favorites, might end up lamenting the suspension of Nahitan Nandez and injuries to defenders Ronaldo Araujo and Matias Vina.

Nevertheless, the match promises to be a knife-edge affair, with veteran Argentine coach Marcelo Bielsa having brought his intensity-demanding style to Uruguay, coupled with the fact that Colombia remain a dangerous counter-attacking team, possessing match-winners with pacy wingers in Luis Diaz.

"The match against Colombia will be just as demanding [as playing Brazil] because they are a team that has been developing a lot match by match," Bielsa said. "Like Brazil, they have important strikers in every position, but we are confident we can play on equal footing with any opponent," the revered tactician added.

Regardless of who triumphs on the field, whether Colombia's quest for a second trophy since 2001 draws nearer or Uruguay moves one step closer to claiming the most Copa titles, the momentum gained from tomorrow's win will play a significant role in Monday's final.

The cop invested nearly Tk 8.02 crore in the commercial building, but the actual value of the properties is several times higher. He owns flats, shops, and commercial spaces in the building, the ACC investigation revealed.

The couple owns movable properties worth Tk 9.44 crore and immovable properties worth Tk 1.90 crore. Kamrul's wife owns M/S Sowdagor Navigation, which operates in the maritime sector.

ACC sources said the couple was trying to hand over their properties to others after the commission launched an investigation into their wealth.

The MoUs were signed on the sidelines of the "Summit on Trade, Business and Investment Opportunities between Bangladesh and China".

Bangladesh embassy in Beijing, Bangladesh Investment Development Authority, the SEC, and China Council for the Promotion of International Trade organised the event at the China World Summit Wing of Shangri-La in Beijing.

Speaking at the summit, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina said now is the time for Bangladesh and China to explore new areas of further collaboration in trade and investment to create a prosperous future for both nations, reports UNB.

"Our shared vision for economic growth, technological advancement, and sustainable development forms the cornerstone of our bilateral relations," she said.

Hasina, now on an official visit to China, invited the Chinese businesses to visit Bangladesh, explore opportunities, and experience the warmth and hospitality of Bangladeshis.

"You will find in us all the support and assistance you need. Let us work together to build a stronger, more prosperous, and more connected world."

The PM said, "We are committed to addressing trade imbalances and creating a more equitable trade relationship."

Hasina said Bangladesh is keen on exporting more products, including textiles, garments, leather goods, jute products and agricultural produce, to China.

"We welcome Chinese investments in our export-oriented industries, which will help us diversify our export basket and reduce trade deficits," she said.

The premier encouraged Chinese companies to form joint ventures with Bangladeshi firms.

She also invited Chinese companies to establish R&D centres in Bangladesh, leveraging Bangladesh's skilled workforce and academic ingenuity.

Hasina called upon the Chinese business community to consider investing in infrastructure; energy, including renewable energy; and logistics in Bangladesh.

She said that climate-resilient smart farming opens opportunities for collaboration.

The premier said Bangladesh plans to establish three special tourism zones where Chinese firms can invest.

She also urged Chinese investors to explore portfolio investments in Bangladesh, as the SEC is working to further develop the country's capital markets.

"We have made significant progress in developing a robust bond market. We are on the brink of introducing derivative products, which will further diversify and widen our financial markets," she said.

"China has been significantly contributing to our infrastructure projects, technological advancements, and overall growth of our economy."

She said Bangladesh offers one of the most liberal investment regimes in the world, and BIDA provides a number of services to foreign investors under one roof.

"... We are establishing 100 special economic zones [SEZs], each equipped with state-of-the-art facilities."

Bangladesh is also developing five country-specific economic zones to foster closer economic ties with the key partner nations, the PM added.

OTHER MOUS

China Road and Bridge Corporation and Ningbo Cixing Company Ltd signed an MoU on the investment framework agreement in Bangladesh's Chinese Economic and Industrial Zone.

Billion10 Communications Ltd and CHTC (HengYang) Intelligent EV Company Ltd signed a deal on manufacturing electric vehicles.

The Bangladeshi firm signed another MoU with Ningbo Sun East Solar Co Ltd to set up a solar farm in Sylhet. It also made a deal with HeSheng (Hoshine) Silicon Industry Co Ltd for investment in Bangladesh's renewable energy sector.

Billion10 also signed an MoU with Zhongke Guorui (Zhuhai) New Material Technology Co Ltd for investment in Bangladesh's waste lubricant oil recovery and refining industries.

EB Solution Ltd and Hongji Intelligent Transport Co Ltd signed a deal to invest in the Dhaka City Mobile Project.

The Bangladeshi company signed another deal with Ningbo Shering New Energy Technology Ltd for investment in Bangladesh's smart cold chain logistic solutions sector.

Under an MoU on technical and financial investment collaboration, $20 million will be invested in Bangladesh's waterways and road transport. The deal was signed between Intraco Refueling Station PLC and Shijiazhuang Enric Gas Equipment Co Ltd.

Zibo Jinhuateng Paper Machinery Co Ltd will invest in the paper machinery sector in Bangladesh jointly with Nitol Niloy Group.

Chinese firm Zhengzhou Dongfeng Mid-South Enterprise Company will invest in TBR Tyre projects in Bangladesh in collaboration with Nitol Niloy.

Chinese company Shandong Sunite Machinery and Nitol Niloy signed an MoU to invest in Bangladesh's Aerated Autoclave Concrete (AAC) Block.

Chinese firm Daliam Huahan Rubber and Plastic Machinery will invest in Bangladesh's rubber machinery sector with Nitol Niloy.

ZP Technology (Anhui) Co Ltd will invest in producing lithium batteries and electric vehicles in Bangladesh jointly with Nitol Niloy.

ROHINGYA REPATRIATION

During a meeting with the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC) at the Great Hall of the People in Beijing, Hasina sought Chinese assistance in repatriating Rohingyas to Myanmar.

Chairman Wang Huning of the CPPCC, who led a delegation in the meeting, said they would discuss the matter with Myanmar and play a role of facilitator.

"We will make our highest efforts to initiate Rohingya repatriation through holding discussions with Myanmar," he said.

Briefing reporters after the meeting, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud said different bilateral issues, including Rohingyas; reducing the trade gap; the celebration of the 50 years of bilateral relations; and the contact between Awami League and Chinese Communist Party came up for discussion.

'CUT INTEREST RATES OF LOAN'

Hasina yesterday asked the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB) to further cut the interest rates on its loan for Bangladesh.

She made the request when the president of the Beijing-based lender, Jin Liqun, along with high officials of AIIB paid a courtesy call on her.

The AIIB officials said Bangladesh is one of its biggest borrowers and the bank has given Bangladesh a special concession in interest rate.

Financing infrastructure, river dredging, and climate-change resilience came up for discussion.

PM LEAVES FOR HOME TONIGHT

Wrapping up her visit, Hasina will leave Beijing tonight and reach Dhaka in the wee hours of tomorrow, foreign ministry sources said.

She was earlier scheduled to leave Beijing on Thursday morning.

Wait for direct rail line gets longer

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

People's wait for direct rail connectivity between Dhaka and Jashore via Padma Bridge is getting longer as the project authority could not complete work within the last month.

Now, the railway authorities are planning to open the line in November, as it would take four more months to complete all physical works, said project officials.

Project authority yesterday placed the new plan before Railways Minister Zillul Hakim, who had announced in May that the line would be opened within two months, they said.

Bangladesh Railway is constructing a 169km broad-gauge single-line from Dhaka to Jashore via Padma Bridge at a cost of Tk 39,247 crore.

This is the biggest project for BR in terms of cost, and over half of the cost is being provided by China as a loan.

The original deadline for the project was June 2022 and the latest deadline was June this year.

The Dhaka-Bhanga section of the line was opened in October last year and five trains are being operated

Cargo village to be cleared finally

CAAB confiscates 12 abandoned aircraft, plans auction

RASHIDUL HASAN

The Civil Aviation Authorities of Bangladesh finally confiscated 12 airplanes that had occupied a large part of the cargo village for around 10 years, disrupting the loading and unloading of goods.

The aircraft include four MD-83s, one A310, two ATR 72s, and one Dash-4 owned by United Airways, two Dash-4s aircraft owned by Regent Airways, one MD-82 aircraft owned by GMG Airlines, and one AN-12 aircraft owned by Angel Airways, CAAB said.

The cargo village area has practically been turned into an aircraft graveyard as those airlines have not been in operation for one to 10 years, CAAB officials said.

CAAB Chairman Air Vice Marshal Mafidur Rahman said they will float a tender soon for selling those aircraft through auction.

According to CAAB notification, despite repeated requests to the authorities concerned to remove the planes, no action has been taken so far to remove them. That's why those aircraft were confiscated.

The 12 planes have been lying abandoned, occupying around 1,92,100 square feet of ground support equipment parking area, CAAB also said.

It is causing problems with the parking of regular or irregular flights, loading of goods in aircraft and vehicular movement in the export cargo area.

The aircraft include four MD-83s, one A310, two ATR 72s, and one Dash-4 owned by United Airways, two Dash-4s aircraft owned by Regent Airways, one MD-82 aircraft owned by GMG Airlines, and one AN-12 aircraft owned by Angel Airways.

The CAAB chairman said he now has the jurisdiction to float the auction of those aircraft as per the rules.

Around 12 bay parking will be prepared if those abandoned aircraft can be removed, he added.

Group Captain Kamrul Islam, executive director of HSIA, said the de-registration of those aircraft has already been completed.

He also said the respective airlines have failed to repay the dues to CAAB and have failed to renew their licences.

CAAB said they will get around Tk 1,200 crore from the three airlines -- United Air, Regent Air, and GMG Air -- which will be obtained by auctioning off the planes.

United owes Tk 388.97 crore, Regent Air owes Tk 408, and Tk GMG owes Tk 396.45 crore to CAAB.

In February 2016, United Airways ceased suspended flight operations without any announcement.

Afterwards, the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission took the initiative to revive its operation and reorganised the board of directors of United Airways, with Kazi Wahidul Alam, an aviation expert, as its chairman.

Contacted, ATM Nazrul Islam, an independent director of United Airways, said they tried their best to revive the planes, but couldn't succeed as they didn't get cooperation from any government organisations except for BSEC.

"We even found an investor willing to contribute around Tk 500 crore. However, they gave a condition that CAAB would have to waive the dues," he said, adding

Why no paternity leave: High Court

The High Court yesterday issued a rule asking the government to explain in four weeks why they should not be directed to formulate a paternity leave policy for employees at all institutions. The HC bench of Justice Naima Haider and Justice Kazi Zinat Hoque issued the rule following a writ petition.

On July 3, Supreme Court lawyer Ishrat Hasan submitted the petition, in which her six-month-old child's name has been included as a petitioner too, saying that the absence of paternity leave made it difficult for new fathers to take care of their wives and newborns.

According to a survey report submitted by the National River Conservation Commission to the HC on June 30, there are 850 illegal structures on the banks of the river.

Removing 'Sharifa's Tale' not a solution

Says NHRC chairman

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

National Human Rights Commission chairperson Dr Kamal Uddin Ahmed yesterday said the commission disagrees with the government decision to remove "Sharifa's Tale" from textbooks.

He said this at a meeting at the NHRC headquarters in the capital.

"This step [to remove the story "Sharifa's Tale" from textbooks] cannot be perceived as a solution. While this action is repressing the issue, it will arise again in the future for natural reasons," he added.

"Therefore, the NHRC finds it logical to disagree with this decision," said Dr Kamal.

Sharifa's story is about a woman ostracised by her family and society. The story highlights the hardships of the "third gender" community, as referred to in the textbook, and the formation of supportive bonds within it.

"We need to change our discriminatory attitudes towards them. Including these topics in our textbooks will help create positive awareness about these communities," Dr Kamal also said.

Speaking to The Daily Star, the NHRC chief said, "We

Lalmatia field set for a facelift

HELEMUL ALAM

The National Housing Authority has started renovating the 2.25-acre playground near Aarong in Lalmatia, evicting encroachers from the site.

The field, previously used for a kitchen market, is now surrounded by corrugated iron sheets as part of the renovation effort.

An NHA official confirmed that the renovation plan includes the creation of walkways, a playground, a skating zone, a temporary shed, a kids zone, two entrances, a toilet, a parking area, and a Shaheed Minar.

The project, funded by the NHA at a cost of Tk 7.2 crore, began on May 22 and is expected to be completed by December.

However, Adil Mohammad Khan, president of the Bangladesh Institute of Planners, criticised the design. He argued that the inclusion of a shed in the middle of the park and the establishment of a skating zone would reduce green spaces and increase concrete areas.

This would also increase the project cost and reduce groundwater recharging ability, he added. He also criticised the lack of consultation with locals and professionals before finalising the design.

In response, the NHA official told this correspondent that 3,500 trees, including Kanchan, Ashok, Neem, and

The parents of three-year-old Suyaira Akter, who was born with a congenital heart defect, are seeking financial assistance for her treatment, said a press release.

Suyaira needs surgery, which is costly and beyond the means of her family.

Her father, Md Shafikul Islam, a street vendor in Mirzapur Bazar, Tangail, has so far covered her medical expenses from his own income. However, the cost of the surgery is several lakhs of taka, which the family cannot afford.

He appealed to the kind-hearted people in society for donations to help cover the treatment costs.

Funds can be sent to: Md Shafikul Islam, A/C 0200022323477, Agrani Bank, Mirzapur Branch, Tangail. His bKash and Nagad account number is 01743460654.

HC upholds death penalty of 'serial killer' Rasu Kha

STAR REPORT

The High Court yesterday confirmed the death penalty of Rasu Kha, the much-talked about "serial killer" from Chandpur, in the 2019 murder case of Parveen Akhtar, a garment worker.

The bench of Justice Syed Md Ziaul Karim and Justice KM Emrul Kayesh delivered the verdict after holding a hearing on the death reference and appeals, said Deputy Attorney General Md Monirul Islam.

According to a reported confessional statement, Rasu claimed to have killed at least 11 women. Pretending to be in love with his prospective victims, he would lure them into isolated locations and murder them.

Rasu was first arrested in Tongi on September 3, 2009 for stealing fans from a mosque in Chandpur. The police would again come across him following the murder of Parveen. Using her phone records, they tracked Rasu. He was soon arrested and placed on remand on October 7, 2009.

On April 22 in 2015, a Chandpur court sentenced Rasu to death for the rape and murder of another RMG worker Shahida.

Passengers suffer for dilapidated bus terminal

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

The central bus terminal in Patuakhali is in a dilapidated state and in dire need of renovation.

The terminal, constructed by the Local Government Engineering Department in 2003 at a cost of Tk 1.65 crore, was later handed over to the Patuakhali Municipality for operation and maintenance.

Visiting the terminal recently, this correspondent saw local and long-haul buses parked within muddy water as the terminal became waterlogged after rainfall.

Passengers were seen compelled to tread through the muddy water to get on buses or after stepping down from those.

Other amenities at the terminal, including sitting arrangements and restrooms for passengers, were also found in a sorry state.

"The terminal has long been in a poor condition. Even the slightest of rain causes waterlogging at the terminal. Clothes become dirty as we have to tread through muddy water. Travelling in this state is difficult and uncomfortable, especially on long journeys," said Ruhul Amin, a Dhaka-bound passenger from Patuakhali Sadar upazila.

Abul Bashar, a resident of Patuakhali town, and Abul Kalam, another passenger, echoed him.

Md Shaheed, a driver of Rudra-Turya Paribahan on Patuakhali-Barisal-Kuakata route, said transport workers also have to suffer due to the terminal's present condition.

"People from all over the country come to Patuakhali town, mostly to visit Kuakata. They become surprised to witness the bus terminal's state. The terminal needs urgent renovation," said Golam Mawla, vice-president of bus owners' association in Patuakhali.

Jasim Uddin Arzoo, executive engineer of Patuakhali Municipality, said "Since Kuakata is a tourism centre, a new bus terminal with all modern facilities will be constructed soon."

Mass media employee bill to ensure job protection

Says Arafat

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

All media, including electronic, print, and digital, will be included in the proposed mass media employee bill, said State Minister for Information Mohammad Ali Arafat yesterday. He said this law would ensure that all those working in the media will get job protection.

Arafat made the remarks at a meeting with the leaders of the Dhaka Union of Journalists at secretariat.

He said the government wants that the media should highlight its mistakes and failures. "Genuine criticism helps the government correct its mistakes. We don't fear constructive criticism, but we hate when someone misleads people with lies," he said.

a chair.

His eyes were vacant, still the sudden, unbearable pain that engulfed the 45-year-old was quite evident.

Silence hung heavy in the air, punctuated only by the occasional choked sob from a neighbour or relative.

When news of Atoshi's death had reached her elder daughter, Kanika Rani, 19, she rushed from Naogaon to see her mother one last time.

Lankeshar, a mason by trade, battled frequent illness, forcing Atoshi to take on whatever work she could find to keep the household afloat.

Sometimes, that meant sewing clothes for others in the village.

"We were all helpless without Ma," Kanika said.

"None of us knew where anything was kept in the house except her. We can't even imagine a single day without her," she further said.

"How will I take care of my little sister? Will she even survive?" Kanika had more questions than answers.

"I wish Ma was here," she said before starting to cry again.

Lipi Rani, a relative, said, "Due to poverty, Kanika had to get married. They spent nearly Tk 3 lakh, on the dowry and wedding itself, all borrowed from relatives. Atoshi started sewing clothes to help repay the debt."

"Now, with her gone, that burden falls solely on the remaining family members. Atoshi's death has become a nightmare for us," she added.

Lipi Rani then recounted the fateful day at the Ratha Yatra festival.

"We were all barefoot during the procession. Atoshi held onto the chariot with one hand and Dulki with the other. Then, in a blink, everything went wrong."

"Atoshi collapsed, a portion of her right hand catching fire. Her back, legs, and lower abdomen were burnt. She was unconscious."

"Dulki, thankfully, remained conscious despite burns on her hands, feet, and back. Seeing her mother lying there, lifeless, the little girl started looking for familiar faces, anyone who could help. When she couldn't find anyone, she broke down in tears. By that time locals intervened and rushed them to the hospital."

"She survived but it was too late for Atoshi," said Lipi.

Meanwhile, the district administration has formed a five-member investigation team while ISKCON a three-member probe body.

An unnatural death case has been filed over the incident.

HOPE FOR LALMONIRHAT, GRIM REALITY IN SIRAJGANJ

The situation in Lalmonirhat shows signs of improvement, with the Dharla river receding 19cm below danger level.

However, Sirajganj remains heavily affected, with the Jamuna river overflowing.

The river was flowing 30cm above danger level at Kazipur point and 46cm beyond at Sirajganj Hardinge Point at noon yesterday. The water level decreased by 11cm and 4cm respectively.

At least 336 sq km area became inundated by floodwater in the district, affecting 95,000 people, said Md Aktaruzzaman, district relief and rehabilitation officer in Sirajganj.

others, would be planted in the field.

A small portion of the park has been reserved for entries and exits of a metro station planned for the area in the near future.

Manifa Rehnuma, landscape architect and co-founder of And ORDEN, the consulting firm for the project, defended the design.

She said the design has been prepared in a manner so that residents of the area can use it properly. The area, once a recreational hub for football and cricket, had been lost to encroachment over the years, she added.

She said the skating zone was included following demands from local skating clubs as there are no other properly designed skating parks in the area.

through this section.

While launching a commuter train between Dhaka and Rajbari on May 4, the minister said the Bhanga-Jashore section would be opened within two months.

The minister yesterday talked to the officials concerned to know the work progress and when the line could be opened, sources said.

Project Director Afzal Hossain, who was among the participants in the meeting, said they would require two more months to complete installation of the signalling system.

Besides, they would require more time to complete the works at Bhanga junction station and the TT Para underpass.

"We will be able to complete all physical works within October and then the line will be ready to open in the first week of November," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Asked about the previously set July deadline, he said, "We can now operate trains on the line without a signalling system. But the operation would not be smooth. Besides, we did not get manpower for the new line."

"So, we told the minister that the section should be opened upon completion of the entire works," he added.

Replying to another question, he said the project tenure has already been extended up to June 2025.

Contacted, BR Director General Sardar Shahadat Ali said the minister wanted to know about the update of the project and the project authorities informed him in detail.

Once the works are completed fully, the prime minister will inaugurate the line, he said.

Once the under-construction rail line becomes functional, the distance between Dhaka and Jashore will decrease by 200km, cutting the travel time in half. Currently, it takes over eight hours to reach Jashore.

The line, which will directly connect the country's two biggest seaports -- Chattogram and Mongla -- is estimated to boost the country's annual GDP by one percent.

College staffer sent to jail on rape charge

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Police have arrested a peon of Chittagong Government College on charges of raping an HSC examinee of the institution.

A Chattogram court sent the arrestee -- Mossharraf Hossain Manik, 30, an office assistant of the Physics department -- to jail yesterday, said Wali Uddin Akbar, officer-in-charge of Chawkbazar Police Station.

Earlier, the 19-year-old filed a case with the police station accusing Manik.

On June 29, Manik took the girl to a hotel and raped her, according to the case statement.

88 dengue patients hospitalised

UNB, Dhaka

Eighty eight people were hospitalised with dengue fever in 24 hours till yesterday morning.

Of them, 27 patients were hospitalised in Dhaka, according to the Directorate General of Health Services.

Currently, 287 patients are receiving treatment at several hospitals.

A total of 4,129 dengue cases and 47 deaths have been reported since January 1, 2024.

Last year, a total of 1,705 people lost their lives due to dengue, making it the deadliest year on record.

The DGHS recorded 321,179 dengue cases and 3,18,749 recoveries last year.

RATHA YATRA TRAGEDY

Of an empty tiffin box and a family in ruins

MOSTAFA SHABUJ, Bogura

Celebrations can turn tragic within the blink of an eye. And tragedies leave behind a trail of unimaginable grief, like a girl fighting for her life unaware of her mother's demise and a father-husband whose life has just taken a turn for the worst.

All these, can sometimes be signified with something as small as an empty tiffin box.

Atoshi Rani, 40, of Bogura left home on July 7 holding her 9-year old daughter Monika on one hand and a tiffin box on the other. Their destination was the Bogura ISKCON temple.

Monika did not want to miss out on a joyous celebration, the Ratha Yatra (chariot procession) festival.

Atoshi was in two minds about joining the festivities this year, as that would mean leaving her ailing husband Lankesar back home. But she gave in to her nine-year-old's demands.

She took the tiffin box with them to bring back prasad (offerings) for her husband.

But that evening, the empty tiffin box returned to Lankesar, alongside the body of his beloved wife.

Meanwhile Monika, Dulki as her father calls her, is screaming in pain at the surgery ward of Shaheed Ziaur Rahman Medical College Hospital, Bogura with burn injuries.

Five people including Atoshi were electrocuted to death and 41 others injured during Ratha Yatra in Bogura on Sunday.

After visiting the house of Atoshi, this correspondent was met with a scene of suffocating silence.

Atoshi's husband, Lankeshar Sarkar, sat slumped in

FLOOD IN THE NORTH

No pure water to drink

Child dies in Kurigram, situation unchanged in Sirajganj, improves a bit in Lalmonirhat

STAR REPORT

Submerged homes, unusable toilets, and an acute drinking water crisis, thousands in Kurigram are struggling to meet their basic necessities due to the ongoing flood.

These have raised concerns of a waterborne disease outbreak.

"Everyone in my family of seven is suffering a lot due to a lack of pure drinking water," said Sahera Bewa, 58, of Char Madhya Kadamtala under Kurigram Sadar upazila.

"Since the toilet is unusable now, we are compelled to use banana tree rafts as makeshift toilets in the open. This is embarrassing but we have no alternatives," she added.

Jariman Begum of Char Bhagabatipur village paints a similar picture.

All 65 families in her village are facing the same ordeal. They are forced to use flood water for drinking and daily chores due to a lack of alternatives.

"The water is contaminated, but what can we do?" said Jariman's husband, Suruj Ali. "There is no other source of drinkable water here."

HEALTH RISKS AND RELIEF EFFORTS

Dr Monjur-e-Murshed, Kurigram's civil surgeon, warned of the dangers of consuming contaminated water, including the spread of diarrhoea, abdominal pain, and dysentery.

He said 80 medical teams have been deployed to the affected areas.

While water levels in the Brahmaputra and Dudhkumar rivers have receded slightly, they are still 44cm and 10cm above danger level respectively, said officials of Bangladesh Water Development Board.

Relief efforts are underway, with authorities distributing water-purifying tablets among flood victims.

TRAGEDY STRIKES

The floods have also claimed a life. Eight-year-old Sabbir Ahmed drowned in floodwater in Musallipara village at Ulipur upazila of Kurigram.

Confirming the matter, Ataur Rahman, UNO of Ulipur, said they have urged residents in flood-affected areas to closely supervise children to prevent similar tragedies.

The ongoing flood has affected 1,35,939 people in Kurigram and around 25,000 people in Lalmonirhat, said relief

3 killed in M'singh road accident

UNB, Mymensingh

Three people were killed and another injured when a truck rammed into a battery-run human haulier on Mymensingh-Kishoreganj road at Harua Bus Stand in Ishwarganj upazila of Mymensingh district yesterday.

The deceased were identified as Taslim Mia, 28, the human haulier driver, of Charsihari village and Arifuzzaman Rakib, 20, and Jahanara Begum, 35, of Nashti village in the upazila.

The accident occurred around 2:00pm when the Mymensingh-bound truck hit the battery-run human haulier from Laxmiganj Bazar, leaving two killed on the spot and two others injured, said Majedur Rahman, officer-in-charge of Ishwarganj Police Station.

The injured were taken to Ishwarganj Upazila Health Complex where the doctors declared one of them dead.

Locals managed to apprehend the truck driver and his helper and handed them over to police.

ANNUAL SUMMIT

Embattled Biden greets Nato allies in Washington

REUTERS, Washington

US President Joe Biden welcomed the heads of Nato member states to Washington yesterday for an annual summit that gives the embattled Democrat an international stage to convince allies at home and abroad he can still lead.

Biden, 81, has vowed to press on in his race against Republican Donald Trump, 78, despite concern from Democrats on Capitol Hill and donors that he will lose the November 5 election after a halting debate performance on June 27.

Biden made restoring the United States' traditional alliances abroad to counter the threat of autocracies the centerpiece of his foreign policy after Trump challenged allies as part of an "America First" approach. Who wins in November could have a substantial impact on Nato's and Europe's future.

Trump has suggested that, given a second term, he would not defend Nato members that did not meet the alliance's defense spending target of two percent of their respective GDP if they came under military attack. He has also questioned the amount of aid given to Ukraine.

Aides said Biden's opening speech expected at 5:00 pm Eastern time (2100 GMT) will highlight what his administration sees as a key accomplishment: a stronger and more united Nato, under Washington's leadership, with more members and a resolve to meet their collective security needs.

That brings, they say, tangible results for American voters: a safer country, with a strong international economic position, more alliances and power abroad, and less at risk of conflict with its adversaries.

Ukrainian drones target Russian military airfield, oil refinery

AFP, Kyiv

Ukrainian drones targeted a military airfield, an oil refinery and substation in southern Russia, a defence source in Kyiv said yesterday, after Moscow reported an overnight aerial barrage.

Kyiv has stepped up cross border aerial attacks on Russia in recent months, attempting to damage energy infrastructure and the Kremlin's war chest by hurting oil revenues.

Russia has launched drone and missiles attacks that have crippled Ukrainian power plants and halved the country's generation capacity.

In an operation coordinated by Security Services of Ukraine and the country's military intelligence, drone spurred explosions at the Akhtyubinsk military airfield in Russia's Astrakhan region.

It also said there had been blasts at an electrical substation in the Rostov region and an oil depot in the southern Volgograd region.

The source added that Ukrainian forces would pursue more strikes on "Russian military facilities working for the war against Ukraine."

There was no response in Moscow to the specific claims.

The Russian defence ministry however had earlier said that its air defence systems had destroyed 38 Ukrainian drones in regions near the border between the two countries, including Rostov and Astrakhan.

Rostov's governor Vasily Golubev in comments to state-run agency TASS acknowledged an electric substation had been damaged in a drone attack, saying repairs would take three days.

And Astrakhan's governor Igor Babushkin said Ukraine had launched a "massive attempt to attack targets with drones" in the north of the region, adding that the attack had been "successfully repelled".

Both sides have used drones, including larger self-detonating craft with ranges stretching hundreds of kilometres extensively throughout the conflict, which began in February 2022.

Yatharth Hospital, a private medical facility, reports Indian Express, quoting police.

In the alleged racket, records show, patients from Bangladesh were lured by a network of middlemen, Kumari, and their associates for organ transplantation in major hospitals around the Indian capital.

The Bangladeshis involved in the racket were named in the news report as Rasel, 29, from Kushtia, and his associates Md Sumon Miya, 28, Md Rokon, 26, and Ifti. All except Ifti were arrested.

Together with Tripura-based Ratish Pal, they lured potential donors from Bangladesh to Delhi, where the donors would receive four to five lakh rupees for their kidneys. Recipients were charged 25 to 30 lakh rupees, a source told Indian Express.

Donors and recipients coordinated their stay, treatment and tests through a medical tourism company named Al Shifa, sources said.

Rasel rented a flat in Jasola village, where potential donors stayed and met with recipients.

A source told Indian Express, "Five to six donors were staying at this rented flat. All the tests before the transplant were completed. The recipients would also meet the donors at the flat."

During the arrests, a bag recovered from Rasel's room contained nine passports, two diaries, and a register. These passports belonged to kidney donors and recipients and the diary reportedly had details of monetary transactions between the donor and recipient.

Her appointment has not been formally announced by the government.

In May, she told the Financial Times that Labour would push the Financial Conduct Authority, Britain's markets regulator, to do more to remove barriers to competitiveness and growth.

New finance minister Rachel Reeves on Monday launched a new "national mission" to drive economic growth, setting out plans to increase housebuilding, unblock infrastructure projects and attract private investment.

Siddiq would succeed Bim Afolami, a former HSBC banker who held the role under the previous Conservative government.

When asked about the accident, Shahidul Islam said quoting witnesses that the lorry strayed from its lane and came to the middle of the road.

The bus passengers also told firefighters the bus had also moved from its lane to the middle of the road.

Two killed in Israeli strike on Hezbollah vehicle in Syria

AFP, Beirut

A war monitor said two people were killed yesterday in an Israeli strike on a vehicle belonging to Lebanon's Hezbollah group in the Damascus countryside near the Lebanese border.

Hezbollah has traded almost daily cross-border fire from Lebanon with the Israeli army since October in support of Palestinian ally Hamas, with Israel targeting operatives from the group in both Lebanon and neighbouring Syria.

"At least two people were killed and one was wounded in an Israeli drone strike on a Hezbollah car" on the Syrian side of the border with Lebanon, said Rami Abdel Rahman, head of the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights.

The car was targeted near a Syrian army checkpoint, the monitor said.

MEDITERRANEAN

Charity warns about migrant 'emergency'

AFP, Rome

German charity Sea-Eye yesterday said it had come to the rescue of migrant boats five times in 24 hours, which showed "the state of emergency" in the Mediterranean.

The Sea-Eye 4 responded to the distress calls along with two other rescue charity ships between Sunday and Monday, rescuing some 230 people, including a mother and her baby, it said.

"Five rescues in 24 hours. That shows the state of emergency in the Mediterranean at the moment, and how important it is that we are there to save lives," the charity said in a statement.

After having transferred some migrants to an Italian coast guard vessel, yesterday it was transporting some 170 others to the assigned port in Genoa, in northern Italy, which it said was a six-day round trip.

Famine has spread throughout Gaza

Say UN experts after recent deaths of several more children from malnutrition

REUTERS, Geneva

The recent deaths of several more children from malnutrition in the Gaza Strip indicate that famine has spread throughout the enclave, a group of independent human rights experts mandated by the United Nations said yesterday.

Gaza health authorities say at least 33 children have died of malnutrition, mostly in northern areas which had until recently faced the brunt of the Israeli military campaign.

Since early May, the offensive has spread to southern Gaza, hitting aid flows into the enclave amid restrictions by Israel, which has accused UN agencies of failing to distribute supplies efficiently.

In yesterday's statement, the group of 11 rights experts cited the deaths of three children aged 13, 9-years-old and six months from malnutrition in the southern area of Khan Younis and the central area of Deir Al-Balah since the end of May.

"With the death of these children from starvation despite medical treatment in central Gaza, there is no doubt that famine has spread from northern Gaza into central and southern Gaza," the experts said.

Their statement, signed by experts including the Special Rapporteur on the right to food, Michael Fakhri, condemned "Israel's intentional and targeted starvation campaign against the Palestinian people".

Israel's diplomatic mission in Geneva said the statement amounted to "misinformation".

"Israel has continuously scaled up its coordination and assistance in the delivery of humanitarian aid across the Gaza Strip, recently connecting its power line to the Gaza water desalination plant," it added.

India floods swamp nat'l park

Six rhinos killed

AFP, Guwahati

Devastating floods in India's northeast that have killed scores of people also swamped a national park drowning six threatened rhinos and other wildlife, government officials said yesterday.

Floods have begun to ease, Assam state Chief Minister Himanta Biswa Sarma said in a statement, noting the "water level of the Brahmaputra and its tributaries is below the danger level in most places".

More than 1.8 million people have been affected across 3,000 villages, as well as 72 killed since mid-May, according to state disaster officials.

Urea output plummets

has to purchase fertiliser at the prevailing rate in the global market from Kafco, a joint venture between the government and private investors from Bangladesh, Japan, Denmark and the Netherlands.

It means the government is getting urea from only GPFPLC out of five state-owned producers at a lower cost.

Currently, there is no fertiliser crisis, according to Md Saidur Rahman, chairman of Bangladesh Chemical Industries Corporation (BCIC).

"If we don't get gas from one or two more factories in the near future, there might be a problem," he said, adding that if the energy division were able to supply adequate gas, the factories would have been running in full swing.

The Aman season, which accounts for about 40 percent of Bangladesh's rice production, begins in July-August and ends in November-December. If the gas crisis continues, fertiliser supply may be hampered in the upcoming Aman season, which can go on to fuel food inflation.

In the absence of local urea production, the government is relying more and more on costly imports.

This gives rise to two problems: exhaustion of limited dollar stockpile and ensuring a strict shipment schedule of fertilisers, said Jahangir Alam, an agriculture economist.

As of June 30, foreign currency reserves stood at $21.8 billion, enough to meet about three-and-a-half months' import bills, according to data from the Bangladesh Bank.

"If we rely completely on imports during the farming season, there might be hold-ups in getting steady supply of fertilisers. Rather, it will be beneficial for all if we increase gas supply to the fertiliser plants," Alam added.

Gas supply to the fertiliser plants was reduced to make way for increased supply to the gas-fired power plants for higher electricity generation during the summer months, said a top official of Petrobangla on the condition of anonymity to speak candidly on the matter.

"The gas crisis has been going on for a long time, so the supply has to be rationed," he added.

Between July last year and April this year, Jamuna Fertiliser could meet just 42 percent of its production target for want of gas, while Shahjalal Fertiliser managed 57 percent, according to the latest report of BCIC.

Chittagong Urea Fertiliser met 74 percent of its production target and Ashuganj Fertiliser and Chemical Company 69 percent, the report said.

The four factories are shut now, which means they fell short of their production target for fiscal 2023-24 by a wider margin, according to BCIC officials.

Besides the urea, Bangladesh consumes DAP and TSP fertilisers, both of which are mostly imported.

The lone DAP factory achieved only 36.6 percent of its production target and the TSP factory achieved about 66 percent in April.

Last fiscal year, as much as $5 billion was spent on fertiliser imports, according to data from BCIC. In fiscal 2020-21, fertiliser imports stood at $1.4 billion. In the previous years, imports were even lower.

About 15 years ago, BCIC was producing 70 percent of the fertiliser required, according to Alam, also a director of Dhaka School of Economics. Now, local production accounts for 25 to 30 percent of the demand.

"BCIC became import dependent instead of focusing on scaling up local production, which was the main duty of the organisation. We have the advantage and ability to produce nearly 100 percent of required urea locally, but due to gas shortage, the import dependency has been increasing," Alam added.

If the government purchased fertiliser from local producers, the cost for per metric tonne of urea would be about Tk 25,000, according to BCIC officials. It costs more than Tk 45,000 to bring the same volume of urea from abroad. For urea purchases from Kafco, the rate is about Tk 40,000.

Taliban pledge growing role for morality police

Says UN report

AFP, Kabul

The Taliban government's morality police will play an increasing role in enforcing religious law in Afghanistan, according to a UN report published yesterday that accused them of creating a "climate of fear".

The report from the UN assistance mission in Afghanistan said the Ministry for the Propagation of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice "had negative impacts on the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms... with a discriminatory and disproportionate impact on women".

But the report also carried a response from Taliban authorities, who said the vice ministry had a bigger role to play. The ministry implements an austere vision of Islam, which has increasingly dominated Afghanistan since the 2021 Taliban takeover.

Morality police squads are empowered to scold, arrest and deliver punishments to citizens violating edicts which have marginalised women, effectively banned music and outlawed other activity deemed un-Islamic.

The UN report said there was a "a climate of fear and intimidation" owing to the ministry's invasion of Afghans' private lives, ambiguity over its legal powers, and the "disproportionality of punishments".

However, in their written response Taliban authorities said the vice ministry is "dedicated to promoting benefits and averting harm in all spheres of peoples' lives".

"Its official documents, as previously stated, draw from Sharia and Islamic law, and as a result, its role is growing as required by the situation."

The UN report documents the work of the vice ministry between the Taliban's return to power three years ago and March of this year. It said the Taliban government had overseen a ban on women travelling without male escorts, barred them from public parks and shut women-run businesses.

Ensure fairness in civil service tests

News of PSC question paper leaks deeply alarming

We are dismayed by the revelation of a question paper leak racket operating within the Bangladesh Public Service Commission (BPSC). According to a report by Prothom Alo, six officials of the commission and 11 others have been arrested by law enforcers for allegedly leaking question papers of various exams organised by the PSC. The group, according to Channel24, which broke the news after a sting operation, have sold question papers of at least 30 recruitment tests including Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS) exams for over a decade.

At a time when students across the country are demanding quota reforms in public service recruitment to make it more merit-based, the PSC scandal deals a heavy blow to our objective of having qualified professionals in public institutions. The leak shows how the system is still largely rigged against meritocracy, often allowing candidates to exploit the preferential quota system or use bribery or political influence to secure a government job. Even the lengthy process of the BCS recruitment cycle works against meritorious students. Under such circumstances, how can we expect general students to feel hopeful about their future in the country? How can we expect honest and dedicated public servants when unethical practices and undue barriers haunt the entire recruitment process? And how sincere will those coming out of compromised tests be to rein in the corruption that is plaguing nearly every public sector?

Shedding light into the PSC scandal, investigations have revealed that Tk 2 crore allegedly passed between two racket members, both PSC officials, to obtain and sell the question paper of the Bangladesh Railway recruitment test held on July 5. Furthermore, a former driver at the PSC, who allegedly lost his job for leaking question papers in 2014, has reportedly amassed wealth worth at least Tk 50 crore. This raises the question: how is it possible that the PSC administration was unaware of the operation of this criminal network for so long? Who else were involved? How high up does it go? Where were the institutional checks and balances that are supposed to prevent this kind of scenarios?

The candidates of the July 5 recruitment test have demanded its cancellation—which is only logical—but those who unfairly missed their chances in the previous 30-something recruitment tests can no longer be compensated. Neither can we perhaps expect anything happening to those already recruited through this compromised process. This is as sad as it is alarming. The only way the government can ensure justice to those thousands of deprived candidates is by ensuring that the accused are brought to book, and the entire public service recruitment process is revamped to make it more merit-based.

Continuing flood exposes fault lines

Authorities must prepare better, more wisely

Bangladesh is in the middle of its annual monsoon, so the news of flooding along with the deaths and destructions that come with it is more or less expected, even though the pain of witnessing so much suffering doesn't go away. What's harder to accept, however, is when the suffering is exacerbated by things that are within our control. Two developments that have become synonymous with the flood this year, and natural calamities in general of late, are the crisis of relief supplies, especially for those stranded in remote villages, and the fragility of embankments and polders.

As the floods hit new areas, with as many as 20 districts and two million people affected so far, as per an estimate released on Sunday, the cries for aid are getting louder. Many have complained that they were yet to receive government assistance. This could be partly because of transportation and distribution challenges, with the upazila and union parishads in charge of aid deliveries, and partly because of the quantity of provisions allocated. The local administrations and public representatives have a big task here: they must ensure not only sufficient provisions but also proper distribution. And while at it, they must give special attention to those who could not make it to the temporary shelters.

The other development that caught our attention is how prone to damage many of the embankments and polders are, giving away at the slightest nudge, metaphorically speaking. We have had reports of crude materials like sand-filled geo-bags being dumped to check water flow through some of the collapsed dykes. While the pressure of floodwaters can be intense, especially when rivers flow above danger levels, any structural defence should be designed to withstand the pressure. What's the point of having them then? We must resolve these and other longstanding issues—including the largely ineffective river-dredging programmes that are supposed to help manage water flow and erosions—so that vulnerable communities do not have to suffer so much.

In some of the worst-hit districts, water levels are decreasing but the overall flood situation has not improved yet. In Kurigram and Lalmonirhat, over 1.60 lakh people have been marooned. Farmers have suffered significant losses, with around 6,500 hectares of agricultural land including Aman seedbeds and vegetable fields submerged in Kurigram alone. Meanwhile, over 1,000 educational institutions remain closed in Sylhet and Rangpur regions. At least 10 have died, including two in Jamalpur on Monday. The growing human and economic tolls of the flood are becoming clearer as days pass. The least we can do in such a situation is prepare better, and wisely.

Anti-graft drive: How has Awami League fared in first six months?

The Awami League-led government completes six months of its fourth consecutive term in office today. Generally, six months is not enough time to assess the performance of a government. But for an incumbent government in seat since 2009, whose comeback was accompanied with many promises, it seems a good enough timeframe to evaluate its deeds over the last six months in the context of its 15-year rule.

In the past six months, the issue of corruption has truly come to the fore, and the government has acted in a handful of high-profile cases. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina recently vowed that no one indulging in corruption will be spared, irrespective of their identity, and that the ongoing drive against graft will continue. At the maiden cabinet meeting on January 15, she also gave strict instructions to not tolerate corruption and irregularity.

However, there are as yet no indications that the government is ready to tackle corruption holistically. No policy reforms have been suggested, no directives have been issued to concerned agencies, nor have law enforcement authorities been bolstered to act against those deemed corrupt. Instead, what seems to be clearer as days go by is that the government is cherry-picking certain individuals who may no longer be in favour, and conducting isolated drives against them, while others go scot-free.

The Anti-Corruption Commission is currently investigating the accumulation of illegal wealth by former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed and his family members, former National Board of Revenue (NBR) official Matiur Rahman, immediate past NBR first secretary Quazi Abu Mahmud Faisal, customs commissioner Enamul Haque, former NBR commissioner Wahida Rahman, former additional inspector general of police Shamsuddoha Khondoker, Rajdhani Unnayan Kartripakkha (Rajuk) director Mobarak Hossain and his wife, among others.

The amount of assets that the initial investigation by ACC has unearthed is mindboggling. It found illegal assets worth Tk 43.5 crore belonging to Benazir Ahmed, his wife, and two daughters. But the actual price of his wealth is many times higher than the amount shown in the documents.

Meanwhile, former NBR official Faisal has accumulated about Tk 1,000 crore by taking bribes for transferring income tax officials, intimidating taxpayers and resorting to other irregularities, according to ACC documents submitted to the court.

But the question that must be asked is, why is ACC investigating them now, rather than when they were at the helm of power? Does the ACC truly deserve compliments for acting on command, rather than doing its constitutionally mandated duty? While the AL throws its sacrificial offerings to a crowd thirsty for blood, the one prickly issue getting sidelined is whether the AL government can escape responsibility for such unbridled corruption.

There have been innumerable occasions when the party has quite blatantly used the state machineries for political benefits. There has been widespread immunity for overreach of influential individuals and institutions, which has given many the illusion of unbridled power—a perfect breeding ground for corruption and tyranny. The flurry of corruption allegations that have been raised against some former and incumbent government officials in recent times is nothing but an outcome of that situation.

The Awami League, in its manifestos before the last four national elections, vowed to strengthen the ACC, but Bangladesh Public Service Act 2018 essentially limits the anti-graft watchdog's power to arrest corrupt government officials, as it must get prior permission from the authorities concerned to arrest public servants.

Even a portion of AL leaders believe the government has failed to ensure accountability of government bodies, and is predominantly responsible for giving corruption its current institutional shape. On June 25, AL joint general secretary Mahbubul Alam Hanif told the parliament that corruption is overshadowing all the government's achievements and that despite its policy of zero-tolerance against corruption on paper, corruption remains out of control in reality.

The very next day, AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader said it isn't just government officials who are corrupt, but politicians too. But then, in the very next minute, he tried to justify corruption in the country by saying it is a common phenomenon across the globe.

Such contradiction, unfortunately, seems to be the very mantra of the party's professed commitment to tackling corruption. The Awami League, in its manifestos before the last four national elections, vowed to strengthen the ACC, but Bangladesh Public Service Act 2018 essentially limits the anti-graft watchdog's power to arrest corrupt government officials, as it must get prior permission from the authorities concerned to arrest public servants.

On June 10, ACC Chairman Moinuddin Abdullah accused ministries of fostering corruption by not including anti-corruption clauses in their regulations. The former bureaucrat also stated that all ministries have opened the floodgates to corruption. Meanwhile, ACC Commissioner (investigation) Md Jahurul Haque said, "Those in power in society are the ones who commit corruption. The CIP and VIP individuals, whom you try to honour, are involved in corruption."

The corrupt, indeed, are running the country, with impunity. Around Tk 92,261 crore has been plundered from the country's banking sector in 24 major scams over the past 15 years, as a result of irregularities, misuse of power, and potential money laundering, according to a report of the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD). The figure can only confirm the ineffectiveness of the Money Laundering Prevention Act and the futility of the government's commitments to safeguard the banking sector.

The AL, in its manifesto, promised to recover default loans through enforcement of laws, but the total defaulted loan in the banking sector stood at Tk 1,82,295 crore as of March, highest in the country's history. But in 2009 when the AL-led government came to office, the figure of total defaulted loan was Tk 22,000 crore.

We see the same impunity in the stock market. Low-performing stocks frequently appear on lists of top gainers or highest traded volumes in the stock market due to manipulations. Even when the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC) detects such manipulations, the BSEC's punishments are too lenient, discouraging effective deterrence. For instance, in 2023, the BSEC fined Abul Khayer Hiru and his associates only Tk 5.25 crore for manipulating the stocks of NRB Commercial Bank and Fortune Shoes. This fine pales in comparison to their estimated gains exceeding Tk 68 crore, according to BSEC enforcement records.

Does the ACC truly deserve compliments for acting on command, rather than doing its constitutionally mandated duty? While the AL throws its sacrificial offerings to a crowd thirsty for blood, the one prickly issue getting sidelined is whether the AL government can escape responsibility for such unbridled corruption.

Data suggests this may be a recurring issue. In 2022, the BSEC uncovered manipulation in several stocks, where the perpetrators gained an estimated Tk 253 crore but were only fined Tk 21 crore. In contrast, the US Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) identified 16 individuals involved in a stock manipulation scheme in June 2023 that generated over $35 million in illegal profits. Consequently, the SEC imposed collective fines exceeding $75 million, as reported on their website. This example highlights the significant disparity in how market manipulation is penalised in Bangladesh compared to the US. Instead of strong deterrents, we seem to be encouraging such practices by either turning a blind eye to them or letting perpetrators off the hook with a slap on the wrist.

Meanwhile, the success of every development project in the country is tainted by cost-overruns and innumerable project extensions due to corruption at every level for which no one is ever held to account. All this comes at a tremendous cost—the burden of foreign debt, which has now crossed $100 billion, a nearly four-fold increase compared to $25.3 billion in 2009.

And while the corrupt hoards wealth beyond our wildest imagination, ordinary people are barely surviving the onslaught of rising costs. The AL's top promise before the January 7 national poll was to address inflation and ensure a smooth supply chain to bring down commodity prices. But food inflation stood at 10.76 percent in May, a seven-month high. In June 2009, when the AL formed the government, the point-to-point inflation was 2.25 percent, while the average inflation rate was recorded at 6.66 percent.

The finance minister, while placing the proposed budget for FY 2024-2025, hoped to bring the inflation down to 6.5 percent. But given the country's current economic health and in the absence of any clear policy directives, it appears nothing more than a lofty assurance.

The party also promised to take strict action against illegal wealth acquisition in its election manifesto. The government, however, has taken the opposite position by once again deciding to allow black money holders to legalise undisclosed wealth without any scrutiny by paying a 15 percent tax.

The AL has long promised to establish a humane society by reducing social inequality, but the latest data of Household Income and Expenditure Survey reveals a totally different picture. Income inequality is at an all-time high in the country, with the top 10 percent of the wealthiest households now holding 40.92 percent of its total income.

The above-scenario paints a depressing picture of the first six months of the government's tenure. We can only hope that morning does not show the day. Sheikh Hasina has proven be the strongest leader of the country and we want to have faith in her to clamp down on corruption, regardless of affiliation, with greater vigour and steer her government to prioritise the welfare of the people.

LESSONS FROM FOUR ELECTIONS

More challenges to democracy ahead

BLACK, WHITE &GREY

is distinguished professor of political science at Illinois State University, US and a non-resident senior fellow of the Atlantic Council. His recent publications are "Pathways of Autocratization: The Tumultuous Journey of Bangladeshi Politics" (Routledge, 2024) and "The Charade: Bangladesh's 2024 Election (Prothoma, 2024)."

ALI RIAZ

In the year of elections, four recent elections have sent some messages which deserve our attention, particularly considering that we are living at a time when democracy is under threat globally and extremism is on the rise. These apparently disparate elections and their results seem to have some common elements with lessons for liberal democratic forces around the world. The elections I am referring to are the Indian election, the European Parliament election, the UK election, and the election in France. Held between April 19 and July 7, these elections were closely observed for several reasons. And there have been arguments that these may serve as barometers to the future of democracy.

India's election, with the largest number of voters in the world, and with the widespread prediction that Narendra Modi's Bhartiya Janata Party (BJP) will continue in power with a larger number of parliamentary seats this time around, ended up with a result which put a brake on Modi's authoritarian tendencies. Defying predictions by pollsters, the opposition alliance INDIA, led by the Indian National Congress, emerged as a formidable opposition after a decade, and BJP failed to secure an absolute majority.

The past decade witnessed a serious erosion of democracy in India. There were and still are concerns about what path the country will take under Modi's third term. The European Parliament election, held between June 6-9, was a gigantic endeavour because of the number of countries involved—27, to be precise. With the growing appeal of rightwing populism in Europe, the question was: will the far-right eclipse the centrists and shape the future trend in Europe?

Do these elections indicate a strategy to beat populist politics? In India, unlike the past two occasions, Modi's populist rhetoric did not work as the opposition made the election a choice of policy more than of personality. France's election, at least in the first round, sends a different message—populism works.

The British election, held on July 4, delivered a shift of power after 14 years from the Conservative Party to the Labour Party, as anticipated. But the results revealed a few disturbing trends. Parliamentary elections in France were held in two rounds, on June 30 and July 7, but were not anticipated to happen so soon before June 9. The early election was a consequence of the dismal electoral performance of President Emmanuel Macron's party in the European Parliament election. In a sense, it was a gamble by Macron, which turned out to be more high-stake than Macron and the French people had anticipated. The elections almost brought the rightwing National Rally (NR) to the gates of power, only to be pushed away by the left alliance—New Popular Front (NPF)—which came into existence only after the first round of voting.

The results of elections in India, France, and Britain demonstrate that voters are unhappy with the incumbents, but most importantly, their economic policies. It is not surprising that elections put incumbents in a difficult spot; elections are often considered as referendum on the incumbents, as they must defend their records. But in these instances, including in part in the Iranian election, it was beyond anti-incumbency.

VISUAL: STAR

While economy is not the only reason for unseating the Conservatives in Britain, there are other factors such as the dismal state of the National Health Service (NHS). Nevertheless, the bread-and-butter issue was the driving force. In India, unemployment, falling incomes, and inflation coupled with farmers' discontent became the hurdles which Modi and his party failed to cross. France's debt situation has been a matter of concern for all in the Eurozone, while dissatisfaction has been growing among French citizens. The lesson is clear: "it is the economy, stupid."

The shock victory of France's left alliance has allowed many across Europe to heave a sigh of relief. The victory of the Labour Party in Britain, although predicted ahead of the election, in some measures have engendered similar reactions. The Indian election result gives hope that the downward spiral is stopped, at least for now. These are the results that can be read as rejection of anti-pluralist extremist politics. But a closer look at it shows that the right-wing extremist forces are far from being defeated.

In India, it is still the BJP and Modi in power, and there is no reason to believe that the pernicious politics of division will be shunned. It has taken root in society, and cannot be ignored. In Britain, Labour has secured an historic win, but its support has remained almost the same as 2019, and an almost 20 percent swing from Conservatives did not go to Labour or LibDem, but to the extreme right wing Reform UK party. The Reform UK party has secured more than 14 percent of the popular vote, and has placed itself as the third largest party ahead of the LibDem.

In France, even after the left parties came together and reached an understanding with the centrist parties, the vote share of the NR and its allies stood at 37.6 percent. These figures echo the results of the European Parliament elections, which saw a surge of rightwing parties in Germany, France, Italy, and Austria. Although the European Parliament has limited power for domestic issues, the rise of the rightwing parties was not a complete surprise. Indeed, one can take comfort in the fact that despite rightwing parties performing well, the centre-right and centre-left groupings have retained their dominance in the European Parliament. But what will happen in the future if the present trend continues is an open question. If there is a lesson, it is that the danger to liberal democracy is not over. Instead, the coming years will be more challenging.

Do these elections indicate a strategy to beat populist politics? In India, unlike the past two occasions, Modi's populist rhetoric did not work as the opposition made the election a choice of policy more than of personality. France's election, at least in the first round, sends a different message—populism works. The same is the message from the rise of the Reform UK party. In the European Parliament elections, the right-wing parties which did well are known for their populist rhetoric. Some analysts, for example, Max Boot in the Washington Post, suggest that centrist politics is the antidote to populism. He refers to the policy shift of the Labour Party under Keir Starmer vis-à-vis Jeremy Corbyn as an example. Undoubtedly, Starmer has moved the party to the centre, but there has been a price for that too. The Labour Party has secured less popular votes than in 2019.

The argument that moderation and centrism is the way to go does not resonate with the French election results, as the Left alliance has some parties which have somewhat left-extremist positions. The voters have not rejected them. As such, these elections have not made any serious dent to populist politics.

There is a need for soul searching as to how to address the rising appeal of populist demagogues. In the United States, Trump is the personification of such pernicious populist politics. His appeal to the voters has not subsided; instead, with less than five months to go before the election, he is ahead of his opponent Joe Biden.

Both the Indian and French elections demonstrated that in the face of grave threats from undemocratic political forces, it is imperative to close the ranks and build an alliance. The opposition alliance INDIA is a bloc of disparate parties, but their decision to stand together to challenge the Modi regime provided an alternative to Indian voters. Similarly, the NPF in France is not a cohesive alliance. In fact, the partners were engaged in rhetorical battle until the first round of the election. Whether they can work together and work with centrist parties will be tested in the coming days. But for the moment, one must acknowledge, the left has played an historic role.

How a US act revived Sino-Indian confrontation over Tibet

M SAKHAWAT HUSSAIN

On June 12, 2024, both houses of US Congress passed a bipartisan bill called "Promoting a Resolution to Tibet-China Dispute Act," better known as "Resolve Tibet Act." The act calls on China to find a "peaceful settlement" to the 65-year-old Tibet issue through dialogue with the Tibetan spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama, who is in exile in Dharamshala, India. The Dalai Lama was rescued from Lhasa to India in March 1959, when Chinese troops were about to take over the Tibetan capital. He still heads a "Tibetan Government in Exile," based in the Indian state of Himachal Pradesh, despite strong Chinese disapproval.

Almost six decades after the Sino-Indian war over the Tibetan border issue and the Dalai Lama's ambivalent stand on Tibet's sovereignty, the US' Resolve Tibet Act would certainly bring the issue out of historical obscurity. The issue was thought to have been frozen after the China-US rapprochement and the US' acceptance of the One-China policy in 1972, while India is also said to have reconciled with the claim that Tibet is an integral part of China.

The issue was settled to an extent when China reconciled with India's takeover of Sikkim, considered one of the five fingers of Tibet, during the visit of India's late Foreign Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee in 1979. But China never gave up its claim over outer Tibet including Aksai Chin, Tawang and Arunachal Pradesh—declared as one of the five fingers of Tibet by Mao Zedong—in the northeast.

Since its creation in 1949, the People's Republic of China (PRC) has denied the outcome of the Shimla Convention of 1914, which was attended by representatives of autonomous Tibet and the Republic of China (ROC). Though the ROC attended the meeting, it refused to endorse the border agreement, claiming that the entire Tibet had historically belonged to China and would always remain an integral part of it.

The India-China dispute particularly centred on the western border in Eastern Ladakh, involving Aksai Chin—with there being controversy over the acceptance of the Macartney-MacDonald Line versus the Johnson Line. PRC claimed the Karakoram watershed line to be the correct dividing line, rejecting India's claim based on the Johnson Line further to the east. During his official visit to India in 1960, Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai refused to adjust the border along the Karakoram Range in exchange for recognition of the McMahon Line in Arunachal Pradesh. This refusal, despite efforts by then Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, regarding the Tibet and Dalai Lama issue, dashed hopes for a peaceful settlement between the two governments.

After meeting the Dalai Lama, the US delegation also visited India's Prime Minister Narendra Modi. The fact that the Indian PM decided to meet with the US delegation sends a clear message to China as regards to India's position. Predictably, the delegation's visit drew angry responses from the Chinese authorities, who view the act as interfering with China's internal matters.

The complex relationship soured not only over the border dispute but was compounded by the involvement of CIA, India and Pakistan in the Tibet uprising and the extrication of the Dalai Lama, primarily facilitated by India, which provided him refuge. As a result, what began as an exemplary third-world relationship between China and India soon turned bitter.

These issues were central to the 1962 Sino-Indian war, in which India suffered defeat in both Aksai Chin in the west and Arunachal Pradesh in the east. The events of the war remain ingrained in the Indian psyche and continue to influence its military strategy and geopolitics. China unilaterally withdrew from Arunachal Pradesh but retained control over Aksai Chin. And the Chinese claim over outer Tibet in Arunachal Pradesh remains a contentious issue.

During that war, India faced significant supply and troop deployment issues on the northeast through the Siliguri Corridor, also known as the Chicken's Neck. East Pakistan at that time stood in the way of any alternative supply route to the Chicken's Neck. And it's worth noting that China was increasing its presence at Nathula Pass in Sikkim and the Namka Chu Pass in Tawang region, posing a threat to the Siliguri Corridor between Tetulia, Bangladesh, and Nepal.

India learned an important lesson about its strategic handicap, vis-à-vis Arunachal Pradesh, which could be a flashpoint in any Sino-Indian conflict. But things have changed drastically since 1962, and both countries are now nuclear powers. And yet, reports indicate that both have heavily militarised along the McMahon Line, especially after the Sino-Indian Doklam standoff on the Sikkim-Bhutan border.

Chinese presence in Doklam makes it easier to threaten the corridor in the event of a wider conflict. Therefore, India's strategic pursuit of alternatives, such as the Kaladan route, is insufficient due to its longer and more perilous journey. And so, the other obvious alternative being talked about in many leading Indian newspapers is through Bangladesh.

While the US was in the process of enacting the Resolve Tibet Act, Chine issued a new official map showing the entire Arunachal Pradesh as being a part of Tibet, changing its name to Xizang. What is interesting is that, within a week of the Act passing on June 18, a bipartisan seven member US Congressional delegation visited Dharamshala and met with the Dalai Lama.

Moreover, the act says that, "claims made by officials of the People's Republic of China and the Chinese Communist Party that Tibet has been a part of China since ancient times are historically inaccurate." And that, "United States public diplomacy efforts should counter disinformation about Tibet from the Government of the People's Republic of China and the Chinese Communist Party, including disinformation about the history of Tibet, the Tibetan people, and Tibetan institutions, including that of the Dalai Lama." It further calls on China to negotiate with the Dalai Lama's government in exile.

After meeting the Dalai Lama, the US delegation also visited India's Prime Minister Narendra Modi. The fact that the Indian PM decided to meet with the US delegation sends a clear message to China as regards to India's position. Predictably, the delegation's visit drew angry responses from the Chinese authorities, who view the act as interfering with China's internal matters.

Given these circumstances, it's important to ask where Bangladesh stands in regards to the geostrategic tensions between China and India. Bangladesh also needs to seriously think about the implications of allowing Indian logistical routes to bypass the critical Chicken's Neck for potential military-logistical buildup, perhaps against China in the future. Thus, it is essential to clarify whether India is seeking transhipment, transit, or a corridor through Bangladesh—which India has been trying to get since the time of Bangabandhu's government.

UTTAM KUMAR ROY'S solo exhibition unveils reality through fiction

Uttam Kumar Roy developed artistic inclinations at a young age, leading him to pursue a five-year diploma in Drawing and Painting at the Bulbul Academy of Fine Arts (Bafa) in Dhaka.

MAISHA ISLAM MONAMEE

The Actuality of Fiction, a captivating solo exhibition by acclaimed Bangladeshi artist Uttam Kumar Roy, is currently underway at Alliance Française de Dhaka. Curated by Mustafa Zaman, the exhibition opened its doors on July 5, and will continue until July 16.

The opening ceremony was graced by the presence of eminent artist Monirul Islam as the chief guest. Renowned sculptor Alak Roy, Art Bangla Foundation Chairman Professor Mohammad Eunus, and Bulbul Academy of Fine Arts Secretary Md Fazlur Rahman added further distinction as special guests.

The 57 artworks on display delve into the intricate relationship between the dynamism of life and the human mind's interpretation of it. Uttam Kumar explores the constant state of flux we experience and the psychological toll it can take. Through his art, he strives to uncover the root cause of this tension with a keen visual eye. The title itself hints at the interplay between reality and the narratives we construct around it.

Uttam Kumar's artistic process is a fascinating exploration of this dynamic. He begins by absorbing the constant movement and pressures of life. This immersive experience triggers a chain reaction within him – a mental reaction that leads to a deeper realisation. This realisation then finds expression on the canvas, transforming into an artwork. The creative journey does not end there. His artistic choices, particularly his use of colour and technique, further shape the emerging motifs. This introspective process, with its distinct complexities and simplicities, reflects the multifaceted nature of human experience.

"Art is the reflection of the ethos of life and the reality one lives in amid one's actual and imaginary experiences. My art is shaped by life's realities and inner experiences. This ongoing exploration, fueled by the complexities of existence, drives artistic expression," the artist explained.

Upon closer inspection, it can be understood that the artist uses his imagination to make art. He does not focus on myths or stories but allows paint splatters and drips to guide him. These splatters become their own reality, reflecting the artist's physical and mental connection to the world. Unlike traditional paintings, they directly respond to the artist's experiences. Thus, the artworks on display are dreamlike figures that seem to exist in perfect harmony with their surroundings. These rhythmic paintings offer a way to experience life's true nature, not through fantasy, but through the artist's honest expression.

"Uttam Kumar's art challenges the narrow view of art imposed by colonial influence in India, which valued realism over imagination. He defies this limitation by creating abstract paintings that invite interpretation rather than offering a single clear meaning. His complex works demand active engagement from viewers, who are encouraged to be swept away by the experience rather than dissecting the two-dimensional details for a literal message," shared Mustafa Zaman.

Uttam Kumar Roy developed artistic inclinations at a young age, leading him to pursue a five-year diploma in Drawing and Painting at the Bulbul Academy of Fine Arts (Bafa) in Dhaka.

He also holds a Master of Science (MSc) in Botany from Jagannath University. This unique combination of scientific knowledge and artistic expression lends a fascinating depth to his work. He is currently a faculty member at Bafa, and generously shares his vast knowledge and experience with aspiring artists, nurturing the next generation of Bangladeshi art.

The exhibition is open to all till Tuesday, from 3pm to 9pm.

Faruque Ahmed takes on the director's chair

In his four-decade-long career, renowned actor Faruque Ahmed has earned a name for his performances on the theatre stage, television, and in films. Now, the artiste is set to make his directorial debut with the play, Rongmohal, written by Rubaiyat Ahmed.

"I am grateful to the eminent theatre personalities Nasir Uddin Yousuff and Shimul Yusuf for believing in me and giving me such a great responsibility," shared the actor.

The rehearsal of the play is underway and it will be staged in October.

Court orders removal of Aly Hasan's 'Nana Nati' from YouTube

Rapper Aly Hasan, lyricist of the song Nana Nati, received a legal notice for contempt of court, leading to its removal from YouTube.

On June 19, Advocate Fahim Hasnain, assistant public prosecutor of Sherpur District Judge Court, sent the notice. It alleged that the song contained the offensive line, "current court judgments run on money," and demanded its removal within 15 days along with a public apology from Hasan. Failure to comply would result in legal action.

Deputy Attorney General Sheikh Saifuzzaman informed the media that the High Court ordered the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) to remove the song. While no longer on YouTube, the song remains on RBT Entertainment's Facebook page.

after Channel 24 ran a report on question leaks in the exams conducted by the PSC.

The CID arrested at least 16 others, including Abed's son Syed Sohanur Rahman Siam, relief and disaster management secretary of Dhaka North Chhatra League; and six PSC officials.

"Abed Ali recently sold two more flats in the West Shewrapara building. We suspect he has more property ... We are looking into it," the CID official said.

Working as a chauffeur, Abed, who is from West Botla village in Madaripur's Dasar upazila, amassed assets worth millions.

The eldest of three siblings, he left Madaripur for Dhaka after his father's death and began working as a porter. Later, with the help of a childhood friend, he started pulling rickshaws while living in a mess on Indira Road in the capital.

In 1997, he obtained a class-eight certificate from the Open University and managed to secure a job as the driver for the PSC chairman on December 2 that year.

That was when his fate began to change, locals and investigators said.

Within five years of joining, Abed got involved with a syndicate, along with some PSC officials, who were leaking question papers of various PSC recruitment exams to earn money.

He was dismissed from his job in 2014, after the allegations against him of leaking question papers in a recruitment test for first-class posts (non-cadre) were proved.

A departmental case was filed against Abed on April 22, 2014, as his active involvement was found in the leak of question papers for the post of "Assistant Maintenance Engineer" for the then Ministry of Information and Communication Technology in the non-cadre category.

"Abed has earned a bad name for many illegal activities and he is involved in habitual misdeeds," the PSC report said, adding that he got the job using a fake permanent address – Sirajganj instead of Madaripur.

According to the CID investigators, Abed continued to work with the syndicate even after losing his job.

His son Siam, who was relieved from his post in the BCL on Monday, used to abet his father in the crime.

CID officials and locals said that Abed also earned money by lobbying for various candidates to get jobs in many government offices.

Locals said he built a duplex in his ancestral home in West Botla village at a cost of around Tk 3 crore, while his elder and younger brothers continue to live in mud-floored two-room tin-shed houses.

He also has a mango orchard in front of his house and built a mosque at a cost of Tk 1.5 crore, they told our Shariatpur correspondent, adding that he owns at least 25 three-wheelers.

Abed even tried to construct a cattle farm with over 100 cows on the right side of a bridge adjacent to Kamalapur Bazar in Dasar upazila. On the left side, he had put up pillars and laid the foundation for business establishments.

However, as it is government land, the upazila administration stopped both constructions.

Speaking to The Daily Star, Abed's younger brother, Javed Ali, said, "My father was a farmer and my two brothers are also earning their livings by farming. I work as an easy-bike driver to run my family."

About his brother, he said, "If he is guilty, I want him punished."

In Dhaka, Abed has been living with his wife, two sons and a daughter in a flat in the 10-storey "Bismillah Tower" on West Shewrapara's Wasa Road for the past seven years.

Other residents of the building told this newspaper that Abed's family members left the flat after his arrest. They added that he owns three flats in the building and has two cars.

Locals said that he would introduce himself as a car trader and they heard he also owns a six-storey building in Mirpur's Paikpara.

Recently, Abed was vying for the chairman post of Dasar upazila, the polls of which were postponed.

In his Facebook ID, he recently posted videos of campaigning, urging locals to support him in the upcoming election.

In a video post in June, he spoke about owning a seven-story building and an 11-storey building in Dhaka, and about setting up a mosque and cemetery on 71 decimals of land.

"I have now started constructing a house, which already costs Tk 3 crore," the video showed him telling a gathering in the upazila.

Protesters set to resume blockade today

"Having said that, since the quota system was once abolished through a movement, we believe there is another opportunity for intervention ... this time, we want to settle the quota issue for good. We want a law passed in parliament as a permanent solution.

"So, our movement is now directed towards the government and the executive branch. The "Bangla Blockade" will continue until our demands are met."

EYES ON COURT

Earlier in the day, two DU students filed a petition challenging the High Court verdict, which was later placed at the chamber court for a hearing today.

Justice Md Ashfaqul Islam, chamber judge of the Appellate Division, passed the order after senior lawyer Shah Monjurul Hoque submitted the petition on behalf of the students.

Two students are Al Sadi Bhuiyan, a student of the anthropology department and president of Dhaka University Journalist Association, and Urdu department student Ahnaf Saeed Khan.

Meanwhile, a full bench of the Appellate Division is scheduled tomorrow to hold a hearing on the government petition challenging the HC verdict.

Following a writ petition, the HC on June 5 declared illegal the government decision that cancelled the 30 percent quota for the children of freedom fighters in the civil service for ninth to 13th grades.

Law Minister Anisul Huq welcomed the students' decision to file the petition with the SC against the HC verdict and hoped that the agitators would now call off their movement.

"I think this decision to file the petition is a positive step. They can place their arguments through their lawyers. After hearing the arguments, the court will ensure justice," he said in response to queries from reporters at his ministerial office in the Bangladesh Secretariat.

Students from public universities and colleges, along with job seekers, started demonstrating a week ago, with a four-point demand, including the reinstatement of a 2018 circular that abolished the quota system in government jobs.

On Monday, they launched the "Bangla Blockade" following a one-point demand for scrapping all illogical and discriminatory quotas in public service through enactment of a law and keeping a minimum quota for marginalised citizens in line with the constitution.

COUNTRYWIDE PROTEST

As part of the nationwide anti-quota movement, students at Rajshahi University held a sit-in at the university's Paris Road for an hour from 3:00pm.

Mehedi Sajeev, one of the coordinators of the movement, said, "We want all discriminatory quotas to be reformed except the ones for the disadvantaged, disabled, and marginalised communities."

Rajshahi College students blocked a road in front of the college for three hours from 11:00am.

In Chattogram, students of Chittagong University held a mass campaign and formed a human chain at the university's Shaheed Minar premises at 10:30am.

Kaniz Fatima, a student of CU, said, "I'm the daughter of a freedom fighter and I don't want quota in government jobs. I will let my merit speak for itself."

In Savar, hundreds of students of Jahangirnagar University blocked the Dhaka-Aricha highway near the campus for 30 minutes from 3:45pm.

In Barishal, students of Brojomohun College, also known as BM College, blocked the Dhaka-Barisal highway in Nathullabad area for two hours from 11:30am.

Economy, trade to be in focus

for Bangladesh, but it will not be easy," said Sk Tawfique M Haque, director of the South Asian Institute of Policy Governance at North South University.

China is Bangladesh's largest trading partner, with bilateral trade between the two nations exceeding $25 billion. However, exports from Bangladesh account for less than 3 percent of the sum.

Narrowing the trade gap will be a major focus of this trip.

"We would explore all ways of minimising this gap," Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud told reporters on July 7.

The two countries are expected to sign 20-22 memoranda of understanding (MoUs) in the areas of trade and investment, digital economy, banking, infrastructure development, disaster management, agriculture and people-to-people connectivity. Yesterday, as many as 18 MoUs were signed.

However, hopes of getting a $5 billion loan in yuan were dashed after Dhaka and Beijing failed to agree on the terms and conditions of interest and grace period of the loan, officials said.

"China will not provide the loan without conditions. Even if they provide the loan and other assistance, it will be a way for China to keep Bangladesh on its fold," said Tawfique, dean of NSU's School of Humanities and Social Sciences.

The Western powers will not be happy if such a currency swap happens between Bangladesh and China because this will be part of the de-dollarisation movement that China and Russia really want, especially after the Ukraine war, he added.

Bangladesh will seek Chinese support for the Southern Integrated Development Initiative (SIDI) centring the Payra Port in Patuakhali, Mahmud said.

Japan is supporting the Moheshkhali-Matarbari Integrated Infrastructure Development Initiative (MIDI) and the BIG-B Initiative (The Bay of Bengal Industrial Growth Belt). "Similarly, Dhaka wants Beijing to support SIDI," said a foreign ministry official informed with the proceedings.

On July 4, Chinese foreign ministry spokesperson Mao Ning said China stands ready to work with Bangladesh to carry forward the spirit of the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence.

China wants to "deepen political mutual trust, further synergise development strategies, advance high-quality Belt and Road (BRI) cooperation, speed up implementing the Global Development Initiative (GDI), the Global Security Initiative (GSI) and the Global Civilisation Initiative, and elevate the bilateral relations to a new level", she said.

Bangladesh joined China's flagship Belt and Road Initiative when Xi Jinping visited Dhaka in 2016. Beijing wants Dhaka to join GDI and GSI too. However, Bangladesh is taking time before arriving at a decision.

Recently, there has also been a debate surrounding the Teesta project.

Following a proposal from Bangladesh, China showed interest in funding a part of the $1 billion project in 2021. But the project saw no progress.

India, meanwhile, showed interest, and Hasan Mahmud said Dhaka would consider India's proposal first as it is a common river between the two countries.

China also wants to improve its political relationship with the Awami League and a delegation will be visiting China for signing an MoU in the days to come.

The objective of improving political relationships is to better implement the Chinese agenda in Bangladesh, said Imtiaz Ahmed, executive director of the Centre for Alternatives.

"China will work with whichever political party is in power. This is the Chinese approach. If the party in power [in Bangladesh] is strong in safeguarding national interest, there is no problem at all," Imtiaz said.

There is a competition between China and India over Mongla Port in Bagerhat, and it may be an issue in the coming days, according to people with knowledge of the talks.

"Bangladesh remains on the back foot because of its governance challenges. Therefore, the balancing act has become difficult for Bangladesh. We, therefore, should improve our financial governance and political consensus on foreign affairs before we fall into further trouble," Tawfique of NSU said.

Minhajul presents old wine in new bottle at critical crossroad

SPORTS REPORTER

In an impromptu media briefing in front of the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) headquarter yesterday, BCB's chief coordinator of programmes Minhajul Abedin Nannu spoke some bitter truths about the current state of the country's cricket, which different people have regurgitated many times before without any significant change afterwards.

The former captain pointed out that having a pool of only 27-30 cricketers to represent Bangladesh across all three formats was a big issue.

"Actually, there is no way to deny that [having a limited pool of cricketers for the national team]. Our cricket is basically Dhaka-centric. We haven't been able to decentralise cricket," Minhajul told the reporters in Mirpur yesterday.

"We are confined to a pool of 27 to 30 players in all three formats. We can only select players from this group. If we can't prepare at least 45 players, we can't create a sense of competition among the players," he added.

He was also upfront about the country not having an established first-class structure and how not having any other T20 tournament other than the BPL is holding back the Tigers in T20s.

"If you look at any other Test playing nation, they have an established first-class structure. Ours is still not established.

"We are far behind in T20 cricket. If you look at our domestic calendar, we play a smaller number of matches in the T20 format. In franchise tournaments like BPL, foreign players play in crucial positions and there is a limited opportunity for the local players," Minhajul said.

The points Minhajul raised all have merit and fixing these issues would certainly improve the country's cricket.

But the million-dollar question remain – who will bell the cat?

It has been 12 years since Nazmul Hassan Papon and Co took over the reins of the richest sports body of the country.

More than once, these matters have come into light and board officials had vowed to work on fixing these issues for the sake of Bangladesh cricket.

However, nothing significant ever gets done afterwards, as the country's cricket continues to stagnate.

> We are confined to a pool of 27 to 30 players in all three formats. We can only select players from this group. If we can't prepare at least 45 players, we can't create a sense of competition among the players.
> BCB's chief coordinator of programmes
> Minhajul Abedin Nannu

The officials wake up from their slumber and start talking about these problems every time after an underwhelming showing in an ICC event, much like the Tiger's performance in the ninth ICC T20 World Cup recently.

In that tournament, Bangladesh won three matches and qualified for the Super Eight and the board was seemingly satisfied with it, even though the team showed a severe lack of intent when a golden opportunity to qualify for the semifinals presented itself.

The board had talked about decentralising cricket many times and made some ad-hoc committees for it. But since forming the committees, the board is yet to take any significant step to develop cricket at the regional level.

As the game remains Dhaka-centric, the selectors are left with a very limited pool of players to form squads. As a result, when a player fails to perform, an underperforming cricketer gets picked in his place, earning a callback without having done anything of note.

Minhajul spoke about a possible way to fix the shortage of players, "We are now thinking of increasing the number of domestic matches so that we can get some players for the T20 format. We also need to identify some players whom we can nurture, prepare for the game."

However, the question remains that if a board is still just talking about possible solutions and not implementing them after being in charge for 12 years, will anything ever get done?

Kings rope in Romanian Tita

SPORTS REPORTER

Five-time Bangladesh Premier League champions Bashundhara Kings have roped in Romanian coach Valeriu Tita for the upcoming season, hoping to produce good results on both the domestic and international stages.

The 58-year-old coach brings vast coaching experience, having worked with the Syrian national football team and various clubs in notably Saudi Arabia, Lebanon, Iraq. Tita, who last worked with Al-Ain FC of Saudi Arabia in 2023, had guided Al Ittihad SC Aleppo to win the AFC Asian Cup in 2010.

Kings' decision to appoint Tita yesterday came just five days after parting ways with Spanish coach Oscar Bruzon.

"We roped in Tita for his vast knowledge of Asia and AFC competitions ," Kings marketing and media manager Ahmed Shaeek told The Daily Star on Tuesday, adding that Tita's experience of managing national players also worked in his favour.

Shaeek further informed that Tunisian trainer Khalil Chakroun and set piece coach Dorel Stoica from Romania will form the coaching staff next season, which is expected to get underway in mid-September with the Independence Cup.

Stumbling England and Netherlands get shot at redemption

REUTERS, Dortmund

The route to the last four of Euro 2024 has been a rocky one for the Netherlands and England, and a few flashes of their best quality in their semifinal showdown might be enough for either side to make the final.

England's shootout win over Switzerland brought momentary euphoria, but it was more relief than redemption and Wednesday's date with the Dutch in Dortmund may require a transformation in attack for them to reach a third major tournament final, against France or Spain.

England have limped into the last four with tepid performances against opponents they should on paper have beaten easily, while the Netherlands have yo-yoed through and were 20 minutes from elimination before their quarterfinal fightback against Turkey.

The Dutch dazzled in their last-eight rout of Romania but have had to scramble too, having fallen behind in three of their four scoring games. Their three wins were all in regulation time, however, compared to one for England, and the Dutch have scored nearly double their number of goals at the tournament.

The Netherlands have the edge in attack, their nine goals at Euro 2024 coming from 20 attempts on target against 15 by an England side spearheaded by the usually lethal but currently subdued Harry Kane, Phil Foden and Jude Bellingham.

England improved against the Swiss but their five expertly struck penalties rescued an attack that again looked frustrated, with Bukayo Saka's 80th-minute equaliser their first shot on target.

Netherlands do not have that problem and will bank on the tournament's joint top scorer Cody Gakpo to and trouble an England defence that has been solid in contract with their jaded attack.

Southgate is again expected to stick to a similar lineup having been impervious to calls to shake things up or make substitutions earlier during the tournament.

The Dutch have blown hot and cold and will need to be stronger at the back to stand any chance of reaching their first final since their 1988 Euros triumph, their only major tournament success.

- This will be the fourth meeting between England and Netherlands at a major tournament. The Oranje and the Three Lions share one win each (in Euro 1988 and 1996 respectively), with the other contest (in the 1990 World Cup) ending in a draw.
- England won only one of their last nine matches against the Netherlands in all competitions (4L 4D), with the solitary win coming in a friendly match in 2018 in Amsterdam.
- This is England's fourth appearance in the semifinal of the Euros. The Three Lions were eliminated in the first two by Yugoslavia (in 1968) and Germany (in 1996) but went on to qualify for the final after beating Denmark in 2020.
- For the Netherlands, it will be a sixth Euro semifinal. They were eliminated from four of their five semis and the solitary win came in 1988 when they went on to lift the trophy.
- England have gone to extra-time in both of their knockout fixtures in this edition.
- Netherlands have won two matches in the ongoing edition after conceding the first goal - beating Poland 2-1 in the group stage and Turkey by the same score in the quarterfinal. Only Czech Republic, at Euro 2004, have ever won three games having conceded first a single edition of the tournament.
- England, under Gareth Southgate, have reached the semifinal of a major tournament on three occasions – in the 2018 World Cup, in Euro 2020 and the ongoing edition. They can become the fourth side to qualify for consecutive finals after USSR, Germany, and Spain.

Gambhir named India head coach

AFP, New Delhi

India's cricket board named Gautam Gambhir as head coach on Tuesday, with the former opener taking over from Rahul Dravid, tasked with building on their recent World Cup triumph.

"It is with immense pleasure that I welcome Mr Gautam Gambhir as the new Head Coach of the Indian Cricket Team," Jay Shah, secretary of the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) said in a statement.

The 42-year-old Gambhir takes over from batting great Dravid, who finished his stint with the T20 World Cup title in Barbados last month.

Gambhir scored over 10,000 international runs during his 13-year-long international career for India since his ODI debut in 2003.

"Modern-day cricket has evolved rapidly, and Gautam has witnessed this changing landscape up close," Shah added.

Gambhir, a talented left-handed batsman who played a key part in India's ODI World Cup win in 2011, recently coached Kolkata Knight Riders to an IPL crown.

"Having endured the grind and excelled in various roles throughout his career, I am confident that Gautam is the ideal person to steer Indian Cricket forward," Shah added.

"His clear vision for Team India, coupled with his vast experience, positions him perfectly to take on this exciting and most sought-after coaching role."

The usually serious Gambhir later took to commentary and then dabbled in politics, becoming a lawmaker for Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Hindu-nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP).

He quit politics in March to join IPL's Kolkata, a team he led to two titles in 2012 and 2014.

Gambhir now takes over a team with heightened expectations after their T20 triumph, their fourth World Cup title and first major crown since the 2013 Champions Trophy.

Anderson's farewell dreams face Windies challenge

AGENCIES

It doesn't matter if James Anderson takes a bunch of West Indies wickets for England in the first Test at Lord's from Wednesday.

The series opener will be Anderson's 188th and last Test and he will transition into England's fast-bowling mentor.

He was pensioned off by England managing director Rob Key, coach Brendon McCullum and captain Ben Stokes. They met him at a Manchester hotel in April to say he wasn't in their plans for the 2025-26 Ashes in Australia.

This was a month after Anderson returned from India, where he took 10 wickets at an average of 33.50. That series was lost 4-1 but on the last morning of the last Test in Dharamsala, Anderson became the first seamer in history to take 700 wickets.

He spoke then of being in the best shape, liking where his game was at, and being really excited for this summer, when he will turn 42 at the end of this month.

This week, he said he was surprised at how calmly he took the news from Key, McCullum and Stokes. He understood their decision, adding, "I've sort of made peace with that."

Anderson warmed up for his last Test by showing his class last week in his first English County appearance for Lancashire. He took 7-35, the best figures in the championship.

His 21-year test career comes full circle at Lord's, where he made his Test debut in 2003 against Zimbabwe. Lord's witnessed Anderson's career-best figures of 7-42 against the West Indies in 2017.

As one era ends, another could start. Surrey seamer Gus Atkinson and wicketkeeper Jamie Smith have been handed Test debuts. Both played white-ball cricket for England last year; Atkinson went to the ODI World Cup.

Chris Woakes returns for his first Test since he was the player of the series in last year's Ashes. Stokes was back as an allrounder, allowing for offspinner Shoaib Bashir to make his home Test debut after taking 17 wickets in India.

The West Indies play their first Test since the extraordinary eight-run victory over Australia in Brisbane in January, after a 10-wicket thrashing in Adelaide.

Allrounder and former captain Jason Holder was recalled to the squad along with fast bowler Jayden Seales. St. Kitts and Nevis opening batter Mikyle Louis and fast bowler Jeremiah Louis are the uncapped players in the 15-man squad. Louis replaced an injured Kemar Roach.

In Roach's absence, Alzarri Joseph will lead the pace attack with Jayden Seales and Shamar Joseph, whose 7-68 scuttled the Australians in Brisbane in the second innings. That earned Shamar Joseph in his second Test the player of the match and short series.

Shamar Joseph called England retiree Anderson "perfect" as a Test player to the Jamaica Gleaner newspaper but "I want to rain on his parade."

Anderson said he was trying hard not to think of his pending forced retirement.

"The big thing for me this week is wanting to play well, bowl well and get a win," he said. "I'm sure the emotions during the week will change, but right now that's what I'm trying to focus on to stop myself crying."

Colombia defender Yerry Mina and forward Miguel Borja chest-bump each other during a training drill yesterday ahead of their Copa America semifinal against Uruguay. The Colombians would want to take a step towards adding to their maiden continental triumph with a win against the 15-time champions.

A Bangladeshi runs transboundary kidney racket

Say Delhi police after arresting 7 including an Indian doctor

STAR REPORT

The "mastermind" behind the kidney transplant racket recently busted in Delhi is a Bangladeshi national and both donors and receivers in the case were also from Bangladesh, according to Deputy Commissioner of Delhi Police's Crime Branch Amit Goel.

Seven persons, including an Indian doctor, have so far been arrested in connection with the racket, he said in a statement yesterday.

All the people in the racket are suspected of having links with Bangladesh, reports our New Delhi correspondent.

Goel said, "We've arrested a person named Rasel who used to arrange the patients and donors and a female doctor working with the gang has also been arrested."

"Her role in this case was that she was facilitating organ transplants even when she was aware that the donor and receiver were not blood relations [as required by Indian law], making her part of the conspiracy," the DCP said.

The arrested Indian doctor has been identified as Vijaya Kumari, 50, from Delhi-based Indraprastha Apollo Hospital.

Now suspended by Apollo, she was the lone doctor working with the gang and had performed around 15-16 transplants between 2021 and 2023 in Noida-based

Road crash claims 4 lives

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bogura

At least four people were killed and seven others injured in a head-on collision between a lorry and a bus in Bogura early yesterday.

The accident occurred in the Banani area under Shajahanpur upazila around 2:30am.

Three of the deceased were identified as Jamal Hossain, from Sirajganj, and Shamim Hossain, 40, and Md Hridoy, 30, from Barishal, said police.

The other victim, a woman, could not be identified immediately.

The injured are Shaon Hossain, 30, Rezaul Karim, 45, Babul Miya, 35, Md Alif, 35, Sujan Miya 35, Md Amit, 10, and Md Saikat, 18.

All the injured were bus passengers, said the fire service personnel who rescued them.

"The victims' bodies have been kept at the morgue of Shaheed Ziaur Rahman Medical College Hospital. The injured are undergoing treatment at the same hospital," said Lalon Hossen, assistant sub-inspector of the hospital's police outpost.

Shahidul Islam, senior station officer at Bogura Fire Service and Civil Defense Station, who participated in the rescue operation told the Daily Star, "We got information that a bus of Shah Fateh Ali Paribahan and a lorry collided in front of Banani Shah Sultan Filling Station around 2:30 am.

"We went to the spot and found two people, including the driver of 'War cannot solve problems'

Modi tells Putin during Moscow visit

AFP, Moscow

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi yesterday told President Vladimir Putin that "war cannot solve problems" and urged peace on a trip to Moscow over two years into the Ukraine offensive.

On his first visit since Russia launched its campaign in Ukraine in February 2022, Modi said he and Putin had chatted on a range of issues, adding: "I was happy that on Ukraine, we could both express our views openly and in detail."

"When innocent children are murdered, one sees them die, the heart pains and that pain is unbearable," Modi told Putin in comments in Hindi.

"I know that war cannot solve problems, solutions and peace talks can't succeed among bombs, guns, and bullets," the Indian leader added. "And we need to find a way to peace through dialogue."

Putin thanked Modi for "the attention you pay to the most urgent problems" and said "you are trying to find some ways to solve the Ukrainian crisis, too, of course primarily by peaceful means".

Modi landed in Moscow on Monday hours after Russia launched a massive barrage across Ukraine that killed at least 38 people and heavily damaged a children's hospital in Kyiv, sparking condemnation from governments in Europe and North America.

On Monday evening Modi was pictured hugging Putin at the Russian president's country residence, where the leaders spent several hours together, according to the Kremlin.

Such warm contact drew condemnation from Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky.

He wrote on social media: "It is a huge disappointment and a devastating blow to peace efforts to see the leader of the world's largest democracy hug the world's most bloody criminal in Moscow on such a day."

OXYGEN MASK ISSUE

US regulator orders Boeing inspections

AFP, Washington

US aviation regulators said Monday that thousands of Boeing 737 airplanes would need to be inspected, amid concerns that passenger oxygen masks could fail in emergencies.

The airworthiness directive by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) comes into effect immediately and affects more than 2,600 US-registered airplanes.

The aim is to ensure that passenger service unit oxygen generators are in the right position on certain Boeing airplanes.

Operators are to check the oxygen generators and "perform corrective actions, if necessary, within 120 to 150 days," the FAA said in a statement.

It added that the directive was prompted by multiple reports of these generators shifting out of position, and called for a general visual inspection to be conducted.

In response to queries, Boeing said that a new adhesive introduced in August 2019 was found to sometimes allow oxygen generator units to shift from their positions.

Palestinians flee heavy Israeli assault

Hamas warns escalation threatens ceasefire talks; 50 more Palestinians killed

AGENCIES

Gaza City residents fled under Israeli fire as tanks thrust deeper into the heart of the city yesterday, the second day of a stepped-up military offensive that Hamas said could jeopardise ceasefire talks.

Qatari and Egyptian mediators, backed by the United States, have accelerated their efforts this week to seal a ceasefire deal aimed at ending the Gaza offensive and releasing Israeli hostages in the enclave in return for Palestinian prisoners jailed in Israel.

Yesterday, Israeli tanks deepened their incursion into some Gaza City districts including Shejaia, Sabra and Tel Al-Hawa, where residents reported the previous day some of the most fierce fighting since the start of the offensive.

Footage circulated on social media yesterday showed families packed onto donkey carts and in the backs of trucks piled with mattresses and other belongings racing through the city's streets to flee areas under Israeli evacuation orders.

"Gaza City is being wiped out, this is what is happening. Israel is forcing us to leave homes under fire," Um Tamer, a mother of seven, told Reuters via a chat app.

She said it was the seventh time her family had fled their house in Gaza City, in the north of the enclave and one of Israel's first targets at the start of the offensive in October. "We can't take it anymore, enough of death and humiliation. End the offensive now," she said.

The Palestinian Red Crescent said all of its medical clinics were out of service in Gaza City due to the evacuation orders.

At least 38,243 Palestinians have been killed in Israel's military offensive in the enclave since October 7, and 87,903 have been wounded, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. A total of 50 Palestinians were killed in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

The assault has unfolded as senior US officials were in the region pushing for a ceasefire after Hamas made concessions last week. But the renewed campaign "could bring the negotiation process back to square one," Hamas quoted leader Ismail Haniyeh as saying later on Monday.

Second semi showdown promises a classic

In the quest to establish continental supremacy, two former champions with rich heritage in the sport, Uruguay and Colombia, are set for a face-off in the second semifinal of the Copa America in North Carolina tomorrow (6 am, Bangladesh time) in what could likely be the match of the tournament's 48th instalment.

Both teams have been undefeated so far, with enviable defensive records and goals to back up their feats. Colombia, however, arrive into the clash with a superior goal ratio, having annihilated Panama 5-0 in the Round of 16. On the other hand, the 2011 champions and joint-highest 15-time winners alongside Argentina, edged past powerhouse Brazil in tiebreakers in Las Vegas.

34,000-year-old termite mounds found in S Africa

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Scientists in South Africa have been stunned to discover that termite mounds that are still inhabited in an arid region of the country are more than 30,000 years old, meaning they are the oldest known active termite hills.

Some of the mounds near the Buffels River in Namaqualand were estimated by radiocarbon dating to be 34,000 years old, according to the researchers from Stellenbosch University.

"We knew they were old, but not that old," said Michele Francis, senior lecturer in the university's department of soil science who led the study. Her paper was published in May.

Francis said the mounds existed while saber-toothed cats and woolly mammoths roamed other parts of the Earth and large swathes of Europe and Asia were covered in ice. They predate some of the earliest cave paintings in Europe.

Hasina, Xi pledge to boost strategic ties

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

- Bangladesh, China sign 22 instruments, make 7 announcements
- China assures of grants, soft loans and commercial loans
- Relations elevated to "comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership"
- China will provide highest cooperation in solving Rohingya crisis

China has promised to provide economic support to Bangladesh in the form of grants and three types of loans including interest-free ones.

The pledge came yesterday as Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina wrapped up her China visit, holding talks with Chinese President Xi Jinping.

China also offered Bangladesh one billion Yuan (about $140 million) as economic assistance, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud said at a press briefing in Beijing prior to Hasina's departure for Dhaka last night.

Beijing said it attaches utmost importance to its relationship with Dhaka and assured Bangladesh of continued support for its journey of development.

At the meeting with Hasina, Xi said China wants to invest more in Bangladesh and work with it on the international stage.

"China and Bangladesh will work together to establish global peace and prosperity," Hasan Mahmud said.

Xi brought up the Rohingya issue, the foreign minister said.

"I know that you have sheltered millions of Rohingyas who were displaced from Myanmar. This is a burning issue for you. We will do our best to help you resolve it," Hasan Mahmud quoted Xi.

China will play an important role towards solving the Rohingya crisis by holding talks with the Myanmar government, and even with the Arakan army if necessary, he mentioned.

Technical committees from both the countries will sit together to decide how

QUOTAS IN GOVT JOBS

Protesters won't back down despite SC status quo

STAR REPORT

Amid the apex court order for a status quo on the issue of quotas in government jobs, students yesterday vowed to continue their protests against the quota system.

Around 12 noon, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court ordered the status quo for four weeks.

This means the recent High Court verdict that reinstated the quota system in government jobs will not be in force for a month, and the 2018 government circular abolishing the quotas will stand for the said period.

The protesting students, however, announced they will press on with their demonstrations until the government forms a commission to reform the quota system and the parliament passes a law to this effect.

Sargis Alam, an organiser of the anti-quota campaign, said, "We'll relent only if we get word from the highest executive position that the quota system will be reformed through a commission.

"We want the parliament to enact a law reforming the quotas," he told protesters at the Shahbagh intersection last evening.

Asif Mahmud, another organiser, announced that today's blockade will begin at 3:30pm.

"Students from universities and colleges across the country will block major intersections in Dhaka along with highways and railways adjacent to their areas."

After a day's break, the protesters yesterday resumed the "Bangla Blockade" around 10:30am, occupying key intersections, major highways and rail lines in Dhaka and other parts of the country.

Road and rail communications were snapped, leaving commuters in utter distress. The traffic in Dhaka stood still for long hours, while around 30 trains from the capital ran behind schedule.

'ENOUGH IS ENOUGH'

A five-member bench of the Appellate Division, headed by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan, passed the status quo order following two separate petitions, filed by the government and two Dhaka University students, challenging the HC verdict.

The bench also includes Justice Md Ashfaqul Islam, Justice Md Abu Zafor Siddique, Justice Md Shahinur Islam and

Some more current and former officials of the Public Service Commission are involved in leaking questions for government recruitment tests, police and intelligence officials said.

The Daily Star has details about the involvement of a top PSC official and a mid-ranking official in leaking questions, but it is withholding their names as it could not independently verify the information.

Sources said that the top official was served with a show cause notice at a government office over a corruption allegation. He was later transferred to the PSC.

At least two officials secured Bangladesh Civil Service jobs in collusion with the mid-ranking PSC official. One of them is the son-in-law of the mid-ranking PSC official. He had served as a sub-inspector of police before joining the force as a BCS cadre, sources said.

"It's not possible for one or two people to leak exam questions. A group of people worked like a syndicate. We are hopeful of getting the details during the investigation," a top PSC official told The Daily Star requesting anonymity.

The group, involving PSC officials and employees, leaked at least 30 question papers of government recruitment tests, including BCS exams, over the last 12 years. This came to light after the Criminal Investigation Department (CID) of police picked up 17 people, including five PSC officials and employees, from the capital on Sunday and Monday.

The arrests were made after CID got information that the questions for a railway recruitment exam held on July 5 were leaked. A case was filed with Paltan Police Station on Monday night accusing

Israeli strikes hit UN agency building in Gaza

29 killed at camp for displaced Palestinians in Khan Younis

AGENCIES

Israeli forces launched more deadly strikes across Gaza yesterday, according to medical sources and the military, which said it targeted Hamas members operating from inside a UN agency building.

The Israeli army also said it was reviewing an attack on Tuesday night in which hospital sources said at least 29 people were killed in a nearby school in the southern Khan Yunis area -- the fourth attack on a school building in four days.

Early yesterday, four people were killed and one critically wounded in the bombing of a house in the central town of Nuseirat, a hospital source said.

And two people were killed and six injured in another strike on a home in Bani Suhaila, near Khan Yunis, according to another hospital source.

Israel has stepped up air and ground attacks in Gaza City and southern Gaza since issuing evacuation orders for tens of thousands of people in the Palestinian territory.

The army yesterday dropped leaflets on Gaza City urging all residents to leave for safe zones.

The thousands of leaflets, addressed to "everyone in Gaza City", set out routes out of the city to the south and

Militant leader who fled N'ganj raid arrested

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti Terrorism Unit (ATU) of police has arrested a leader of banned militant outfit Ansar al Islam who fled before the officials carried out a raid at a militant hideout in Narayanganj's Rupganj upazila on July 2.

A team of ATU arrested Javed alias Abir alias Enamul from Tongi area around 10:30pm on Tuesday, Mahfuzul Alam Rasel, superintendent (media) of ATU, told The Daily Star yesterday.

He fled from the Narayanganj den just before ATU officials carried out the drive, he said.

Parts of South Sudan 'on brink of famine': charity

AFP, Nairobi

Parts of South Sudan are on the "brink of famine" as the nation braces for a "horror scenario" ahead of the worst floods in decades, a British charity warned yesterday. Since it gained independence in 2011, the world's newest nation has remained plagued by instability and violence, despite rich oil reserves.

South Sudan is expected to "suffer its worst floods in 60 years that will drive parts of the country to the brink of famine," Save the Children said.

Hasina, Xi pledge to boost strategic ties

the four types of financial assistance will be given to Bangladesh. A technical committee from China will soon visit Bangladesh, BSS quoted Hasan Mahmud as saying.

Hasina left for China on July 8 following a state visit to India just two weeks before. She returned home from Beijing early today.

Experts say the back-to-back visits are a way of balancing the relationship with the Asian powers that are vying for influence in the Indian Ocean region.

Hasina last visited China in 2019.

Back in 2016, Xi visited Dhaka when Bangladesh joined the Chinese Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) and elevated the relationship to "strategic partnership of cooperation".

Yesterday, the two leaders elevated the relationship to "comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership".

Xi said, "We, the two countries, are going to celebrate 50 years of diplomatic relations next year. Marking the celebration, we want to take the existing strategic relations to the second step."

Hasina invited the Chinese president, the prime minister and others to visit Bangladesh next year to celebrate the 50 years of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

"You stood firm against foreign interference. This not only demonstrates your conviction to stand upright against the pressure, but also the courage of the Bangladeshi people as an independent people," Xi told Hasina according to a pool report made available to this newspaper.

He said China consistently opposes interference in other countries' internal affairs under any pretext, and firmly supports Bangladesh in its pursuit for a development path that suits it.

Xi expressed his readiness to work with Hasina to improve bilateral relations based on a strategic and long-term perspectives, deepen political trust, and carry forward the traditional friendship.

He called for joining hands to boost Belt and Road cooperation, collaboration in various fields, and establish the "comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership" between the two countries.

Xi also expressed his desire to contribute to the development of South Asia and the Global South, according to the pool report.

Hasina reassured Xi about Taiwan -- Beijing's most sensitive issue -- saying "Bangladesh firmly adheres to the one-China principle, supports China's position on the Taiwan issue, and resolutely opposes external forces interfering in China's internal affairs", reported South China Morning Post.

Hasina said she faced many problems in holding elections and that there were some quarters who always try to disrupt the polls.

"...I always enjoy the people's support and with the people's support, we won the election. This is my fourth consecutive term. So, I feel that I have big responsibility for my people," she said thanking Xi for always supporting her.

"And after the elections, your message gives us more enthusiasm," she said.

Hasina thanked the Chinese president for helping Bangladesh build some iconic structures, including the Padma Bridge and Bangabandhu Tunnel.

Xi assured Bangladesh of providing assistance in the development of its southern part as Hasina sought support towards this end.

She raised the issue of trade imbalance between the two countries and called upon China to mitigate the gap. In 2022-23, the bilateral trade was $24 billion, but Bangladesh exported to China goods worth less than $700 million.

In response, Xi said China will import more goods, including mangoes, from Bangladesh.

In response to Hasina's request for Chinese assistance in developing Bangladesh's agriculture sector, Xi assured her of providing technical support and necessary training.

Xi stressed the need for more cultural exchanges and people-to-people contact.

Noting the deepening relations between the Awami League and the Chinese Communist Party, he said, "Good governance needs good party."

Earlier in the day, Hasina had a delegation-level meeting with Chinese Premier Li Qiang.

She requested her Chinese counterpart to import leather products, jute products, pharmaceutical goods, and ceramic products from Bangladesh.

Hasina invited more Chinese investments in 100 special economic zones and Bangabandhu Industrial Park, mentioning that Bangladesh has allotted one export processing zone for Chinese investors.

She stressed the need for Bangladesh's inclusion in BRICS in any form. In response, Li Qiang assured her of Chinese support.

Hasina also sought Chinese cooperation so that Bangladesh could enjoy the LDC facilities at least for three more years after it graduates to a middle-income country in 2026. The Chinese prime minister gave a positive response.

Both the leaders put emphasis on celebrating the Golden Jubilee of their diplomatic relationship in a befitting manner.

Bangladesh and China also signed 22 instruments and made seven announcements.

The instruments involve the banking sector, trade and investment, digital economy, infrastructure, disaster management, export of agricultural products from Bangladesh, and people-to-people connectivity.

On Tuesday, Hasina attended a trade and investment summit participated by businesses from both countries.

Bangladeshi and Chinese companies signed 16 MoUs to boost collaboration in textiles, electric vehicles, solar power, financial technology, and other technology.

Four of these MoUs will bring in nearly $500 million in investments.

Hasina also met Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB) President Jin Liqun and requested him to cut the interest rates on its loans for Bangladesh and finance infrastructure, river dredging, and climate-resilient houses.

According to former ambassador to China Munshi Faiz Ahmad, elevating the relationship to "comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership" means the two countries will now cooperate in all sectors and further deepen their bilateral relationship.

People often think there are military components when the word "strategic" is used, which is not correct.

Bangladesh was seeking a loan of $5 billion in Yuan amid foreign currency shortage but the terms and conditions were not agreed upon.

Faiz said China has pledged 1 billion Yuan and more will follow as evident in Xi's words.

31 named people, including a former assistant director of PSC, and 50 to 60 others unnamed.

The five arrested officials and employees were suspended by the PSC on Tuesday.

"At least 50 people were involved in the question leak of the recruitment test of the railway. Among them are several current and former PSC officials," a high official of the CID told The Daily Star yesterday requesting anonymity.

According to investigators, many people have passed PSC exams after having leaked questions, and they are now working as BCS cadre civil servants.

Those who passed the PSC exams after paying for leaked questions are now in fear of actions against them, sources said.

CID officials said the syndicate leaked questions to at least 10 candidates of the 33rd BCS exam and three of them are currently serving in different cadres of the civil service. Besides, the names of several other cadre officials, including those selected in the 28th and 35th BCS exams, came up during the investigation.

Of the 17 arrestees, six made confessional statements before a Dhaka court on Tuesday.

In his statement, PSC dispatch rider Khalilur Rahman said that he leaked questions to 10 candidates of the 33rd BCS examination. Six of them passed the written test, but three could not pass the viva voce exam, said court sources.

Khalilur also said that he used to introduce the jobseekers to a former top PSC official.

If he was given the go-ahead by that official, the final decision regarding how much the jobseeker would have to pay for getting selected for government jobs.

Khalilur also played a role in the recruitments of some assistant upazila education officers and railway employees, said investigators.

During the 33rd BCS exam in 2012, a case was filed against Khalilur with Shahbagh Police Station over question leak. A departmental case was also filed against him.

At that time, the Rab arrested him. He got out on bail. He was also suspended from the job.

In March 2022, the charges brought against him were withdrawn due to lack of evidence. Since then, Khalilur has been working as a dispatch rider of the PSC.

Investigators said Khalilur was able to get involved in leaking questions due to the backing from the PSC top official.

Touhidul Islam, special superintendent of the CID's cyber investigation and operations, told The Daily Star yesterday, "Legal action will be taken against those found involved in leaking questions."

Meanwhile, the PSC yesterday wrote to the Anti-Corruption Commission asking it to investigate the five arrested PSC officials and employees in connection with amassing illegal wealth.

The five are deputy directors Abu Zafar and Jahangir Alam, assistant director Alamgir Kabir, dispatch rider Khalilur, and office assistant Sajedul Islam.

The PSC also asked the ACC to inform it about their wealth.

Meanwhile, sacked PSC driver Syed Abed Ali and several other accused told investigators during interrogation that jobseekers were brought to the "reading booth" two nights before the July 5 recruitment test.

The jobseekers were kept in a rented house in Savar and a warehouse in the capital's Paltan so that they could memorise the answers to the leaked questions.

Abed rented the house for Tk 40,000 a month in Radio Colony of Savar. He took the leaked questions and answers from Sajedul.

Around 50 jobseekers memorised the answers in the house. Abed took Tk 7 to 8 lakh from each of them, said CID sources.

Before another recruitment test held several months ago, Abed rented another house in the capital's Mirpur and took 44 jobseekers there. The syndicate collected Tk 4 lakh from each of the candidates.

According to investigation sources, Sajedul in his confessional statement before a court said that he got the question papers for the railway recruitment test from a chest of a PSC member. He said he sold the question paper to Abed and Khalilur for Tk 75 lakh.

Justice Kashefa Hussain.

The apex court asked the petitioners to file separate leave-to-appeal petitions and fixed August 7 for a hearing on those.

The chief justice asked the agitators to go back to class and focus on studies.

He expressed hope that all vice-chancellors and heads of the educational institutions will take their students back.

"They [protesting students] took to the streets and raised slogans ... What they've done can't be appreciated but I think they've done it out of a misunderstanding. They're our children. On the first day, I said a judgement can't be made based on slogans," he said while passing the order.

"Considering what has happened so far, enough is enough. ... We'll evaluate the High Court judgment properly if it's placed before us.

"Only the Appellate Division has the right to examine whether the High Court verdict is correct or not. Why isn't anyone explaining this to the children? University teachers, who are in prominent positions, [you] tell them [the students] – 'this is not the way, you must go to the court. If you go to court, the court will see to it ... But we can't do anything until the [HC] verdict is placed before us."

He thanked the DU students' lawyer Shah Monjurul Hoque for moving a petition before the Appellate Division against the HC verdict.

Attorney General AM Amin Uddin, after the order was passed, told reporters that the HC verdict, which declared illegal the cancellation of quotas in first and second-class government jobs, will not remain effective.

Writ petitioners' lawyer Md Munsurul Hoque Chowdhury told The Daily Star that the government now cannot implement a quota system as per the SC order.

Following a writ petition challenging the legality of quota cancellation, the HC on June 5 declared illegal the 2018 government circular that scrapped the 30 percent quota for the freedom fighters' children and grandchildren in government jobs.

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader also requested protesters to go back to their respective institutions following the status quo and to not cause public sufferings.

BLOCKADE CONTINUED

Several hundred Dhaka University students and jobseekers blocked the Shahbagh intersection around 11:50am. They came to the intersection in a procession from in front of the DU central library and barricaded all nearby roads.

Another group of DU students blocked the Chankharpul intersection around the same time.

Around 11:35, several hundred students of Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University blocked the Agargaon intersection and were seen taking position near metro rail station there.

All vehicular movement from Farmgate to Mirpur and Agargaon to Mohakhali remained halted for hours.

The capital's Science Lab area remained blocked for at least seven hours by students of Dhaka College and nearby institutions. They started their march from the college campus and took position at the intersection around 10:30am.

They were seen barring buses, private cars and rickshaws from moving on the road and allowed only ambulances to pass through.

Most of the blockades were lifted around 7:00-7:30pm.

Outside the capital, the Dhaka-Aricha Highway was blocked for nearly six hours by a group of Jahangirnagar University students, while Comilla University students blocked the Dhaka-Chattogram Highway for four hours in Cumilla's Kotbari area.

A group of Patuakhali Science and Technology University students blocked the Dhaka-Kuakata Highway at the Payra Bridge point for three hours.

RAIL LINES

Schedules of trains to different destinations from Dhaka were hampered as rail operations remained suspended for five hours due to a blockade at the Karwan Bazar level crossing.

Ferdaous Ahmed Biswas, officer-in-charge of Dhaka Railway Police Station, said rail services were snapped after some students blocked the crossing at 12:00pm. They left around 5:05pm.

The line that goes through Karwan Bazar connects Dhaka with the east, west and even southern parts of the country.

In Chattogram, CU students kept the Dhaka-Chattogram rail line in the Dewanhat area blocked from 11:30am, resulting in at least five trains being stuck at different stations for almost eight hours, the Railways Control Office confirmed.

The Parjatak Express and Cox's Bazar Express, which left for Dhaka from Cox's Bazar, were stranded at the Sholoshohor Station, while the Shonar Bangla Express, Mohanagar Probhati Express and a container-loaded freight train could not commence their journey from the Chattogram Station. CU's shuttle train service was also closed.

The blockades were lifted around 7:00pm.

The protesters later blocked a road in the Tigerpass area, the main thoroughfare of the port city, around 1:00pm.

Meanwhile, students of Dhaka University of Engineering and Technology (Duet) staged a sit-in and blocked the Dhaka-Mymensingh rail tracks in Gazipur's Joydebpur.

The protest began in front of the Duet Central Shaheed Minar and later moved to the Joydebpur Junction Railway Station.

PRO-QUOTA

Meanwhile, leaders and activists of the Muktijoddha Sangsad Santan Command staged a brief sit-in around 9:30am in front of the National Museum in the capital's Shahbagh, demanding the reinstatement of the quota system.

SUFFERINGS ALL AROUND

People, especially patients and the elderly, bear the brunt of nationwide blockades

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

The ongoing student protest against the quota system in government jobs caused severe disruptions in Dhaka and other parts of the country, leaving people in severe misery.

Students have taken to the streets in at least eight districts, blocking roads and train routes.

DHAKA

With public transport at a standstill in many areas in the capital, people resorted to walking long distances. Commuters and office-goers faced challenges at key intersections, as buses could not ply through them.

Key intersections, such as Gulistan, Shahbagh, Banglamotor, Karwan Bazar, Farmgate, Science Lab, Agargaon, and Mohakhali, were blocked, which particularly affected the elderly and patients.

Jahanara Begum, who had just received treatment at a government hospital in Tejgaon, was returning with her mother when they got stuck at the Karwan Bazar rail gate area and had to walk to the intersection.

Bus driver Salam Hossain said he got stuck around 11:30am at Farmgate. "All the passengers got off. There's no way to turn the bus around. My day's earnings are lost."

At Kalshi intersection in Mirpur, Soniya Akhter waited over an hour for a bus but couldn't find any public transport. "Even when a bus came after a long time, there were so many passengers that I couldn't get on. I don't know how I'll get to the office," she added.

Nusrat Jahan, stuck at Panthapath intersection, said, "I had urgent work. But the jam has extended to Dhanmondi. People are suffering a lot. I've been sitting on the road since 11:00am, and it's now 2:00pm."

Students of Dhaka College blocked the Science Lab intersection, affecting patients and people on their way to various hospitals at Green Road and Dhanmondi.

Mehedi Hasan was caught in the blockade while taking his mother to Labaid Hospital in Dhanmondi from Old Dhaka. "I was taking my mother to the hospital for her chemotherapy," Mehedi told The Daily Star.

"No one let us through, even though I showed the students the medical papers," he said, adding, "I don't have any problem with the students' protest. However,

People, especially patients and the elderly, suffered immensely as students continued their nationwide "Bangla Blockade" yesterday, protesting quota system in government jobs. Since morning, they blocked major intersections, highways and expressways in the capital, forcing many to walk to their destinations. Protesters also blocked rail lines, mounting sufferings for many who had to wait hours for trains.

The High Court yesterday started hearing on a petition filed by Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus and six others of Grameen Telecom, challenging a Dhaka court's order that framed charges against them.

After concluding yesterday's hearing, the bench of Justice Md Nazrul Islam Talukder and Justice Kazi Ebadoth Hossain also fixed today for resuming the hearing.

During the hearing, petitioners' lawyer Abdullah-Al-Mamun told the court that there was no question of embezzlement in running Grameen Telecom, which has been established as a nonprofitable and charitable organisation under Section 28 of the Companies Act, 1994.

All the transactions of the organisation have been done properly under the

EVICTION IN DSCC

16 hurt as councillor's men, harijans clash

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 16 people were injured as supporters of the local ward councillor clashed with harijans in Dhaka's Bangshal area yesterday afternoon.

The people of Miranzilla Harijan Colony alleged that Md Awal Hossain, councillor of Dhaka South City Corporation's ward-33, and his supporters went there to evict them violating a court order.

As they were prevented from entering the colony, they threw brick chunks at the colony people, who then retaliated, triggering the clash, said locals.

Sima Datta, president of rights body Nari Mukti Kendra, who was present during the incident, said when the DSCC magistrate entered the colony, the councillor and his supporters tried to get it, but they faced obstruction.

The injured took first aid at Dhaka Medical College Hospital, said Bacchu Miah, an inspector of the hospital's police outpost.

On June 10, the DSCC tried to evict the harijans from the colony saying that many of them are living there illegally. But the DSCC retreated in the face of protest by the harijan people.

The harijans have been living in the colony for generations, a refuge built by their ancestors during the British era.

The DSCC wants to expand its existing kitchen market in the place.

Community leaders claimed that DSCC Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh assured them that only 20 families would be evicted. However, they later learnt from DSCC officials that over 87 families would be evicted.

DSCC Executive Magistrate Md Moniruzzaman told The Daily Star on the spot that they did not have any eviction drive yesterday and they did not inform anybody about it.

He along with contractors and engineers of newly constructed buildings in the colony went there to learn about the problem of utility services of the buildings and solve those.

245 iron bridges or death traps?

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

A tragic accident led to the death of nine people after an iron bridge collapsed and caused a microbus to fall into the canal in Haldia Bazar area of Barguna's Amtali upazila on June 22.

In the wake of the incident, the authorities of Local Government Engineering Department in Barguna made a list of 245 iron bridges in six upazilas of the district that are in a vulnerable condition and risky for vehicular movement.

The bridges have become dilapidated as those have not been renovated over the years after being constructed by LGED in Barguna under its Light Traffic Movement Project in FY 1997-98.

According to Barguna LGED, the project was operational till 2008, and no initiative was taken to maintain and repair the bridges as the project was not extended.

As such, these bridges have now become death traps.

Accidents happen frequently when pedestrians and vehicle use the bridges. Many of the bridges are unfit for vehicular movement and are only being used by locals to cross by foot, that too after reinforcing their structure with wood and bamboo.

"We have so far identified 245 risky iron bridges in the district -- 99 in Amtali upazila, 61 in Barguna Sadar, 28 in Taltali, 25 in Bamna, and 16 each in Betagi and Patharghata upazilas. However, the number may rise further," said Mehdi Hasan Khan, executive engineer of LGED in Barguna.

"We will further identify how many of these can be repaired and how many have to be replaced, and send the list to the ministry concerned with a budget for allocation to this end," he added.

Contacted, Golam Sarwar Tuku, lawmaker of Barguna-1 constituency, confirmed that the chief engineer of LGED had informed about the risky bridges in the district.

"Hopefully the bridges will be repaired or replaced within a short time," he added.

CONSTRUCTION OF KALURGHAT-CHAKTAI ROAD

Deadline keeps on extending

SIFAYET ULLAH, Chattogram

The project to construct Kalurghat-Chaktai road on the bank of Karnaphuli river in Chattogram began in July 2017 with a deadline to be completed by June 2020.

However, eight years on, the project is still incomplete, despite several extensions of deadline as well as increase in cost of the project.

In fact, with 26 percent of the construction work still remaining, the Chattogram Development Authority, which is implementing the project, has applied to the Planning Commission for yet another year's extension.

Rajib Das, director of the project and executive engineer of the CDA, confirmed the development when contacted by this correspondent.

"Due to a shortage of funds for land acquisition, we failed to complete the work on time," he claimed.

According to project documents, the project's deadline has been already extended three times, with the last deadline being June this year. The project's cost also went up from Tk 2,275.52 crore to Tk 2,310.24 crore.

Now, CDA wants to extend the deadline to June 2025 without increasing cost any further.

"This project does not require fresh allocation, but if the allocated funds are received on time, we will be able to complete the work quickly," said Rajib Das.

The project includes construction of the 8.5-kilometre road and embankment with 12 regulators on the mouths of canals, with an aim to reduce traffic congestions and mitigate waterlogging.

Visiting the project area recently, this correspondent saw while 10 of the 12 regulators have already been constructed, however, a major portion of the road work, from Chaktai to Kolpolok Residential Area, remains incomplete.

"Spectra Engineers Limited, the contractor firm, has been stopping work frequently over the past six months citing fund crunch," said Jamal Uddin, a worker of the project.

Rajib Das admitted that they were forced to stop work at times due to a shortage of funds .

Experts blamed CDA for its failure to complete the project on time.

"Lack of proper study ahead of taking up the project in turn extended its duration and increased the cost. The government should identify those responsible and take action against them," said Md Delwar Hossain Mazumdar, an urban planner and executive member of the Forum for Planned Chattogram.

Aynunnahar Siddique, a Supreme Court lawyer, said when she went to meet the magistrate at the colony around 12:30pm, just after his entrance to the colony, outsiders attacked the colony residents.

Now the police are saying they will ensure security of the colony residents and the magistrate has given an order in this regard, she said.

However, councillor Awal denied the allegation of his supporters' attacking the harijans.

He said the DSCC magistrate went there and asked the 66 allottees of the flats at the new buildings to move to their flats by yesterday, otherwise their allotments will be cancelled.

He said they got 51 of them and when they tried to move to their flats, colony people resisted and got locked into a clash with them.

In another development, the Supreme Court yesterday directed the DSCC to issue a fresh status quo on the eviction proceedings at Miranzilla Harijan Colony until further order.

The DSCC went to the SC after the High Court issued a one-month status quo on the eviction proceedings at the colony on June 13 after a writ petition was filed against the move.

how long will the people suffer?"

TRAIN SERVICES DISRUPTED

Train services were also severely affected, with blockades in Dhaka, Mymensingh, Khulna, and Chattogram, causing massive delays and inconvenience.

In Karwan Bazar and Mohakhali, students blocked rail lines, severing Dhaka's rail communication with the rest of the country for five hours. From 12:00pm to 5:05pm, no trains departed from Dhaka.

In Mymensingh, students from Bangladesh Agricultural University blocked the Dhaka-Mymensingh rail line for almost six hours, while in Chattogram, students of Chittagong University and other institutions blocked rail tracks from 11:00am to 5:30pm.

Rajib Kumar Barua, a Dhaka-bound Cox's Bazar Express passenger, was stuck at Sholoshahar Junction. "It's unbearable to wait for the train for hours inside a rail coach," he said.

Due to the blockade, air passengers also faced difficulties boarding their flights on time.

NATIONWIDE BLOCKADES

In Savar, students from Jahangirnagar University blocked the Dhaka-Aricha highway for over eight hours, leaving around 500 vehicles stuck and forcing thousands to walk.

In Rangpur, students from Begum Rokeya University blocked the Rangpur-Dhaka highway for almost three hours, while in Cumilla, Comilla University students blocked the Dhaka-Chattogram highway for over four hours.

Iqbal Hossain, a bus driver, said, "I left Chattogram with passengers. Now I am stuck in Kotbari. I heard that their movement will continue till evening. If that is the case, then I don't know what to do."

Students also staged blockades in Rajshahi and Barishal for several hours, causing massive suffering to commuters.

for indigenous communities in different countries across the world, even in neighbouring India, speakers told the event.

"The British colonial government framed the CHT Regulations, 1900 respecting the indigenous communities of the region. However, conspiracy is going on against the regulations, which is shameful for this government," said physician Ajay Chakma.

He demanded an end to the conspiracy and also urged the government to restore the quota for indigenous communities.

"If the CHT Regulations, 1900 is repealed, you will no longer be able to claim Bangladesh to be a diverse, multi-ethnic country. Also, the cultural heritage of CHT region will be lost," said Falguni Tripura, general secretary of the Bangladesh Indigenous Women's Network.

Mentioning that the spirit of the CHT Regulations, 1900 is behind the CHT Accord, the speakers urged the government to take necessary steps towards ensuring fair benefits to the country's indigenous communities.

settlement agreement, he argued. He said his clients have paid the money to their workers in accordance with law and they were involved in any offence.

He said the case has been filed against the petitioners to harass them.

The six other petitioners are Nurjahan Begum, Md Shahjahan, Nazneen Sultana, Hizzatul Islam, Nazmul Islam and Ashraful Hasan.

Senior Advocate Khurshid Alam Khan, and Attorney General AM Amin Uddin and Deputy Attorney General AKM Amin Uddin Manik represented the Anti-Corruption Commission and the state respectively during the proceedings.

Meanwhile, the United States has said it is closely monitoring the developments in the case against Prof Yunus.

"We continue to monitor closely developments in the case against him. We have expressed for some time our concern that these cases may represent a misuse of Bangladesh's labour laws to harass and intimidate Dr Yunus," said Mathew Miller, spokesperson for the US Department of State during a regular briefing on Tuesday.

"As a key economic partner to Bangladesh, we also worry that perceived misuse of labour and anti-corruption laws could raise questions about rule of law and dissuade future foreign direct investment," Miller said while replying to a question.

government movement to remove Awami League from power. "Awami League established one-party Baksal rule in 1975. They have now destroyed democracy in a different way," he said.

The BNP leader alleged that the ruling party has destroyed the electoral system and the country's economy, and politicised the administration and state institutions. "The country is now going towards destruction. As long as this Awami League government is in power, Bangladesh will go to the abyss faster," Fakhrul said.

He warned that the country's independence and sovereignty will be at stake and the economy, education and all other sectors will be completely ruined.

"What we need now is to build unity among all. To accelerate the street movement through that unity to defeat them [AL]," the BNP leader said.

BNP's Dhaka south and north city units arranged the programme.

Fakhrul also said a strong movement is imperative to have Khaleda Zia freed from jail without any condition for ensuring her advanced treatment abroad.

are my only earning source. I got a packet of food relief for my family but nothing for my cattle," he said.

Sirajganj is one of the biggest dairy hubs in the country, with 37,000 farmers engaged in it, rearing around 17 lakh animals, said Dr Md Omor Faruk, district livestock officer.

"The flood has affected at least 40,000 animals and inundated around 200 hectares of pasture land in different areas over the last couple of weeks," he said.

"To address the fodder crisis, we have taken preparation to provide dry feed to cattle farmers," he added.

While commercial dairy farms are hardly affected, the farm owners, however, claimed their cost of production will rise as they have to depend on dry feed for their cattle amid the flood.

"I have 50 cows, mostly milk producing ones. Those need to be fed grass every day to produce milk, but due to the flood I have been unable to manage grass over the last two weeks. I am now feeding the animals straw and rice bran, which is raising my cost while lowering my milk production," said Md Raju Ahmed, a dairy farmer of Ramkharua village under Shahzadpur upazila.

Many small-scale farmers are also opting to sell their animals at low prices amid the ongoing crisis.

Fodder crisis hits cattle farmers

AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPU, back from Sirajganj

Cattle farmers in Sirajganj are in dire straits due to an acute crisis of fodder for around 40,000 animals amid the ongoing flood in the district.

While people are finding it tough to find shelter in the flood-hit areas, the situation is worse for the animals.

"When flood water entered my house 10 days ago, I took my family members along with my two cows and three goats to a nearby mosque for shelter. Since then, we have been struggling to manage feed for my animals," said Mazeda Begum of Dogasi Kwakola area under Sirajganj Sadar upazila.

"With all pasture lands being inundated by floodwaters, I am compelled to feed them catkin and banana leaves," she added.

Md Sharif Hossain of Choto Koyra village echoed her.

"The floodwater washed away the straws I had kept at my house to feed my cattle. Now I am finding it difficult to feed my cattle, which

AL leader held in loan default case

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakali

Police yesterday arrested a local Awami League leader in a loan default case filed by Sonali Bank in Patuakhali.

Zakia Sultana Baby, general secretary of the district unit of Mahila Awami League, was held in the town's Fire Service area around noon.

Patuakhali Sadar Police Station Officer-in-Charge (Investigation) Md Asad said earlier a court issued an arrest warrant against Zakia who owes Tk 9 crore to the bank's Patuakhali branch, according to the case.

The branch Manager, Md Zillur Rahman, said in the name of Patuakhali Textile Mill jointly owned by Zakia and her now deceased husband Sirajul Islam Khan, the couple took a loan of Tk 2.23 crore in 1985 from the bank.

Although the bank approved 100 percent interest waiver, the couple did not repay the loan.

Now the recoverable amount of that money stands at Tk 88.89 crore, bank sources said.

The bank authorities declared Zakia and Sirajul as defaulter and filed a loan default case with a Patuakhali court in 2004.

Rain increases flood woes in the north

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

With the ongoing flood already making the lives of Kurigram residents miserable, more downpour further added to their woes.

"As floodwater inundated our house, five of us in the family left for the embankment on Tuesday with our belongings, two cattle, three goats and some hens to seek shelter there. Since then, we have been living under this polythene wrapped shanty. The rains make it very hard for us to live in this condition," said Amena Bewa, 68, of Rajarvita village on Brahmaputra's shoal in Kurigram's Chilmari upazila.

"The floodwater is not receding, so we cannot return to our house. We have to struggle to find pure water for drinking, sometimes treading the floodwater for miles to find a source. We have no food. There is no work in the area. No one has come to us with any assistance or relief yet. Who knows how long our miseries will continue," she added.

Amena's neighbour Kohinoor Bewa, 70, echoed her.

Amena and Kohinoor are not alone. Several hundred families had to take shelter on BWDB dam in Chilmari upazila and are going through a similar ordeal.

Amid the flood and rains, there is an acute lack of work for labourers, leaving many of them unemployed and struggling to remain afloat with their families.

"Our house is submerged under four feet of water. There is no work in the area, no food in our house, and no assistance came from government or private initiatives. We are in dire straits," said Ayub Ali, 60, a day-labourer from Putimari village of Raniganj union.

"I took a loan of Tk 3,000 from a local, but how long can we survive with such a meagre amount?" he added.

Golam Ashek, chairman of Ramna Union Parishad, informed that of the 4,000 flood-affected families in his union, only 600 got relief assistance of 10kg rice from the government.

Manjurul Islam, chairman of Raniganj union parishad, said only 300 of the 5,500 flood-hit families in his union received government relief.

Contacted, Minhazul Islam, UNO of Chilmari, said they are trying to tackle the flood situation with the government's relief allocation.

Vast stretches of croplands, along with houses and educational institutions remain submerged in the district, affecting at least 1,35,939 people in nine upazilas.

So far, 397 tonnes of rice, Tk 21,85,000 cash, and 21,330 packets of dry food have been distributed among flood victims in the district, according to officials.

Joydeb, 40, carries a variety of summer fruits and vegetables on this small boat along a canal. He paddles towards the market, hoping to sell all his produce and earn enough to support his family. The photo was taken in the Bhimruli area of Jhalakathi district recently.

Dhaleshwari erodes bridge approach road

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Tangail

The erosion by Dhaleshwari river caused the approach road of Charabari Bridge in Tangail Sadar upazila to collapse on one side, snapping the road link between five unions in the shoal areas and the upazila headquarters.

As such, thousands of people from the shoal areas are suffering with their commute.

According to locals, around 50 metres of the approach road collapsed within a short time due to erosion early on Tuesday, halting movement of all vehicles through the bridge.

The Local Government Engineering Department constructed the 170.64-metre-long bridge in 2006 connecting Tangail-Torabganj road.

The road is the only route for about one lakh people from five unions in shoal areas -- Katuli, Hugra, Kakua, and Mahmud Nagar unions in Sadar upazila and Bharra union in Nagarpur upazila -- to reach the district town, said Tofazzal Hossain Tofa, chairman of Tangail Sadar upazila parishad.

Many students of Mawlana Bhashani University of Science and Technology in Santosh area also use the route to reach their campus, he said, adding that agricultural products, raw materials of textile industry, and daily necessities are also transported using the route.

Contacted, Rafiqul Islam, executive engineer of LGED in Tangail, said the bridge and the connecting road became vulnerable as the river's course had changed due to illegal sand extraction and its flow through Charabari area became stronger over time.

Preparations are underway to address the issue, he added.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

SY HUQ
Bangladeshi origin producer making it big in Japan

AUSTIN FILM FESTIVAL

Sy Huq, despite his films earning critical acclaim and festival awards, encountered challenges while directing his debut film 'Things That Fall'. The project faced setbacks twice before coming to fruition.

RAKSHANDA RAHMAN MISHA

Sy Huq, a young filmmaker, has become the first Bangladeshi-American creative executive in Japan's anime industry. He secured a prestigious role at D'ART Shtajio, Japan's first Black-owned anime studio, and boasts a reputation as a four-time Oscar-qualified director and producer. Intrigued by his backstory and what inspired him to pursue filmmaking, I wanted to learn more about his journey.

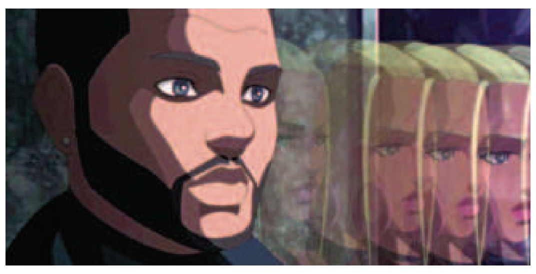
A traveler at heart and filmmaker by passion, he discovered his love for Japanese films at a young age. He frequented public libraries to watch VHS tapes, drawing inspiration from Kurosawa's live-action movies and Hayao Miyazaki's animations. His imagination and creativity were further fueled by writing and drawing comics.

"Production was never something I thought was within reach for someone like me, especially at the Hollywood level. While backpacking overseas, I realised the profound impact and community-building power of bringing people together through storytelling. After completing my first few screenplays during my travels and receiving positive feedback from those around me, I sensed it was time to take a leap forward. I decided to immerse myself in Hollywood, learn the film business through UCLA's Professionals Program in Producing, and approach production with dedication," said Sy.

Recently, Animation Magazine announced Sy Huq's new role at D'ART Shtajio, known for their work on notable animated projects such as Star Wars: Visions – The Pit, The Boys Presents: Diabolical, and The Weeknd-Snowchild (Animated video).

Their collaboration was destined. While immersed in various creative anime projects in Tokyo, Sy began collaborating with D'ART Shtajio on several ventures.

"It was during these collaborations, especially with D'ART Shtajio's incredibly talented CEO, Arthell Isom, that we realised not only our natural inclination to collaborate and enjoy the process of developing and structuring stories that innovate and challenge the anime industry, but it was also our potential to create something truly remarkable. It was this realisation that led to discussions with D'ART about joining as lead executive producer. At D'ART Shtajio, I will focus on developing, creating, and writing large-scale anime projects, expanding their portfolio to impact animation enthusiasts worldwide with our unique storytelling style that blends Eastern and Western influences," shared the young producer.



While he has roots in Bangladesh, he has not had much exposure to the Bangladeshi animation industry. He is eager to learn more about it from industry professionals in the country to deepen his understanding of its production.

"There is a project I've been creating and developing since I filmed the primary story in documentary form in Bangladesh in 2022, based on my father's experiences during the Liberation War as a child in 1971, in the countryside. It's been an exciting journey, gaining attention within my trusted circles. We're taking our time to ensure the project is as impactful as possible while allowing it to creatively evolve. I look forward to seeing it come to life to represent the beauty of Bangladesh, frame by frame, in the future." said Sy.

An anime enthusiast, he is also a four-time Oscar-qualified director and producer. His debut as a director, Things That Fall, was eligible for the 92nd Academy Awards for Best Live Action Short Film. He served as executive producer for The Boys:Diabolical, which qualified for the 94th Academy Awards in the same category. Sy also produced two short films, The Stranger and Panorama, both qualifying for the 95th Academy Awards for Best Live Action Short Film.

Sy Huq, despite his films earning critical acclaim and festival awards, encountered challenges while directing his debut film Things That Fall. The project faced setbacks twice before coming to fruition.

"Through that film, I learned the power of empathy and the importance of championing meaningful causes, such as hiring with authenticity and representation in mind. We incorporated sign language, cast deaf talent for deaf roles, collaborated with mental health organisations for authentic portrayal, and experimented with new sound technology. It was a bold approach that underscored the impact of innovative storytelling and dedication, particularly as we navigated the journey from festivals to the Oscars," explained the director.

After Things That Fall qualified for the Academy Awards, Sy Huq realised his responsibility to address real issues through his narratives. He aimed to create films that would impact audiences and provoke reflection.

"My goal was to contribute to improving lives in some way. After four qualifications, I realised that the next step in my career was to scale up and significantly increase the impact I could make in my community," shared the filmmaker.

"My short films, like Things That Fall, draw inspiration from animated shorts such as Paperman. They utilise silent film principles to resonate with audiences, focusing on actions over dialogue and the power of non-verbal storytelling. Short films provided a rich education in bringing stories to life, and animation allows imagination to flourish with fewer limitations," Sy explained.

Currently, he's involved in undisclosed larger projects. However, he mentioned collaborating with Arthell Isom on D'ART's first Congolese anime feature, MFINDA.

Scaloni hails grit of Messi & Co

This edition of the Copa America is likely to represent the last chance for many senior squad members to add to their trophy collection with the national team.

Angel di Maria, 36, said last year he would retire from international football after the Copa America, while Messi, 37, and Nicolas Otamendi, 36, are both nearing the end of their careers.

"You know how I feel about Angel. We don't want to retire him earlier than needed," Scaloni said.

"We don't want to feel melancholy. We have to let him play, and then we'll see if we can convince him or not to stay with us. But so far, he's here, and he has to be allowed to enjoy this moment.

"For Leo (Messi), it's similar to Angel. We have to let him be and we will never be the ones to close the door. He can be with our team for as long as he wants to be. And if he wants to retire but still come and hang around, it would be great."

In Sunday's final, Argentina could face either Uruguay, who beat them in a World Cup qualifier in November, or Colombia, who are on a 27-match unbeaten run under coach Nestor Lorenzo.

"These two potential opponents are top-notch national teams, but it would be reckless to say that I prefer one or the other," Scaloni said.

"One of them already beat us. It was a very tough match. We have not played against Colombia with this coach, but we know it could be very difficult as well."

Govt stock nearing exhaustion

DGFP Director General ANM Al Firoz declined to make any comment on the issue.

"We have taken initiatives to procure contraception so that a crisis does not arise," Health Minister Samanta Lal Sen told The Daily Star.

Of the total population of 16.98 crore, the number of eligible couples is 2.81 crore, according to DGFP data.

At present, 37 percent of eligible couples receive contraceptives from the government and 3 percent from non-governmental organisations, according to government data. The remaining 60 percent get their contraception from the private sector.

Since there is a shortage of contraceptives, poor couples will find it difficult to take service from the private sector because of their high price, said Mohammad Mainul Islam, a professor and former chairman of the Dhaka University's population sciences department.

"Unintended pregnancies will also go up, which will scale up the mother and infant mortality rates. Pregnancy termination will also increase. Therefore, there is a risk to reproductive health."

At present, the rate of unmet need for family planning is 10 percent and the government wants to bring it down to zero by 2030.

Unmet need for family planning is defined as the percentage of women of reproductive age, either married or in a union, who want to stop or delay childbearing but are not using any method of contraception.

If the supply is not uninterrupted, it will be difficult to meet that target, Mainul said.

"If unmet needs increase, unwanted pregnancies, abortions, maternal deaths -- all will rise."

Besides, achieving the total fertility rate of 2.1 will be difficult too, Mainul added.

Assuming there are no migration flows and that mortality rates remain unchanged, a total fertility rate of 2.1 children per woman generates broad stability of the population. It is also referred to as the "replacement fertility rate" as it ensures replacement of the woman and her partner with another 0.1 children per woman to counteract infant mortality.

Israeli strikes hit UN agency building in Gaza warned it would "remain a dangerous combat zone", an AFP journalist said.

The heightened military strikes come as Israeli officials started talks in Qatar yesterday on reaching a truce.

The Israeli military said that one overnight attack in Gaza City targeted Hamas and Islamic Jihad targets operating from inside the headquarters of the UN agency for Palestinians UNRWA.

UNRWA had no immediate comment on the attack, but has said it has "no way to verify" claims that its facilities are being used by Hamas and its allies.

Meanwhile Tuesday's deadly strike near the Al-Awda school in Abasan, near Khan Yunis, brought new condemnation from Hamas over the Israeli military tactics.

The Hamas government said a "majority" of the dead were women and children.

At least 38,295 Palestinians have been killed in Israel's military offensive in the enclave since October 7, and 88,241 have been wounded, the Palestinian enclave's health ministry said yesterday. A total of 52 Palestinians were killed in the past 24 hours, the ministry said in a statement.

The Palestinian Red Crescent said it had received dozens of desperate calls from residents in Gaza City trapped in their homes but their teams were unable to reach them because of the intensity of the bombing, reports Reuters.

"The information coming from Gaza City shows residents are living through tragic conditions. (Israeli) occupation forces continue to hit residential districts, and displace people from their homes and refuge shelters," it said in a statement.

Eight jailed for 7yrs over Ctg girder collapse

Parisa's Project Manager Gias Uddin, engineer Abdul Jalil, Quality Control Engineer Aminur Rahman, and employees Abdul Hai, Mosharraf Hossain, Manjurul Islam, Shahjahan Ali, and Rafiqul Islam.

The court sentenced the eight to five years' imprisonment and fined Tk 3 lakh each, in default, they have to suffer six months more in jail under section 304 (A) of the Penal Code. They were jailed for another two years under section 338/34 of the Penal Code.

The sentences will be executed one after another, and the money will be distributed to the victims' families who were killed and injured in the incident, said Public Prosecutor Abdur Rashid.

"The eight were present in the courtroom during the verdict delivery, and all were sent to jail after cancellation of their bail," said Omar Fuad, bench assistant of the court.

Twenty-two out of 28 prosecution witnesses testified before the court during the trial, he added.

Convict Rafiqul's lawyer SUM Nurul Islam said, "We expressed our dissatisfaction over the judgment and will appeal to the higher court."

Omar Faruk, son of Elias who was killed in the incident, said they were not satisfied as the accused did not get the punishment they deserve.

In its observations, the court stated that the Chattogram Development Authority gave the victims Tk 50,000 each as compensation, which the court considers inadequate. By paying the compensation, the CDA indirectly accepted its responsibility for the incident.

The judge said the accused told the court that the names of high officials of the CDA and consultancy agencies were in the FIR, but those were not included in the charge sheet.

But neither the prosecution nor any victim lodged a no-confidence petition with the magistrate court at that time.

The court added that the prosecution witnesses did not mention anything about the dropped names.

If the court sent back the case for further investigation to include their names in the case, it would delay disposal of the case.

Nato begins sending F-16 jets to Ukraine

Says US top diplomat

Nato allies have begun the promised transfer of F-16 fighter jets to Ukraine to bolster defenses against Russia, US Secretary of State Antony Blinken said yesterday.

"As we speak, the transfer of F-16 jets is underway, coming form Denmark, coming from the Netherlands," Blinken said at a Nato 75th anniversary summit in Washington.

Meanwhile, Nato allies have reached agreement on the summit declaration that includes a pledge by the alliance to continue to support Ukraine "on its irreversible path to full Euro-atlantic integration, including Nato membership", a source told Reuters yesterday.

The declaration goes on to reaffirm that Nato will "be in a position to extend an invitation to Ukraine to join the alliance when allies agree and conditions are met", according to the source in the alliance.

On the eve of the summit, Russia fired a barrage of missiles on Ukraine, killing dozens.

POST-POLLS FRANCE

Macron urges MPs to agree broad coalition

AFP, Paris

President Emmanuel Macron put the onus on the French parliament yesterday to negotiate a broad-based coalition, after snap elections failed to give a majority to any one party.

Macron said he would name a new prime minister after MPs have had "a little time" to negotiate a governing programme, and that the current government would remain in place for the meantime.

French centrists were looking for an alliance with the right yesterday.

French leftists, however, believe that as the largest bloc in the new National Assembly with some 190 seats they are entitled to suggest a new prime minister.

But many in Macron's centrist camp, which holds around 160 seats, would refuse to support a new government that includes figures from the hard left.

The president's Renaissance outfit yesterday sought to find allies in the lower chamber, but appeared divided, with some seeking to include forces ranging from the centre left to the right in a broad coalition, and others only wishing to join forces with conservatives.

Ready to help restore peace in Ukraine

Modi tells Austrian Chancellor Nehammer

AFP, Vienna

India stands ready to give all possible support to restoring peace to war-torn Ukraine, Prime Minister Narendra Modi said yesterday in Vienna after a Kremlin visit criticised by Kyiv.

Modi arrived in Vienna late Tuesday after talks with Russian President Vladimir Putin in Moscow, where the Indian leader urged "peace through dialogue", saying that "war cannot solve problems".

"This is not an age of war. Problems cannot be solved on the battlefield," Modi told reporters in Vienna alongside Austrian Chancellor Karl Nehammer.

Modi said India and Austria stand "ready to provide all possible support" to "rapidly restore peace and stability". Nehammer said both countries shared "common goal" to achieve a "comprehensive and lasting peace, in accordance with UN Charter".

ARUNACHAL PRADESH STATE

India has no right to develop contested region: China

REUTERS, Beijing

India has no right to carry out development in the area China calls South Tibet, China's Foreign Ministry said yesterday in response to a Reuters report on New Delhi's plans to speed up hydropower projects in the border state.

"South Tibet is China's territory," a foreign ministry spokesman said in a statement. It said India had no right to carry out development there and the establishment of what India calls Arunachal Pradesh on Chinese territory is "illegal and invalid".

Reuters reported on Tuesday that India plans to spend $1 billion to expedite the construction of 12 hydropower stations in the northeastern Himalayan state.

India's foreign ministry did not immediately respond to a request for comment on China's statement.

India says its remote state of Arunachal Pradesh is an integral part of the country, but China says it is a part of southern Tibet, and has objected to Indian infrastructure projects there.

Last week, India Foreign Minister Subrahmanyam Jaishankar met his Chinese counterpart Wang Yi in Kazakhstan where the two agreed to intensify efforts to resolve issues along their border.

India plans to spend $1 billion to expedite the construction of 12 hydropower stations in Arunachal Pradesh, two government sources said.

The federal finance ministry under Nirmala Sitharaman recently approved up to 7.5 billion rupees ($89.85 million) in financial assistance to each hydropower project in the northeastern region, the sources said.

Under the scheme, about 90 billion rupees will likely be allotted for the 12 hydropower projects in Arunachal Pradesh, said the sources, who have direct knowledge of the matter.

The scheme is likely to support northeastern states and help them finance equity holdings in the projects they host. Having state governments on board generally helps in expediting regulatory clearances, locals rehabilitation and negotiations on sharing electricity with the host state.

The plans for the hydropower stations are expected to be announced in the 2024/2025 federal budget that Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government will unveil on July 23, the sources said.

Time short for Biden decision on 2024 bid: Pelosi

AFP, Washington

Democratic Party heavyweight Nancy Pelosi said yesterday that time is running out for US President Joe Biden to make a final decision on his reelection bid, but stressed the call was his to make.

Despite Biden insisting he is staying in the race, Pelosi -- the former speaker of the House of Representatives and an influential voice in the party -- suggested the president still could step aside amid a Democratic divide over his candidacy.

"It's up to the president to decide if he is going to run," she told MSNBC. "We're all encouraging him to make that decision because the time is running short."

Pelosi stopped short of advocating either way on the Biden question. "I want him to do whatever he decides to do, and that's the way it is," she said. "Whatever he decides, we go with."

Biden, 81, has corralled much-needed support from some top Democrats, but several lawmakers in the party have publicly expressed concerns about his mental fitness after his disastrous debate performance last month against White House challenger Donald Trump.

37 Chinese aircraft skirt Taiwan on way to drill

AFP, Taipei

Taiwan's defence ministry said 37 Chinese aircraft were detected around the self-ruled island yesterday as they headed to exercises with an aircraft carrier in the western Pacific.

China claims democratic Taiwan as part of its territory and maintains a near-daily presence of fighter jets, drones and warships around the island, which is 180 kilometres (110 miles) from the southern Chinese coast.

Taiwan is also a crucial part of a chain of islands that military strategists say serve as a gateway from the South China Sea -- which China claims in nearly its entirety -- to the Pacific Ocean.

At around 9:30 am (0130 GMT) yesterday, Taipei said that "since 0520 today, the Ministry of National Defence detected a total of 37 Chinese aircraft", including fighter jets, bombers and drones.

Thirty-six of the aircraft crossed the sensitive median line of the Taiwan Strait -- which bisects the narrow waterway separating the island from China.

"(The aircraft) headed to the Western Pacific via our southern and southeastern airspace to cooperate with the aircraft carrier the Shandong in conducting 'joint sea and air training'," the defence ministry said in a statement.

Defence Minister Wellington Koo told reporters the Shandong "did not pass through the Bashi Channel", the area off Taiwan's southern tip where Chinese ships typically transit en route to the Pacific Ocean.

Instead, it "went further south through the Balingtang Channel towards the Western Pacific," he said, referring to a waterway just north of the Philippines' Babuyan Island -- about 250 kilometres south of Bashi.

12 children killed in South Africa blaze

AFP, Johannesburg

Twelve children were killed in South Africa yesterday when a minibus taking them to school near Johannesburg overturned and burst into flames after being hit by another vehicle, authorities said.

The driver of the minibus was also killed and seven other children were rushed to hospital, according to officials in Johannesburg's Gauteng province.

Television images showed that the minibus was totally destroyed by the fire in the early morning crash in Merafong, more than 70 kilometres (45 miles) west of the city.

Develop a patient referral system

Ease pressure on tertiary facilities, re-imagine healthcare system

It is unfortunate that 53 years since independence, we have failed to develop a functional referral system, with a staggering three out of five patients directly referring themselves to specialists and tertiary hospitals, according to a recent study. This inevitably overwhelms tertiary facilities, leads to long waits, and deprives critically-ill patients of due attention and care. Unlike in countries such as the UK, where patients are required to see a general practitioner before being referred to a specialist, it is common practice in Bangladesh for patients to directly visit specialists even for minor ailments. This has created a lop-sided system, where the tertiary hospitals bear an overwhelming brunt of the pressure, while primary and secondary facilities remain underutilised and underdeveloped.

A well-designed referral system can help streamline the healthcare network, and create an effective linkage among three tiers of healthcare services. Primary healthcare facilities, which should be the first point of contact for any patient, should be fully equipped to take care of basic cases, referring only the complex cases to specialists. A 2023 study found that a referral system can filter as many as 65 percent of patients at primary and secondary healthcare facilities at upazila and district levels, freeing up tertiary facilities to focus on their core functions. Given the obvious advantages of such a system, the question is: why have we not implemented this system so far?

There have been various discussions over the decades about instituting such a system, but previous attempts to implement it have stumbled for various reasons. A referral system for Rangpur was announced in 2014 by the then health minister Mohammad Nasim, but it failed as a result of inadequate logistical support and unavailability of qualified physicians and auxiliary workforce at primary healthcare centres. Attempts to get the system going in 2016 and 2019 also fizzled out in the end. What is obvious is that ad hoc attempts at implementation will not work without a radical reimagining of the healthcare system and appropriate investments and capacity-building to ensure a successful transition.

The good news is that Bangladesh already has primary healthcare infrastructure in rural areas, with community hospitals and community clinics, but their systemic issues—shortage of staff, equipment and inefficiencies in operations—need to be addressed if they are to play their due role within the referral system. Meanwhile, tertiary facilities have mushroomed in urban areas at the cost of primary and secondary facilities—an imbalance that must first be addressed.

If we are to move forward, we need political will and a well-defined policy about how to implement a well-designed referral system. The system must be built on a strong foundation of well-equipped primary healthcare facilities, a sufficient number of trained specialists at all levels, and a public that trusts and understands the system.

Punish kidney racket mastermind

Arrest of Bangladeshis involved in illegal transplants a wake-up call

We are horrified to learn of a cross-border racket of illegal kidney transplant in India that has been sourcing the organ from Bangladesh for years. According to a report by The Indian Express, police recently arrested seven individuals in Delhi, including three Bangladeshis and an Indian doctor, in connection with this racket. Delhi Police also said the mastermind of the racket is a Bangladeshi national, and those involved with this illegal operation are all suspected to have links with Bangladesh. This racket is a part of a larger interstate network in India involving Bangladeshi patients in Rajasthan and Haryana, sources at Delhi Police say.

The racket, according to Delhi Police, targeted kidney patients by visiting dialysis centres in Bangladesh. They found donors from poor and marginalised backgrounds, luring them to India under the pretence of employment. It also arranged to falsify documents under the name of Bangladesh High Commission in Delhi to show that the donors and recipients were related by blood—a requirement for kidney transplant per the Indian law. Dr Vijaya Kumari, who was employed at the Delhi-based Indraprastha Apollo Hospital (IHS), facilitated the transplants even when she knew about the donors and recipients not being blood-related. The now suspended doctor performed 15-16 such illegal transplants between 2021 and 2023 at the Noida-based Yatharth Hospital.

Police also found documents carrying records of transactions that took place for the transplants from one of the Bangladeshi accused. Donors were paid four to five lakh rupees for their kidneys, while recipients were charged 25-30 lakh rupees.

While we are glad that police nabbed the culprits, we are disturbed that so many illegal transplants took place with no one being the wiser. The Bangladeshi trio who were arrested in Delhi had been arrested on the same charges last month. How did they get out and continue their nefarious activities? We urge both the Bangladesh and Indian authorities to coordinate and delve deeper into the matter and uproot the entire network. On the Bangladesh side, a thorough investigation must be conducted to find the mastermind of the racket and all its members, and bring them all to book.

Has poverty-alleviation spending made any difference?

Protection of the ultra-poor and the marginalised groups require increasing resources for direct expenditures for poverty reduction.

One critical question raised in the context of poverty alleviation in Bangladesh is whether poverty reduction spendings have made any dent on poverty in the country. Sometimes, we generalise the responses to this question. Sometimes, the responses are based more on rhetoric, rather than hard facts. And sometimes, the responses are partial, rather than comprehensive. But an objective response to the question requires an understanding of the dynamics of poverty in Bangladesh, the nature of poverty alleviation spendings. It requires familiarity with poverty and inequality data, and a sense of the magnitude of the poverty alleviation expenditures.

Poverty in Bangladesh has many dimensions. At one level, it can be structural, rooted in the structure of the economy. It can also be transient, which has more of a seasonal nature. Thus, people can be permanently trapped in poverty, or they can get in and out of the poverty trap, depending on the seasonality of the economic outcome. The sources of impoverishment may also vary, ranging from socio-economic shocks (for example, recession or Covid-19) to environmental degradation, giving rise to the environmental poor. Poverty can be absolute, or relative, which is nothing other than inequality. And inequalities occur not only in income, but also in non-income dimensions. Furthermore, inequalities are not always explained in terms of outcomes like educational achievements, but also in opportunities such as access to health services.

Even though a correlation is not easy to establish between the huge amounts of resources going to poverty reduction in Bangladesh and its impressive achievements in poverty reduction, a possibility of a strong association between the two cannot be overruled.

Looking at the poverty alleviating expenditures, there are two dimensions to them—poverty impacting expenditures and targeted expenditures for poverty alleviation. The first set of expenditures are not exclusively directed to poverty alleviation, rather they impact poverty through various channels. Thus, expenditures on social services like health, education, and access to clean drinking water help reduce impoverishment. In societies where poverty is significantly wide-spread, poverty reducing strategies at the macro and sectoral levels are essential. In fact, in such instances, macroeconomic policies must be geared towards poverty reducing measures—expenditures which indirectly impact poverty work through channels like economic growth, employment generation, and expansion of social services, etc. Yet, even with such policies, a significant number of people will remain outside of the macroeconomic policy net. And those people will need direct targeted poverty reducing interventions. Extreme poor, people with disabilities, people who live on ecologically fragile lands need targeted interventions, such as social protection.

A careful review of the poverty data of Bangladesh clearly indicates that over the years, the incidence of poverty has come down significantly. The 2022 Household Income and Expenditure Survey, published by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics puts the income poverty rate in Bangladesh at 19 percent, down from 58 percent in 1990—down by more than two-thirds. The extreme poverty in the country stands at about 6 percent. There is no doubt that these are impressive achievements.

But the same thing cannot be said about relative poverty, or inequality. In fact, the income Gini-coefficient (the economic measure of inequality) of Bangladesh is alarmingly high—it was 0.50 in 2022. In theory, the value of the Gini-coefficient ranges between 0 to 1. Higher values within the range indicate higher inequality. A Gini-coefficient value close to 0.5 would mean high inequality. Inequality is also manifested in Bangladesh in other non-income dimensions. For example, in the area of child malnutrition, while 38 percent of the children in the poorest households are stunted, the comparable figure for the richest households is 20 percent.

Over the years, more than half of the public expenditures in Bangladesh was directed towards poverty alleviation. For example, in the fiscal year of 2020-21, 55 percent of the public expenditures were allocated for poverty alleviation. The figure has gone up to 58 percent in the fiscal year of 2024-25. In the intermittent years, the figure stood at more than 55 percent. However, direct expenditures for poverty alleviation show a declining trend—in the fiscal year of 2020-21, more than four-fifths of the public expenditures on poverty alleviation were allocated towards directly fighting poverty. In the fiscal year of 2024-25, the relevant share has come down to two-thirds.

In the context of all these figures, the two relevant observations are that firstly, even though a correlation is not easy to establish between the huge amounts of resources going to poverty reduction in Bangladesh and its impressive achievements in poverty reduction, a possibility of a strong association between the two cannot be overruled. In fact, a significant part of the poverty reduction has to be accounted for by the public expenditures on poverty alleviation. However, the issue is how the allocated public resources to poverty reduction can be made more efficient and effective. Secondly, a declining share of direct expenditures on poverty reduction make the poorest and the most marginalised people more vulnerable. What can be done about it?

In order to make public expenditures on poverty reduction more efficient, macroeconomic and sectoral poverty reduction programmes and projects should be formulated with a concrete focus. A sensible implementation plan with an achievable timeline will safeguard against resource leakages. The effectiveness of such programmes and projects in alleviating poverty can also be enhanced if they are solidly anchored in Bangladesh's overall development plans aligned with its overall goals and objectives, and if the macroeconomic framework and sectoral policies are poverty-sensitive. Linking poverty alleviating measures with employment generation, social services, and pro-poor economic growth would make public resources for poverty reduction more effective.

Protection of the ultra-poor and the marginalised groups require increasing resources for direct expenditures for poverty reduction, not reducing them. It would require intensifying various existing social protection measures and exploring new innovative mechanisms. The need for all these measures has become even more important given that Bangladesh faces high inflation and there can be more external and internal shocks. The second phase of the National Social Security Strategy can be solidified. The Rural Employment Opportunities for Pubic Assets Programme (REOPA) can also be an effective instrument for poverty reduction among the poorest and the marginalised groups.

Was Iran's election a smokescreen?

Noora Shamsi Bahar
is senior lecturer at the Department of English and Modern Languages, North South University (NSU), and a published researcher and translator.

NOORA SHAMSI BAHAR

During Iran's latest presidential elections, the hashtag #electioncircus was trending among the Iranian community on X. This may be due to the illusion of a political competition that is encouraged by the Velāyat-e faqīh, or Supreme Leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, in an established theocratic system, where presidential elections are mostly a facade because ultimately, the decision-making power rests with the Supreme Leader.

So, how do presidential elections work in Iran? The Shourā-ye Negahbān (Guardian Council) handpicks the most suitable candidates from a pool of presidential candidates, who then compete against one another. To secure victory, a candidate needs more than 50 percent of the people's vote. If no candidate achieves this majority, a run-off ensues a week later between the two candidates who received the highest number of votes in the initial round.

And what is the Guardian Council? It constitutes 12 members who are directly/indirectly appointed by the Supreme Leader, who hold power to vet/veto legislation, and oversee elections. The Guardian Council can bar candidates from standing in elections to parliament, the presidency and the Majles-e Xobregân-e Rahbari (Assembly of Experts). For example, Ali Larijani, an ex-parliamentary speaker and former Commander of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps, was disqualified during the 2021 presidential elections by the Guardian Council, possibly owing to his center-right ideology. Noteworthy to mention, disqualified candidates are disallowed from protesting the council's rejection.

Among the seven candidates who were selected by the Guardian Council for the 2021 presidential elections was the to-be president, Ebrahim Raisi, a far-right hardliner, known as the "Butcher of Tehran" for his role in allegedly carrying out mass executions of up to as many as 30,000 political prisoners in 1988, as the-then Deputy Prosecutor General of Tehran. Following Raisi's death after a helicopter crash on May 19, 2024, new presidential elections took place shortly after, which culminated on July 5, 2024.

This time, out of 80 candidates, 74 were disqualified by the Guardian Council, which included four female candidates, as has been the case for all presidential elections since the Islamic revolution—a testament to the accusation that Iran is a gender apartheid state. According to Iran's Ministry of Interior, there was a record-low turnout since the inception of the Islamic Republic, where only 40 percent of the more than 61 million eligible Iranians voted during the first round, which evidences that most do not support clerical rule. I will skip any comment on the speculation that even these embarrassing numbers are fabricated, as has been the claim, given the staggering majority's decision to abstain from voting.

Among the six selected candidates this time around, Dr Masoud Pezeshkian was the only so-called "reformist"—a widely circulated theory that has thrown dust in the eyes of many non-Iranians. It won't be too absurd to assume that Pezeshkian's approved candidacy by the Khamenei-controlled Guardian Council was a ploy to increase political participation. Pezeshkian won against ultra-conservative Saeed Jalili, but one wonders what moderate reforms he will he bring about without challenging the state's theocratic system, especially when he himself has given a public statement declaring that confronting Iran's power elite of clerics will never be part of his agenda.

Anyone who understands Farsi can easily find Pezeshkian's stance on women's rights. In an interview, an elderly Pezeshkian proudly states that even before the first Supreme Leader, Ayatollah Khomeini, established the mandatory hijab law in 1979, Pezeshkian enforced women to wear long trousers, the long-sleeved manteau (a long overcoat), and the hijab at the Tabriz University of Medical Sciences (where he was pursuing an MBBS) as well as at the hospital across the medical college. One alumna of the university recounts incidents from 1979, when Pezeshkian and his comrades, whom she dubs as "terrorists," attacked and harassed women who didn't comply, and even carried weapons, such as knives and chains, as scare tactics.

Should a reasonable skeptic, who relies on the independent investigation of the truth, believe that the same man who didn't believe in women's right to freedom of choice is now a changed "reformist" under the same regime that has committed human rights violations in relation to the Zan, Zendegi, Azadi (Woman, Life, Freedom) movement in Iran? Should I, a Bangladeshi citizen belonging to the Iranian diaspora, believe that Pezeshkian will, for instance, make any legislative amendments to dismantle gender apartheid? Or will he be able to ensure a stop to persecutions against non-Shiite religious minorities such as the Baha'is, who are barred from having tertiary education and government jobs, whose properties are confiscated, whose dead are denied the right to dignified burials?

Even if Pezeshkian is given the benefit of the doubt, what power does he hold at the end of the day? None, really. It is therefore disappointing to see every international news portal misleadingly labeling the new president as "reformist" or "moderate" or to see clickbait titles such as the BBC's "Iran's new president gives hope to some women and younger voters," when the content of the article itself goes on to say: "...with Ayatollah Khamenei having final say over government policy - there is little chance of real change," and "... regardless of Dr Pezeshkian's win, the supreme leader remains the 'puppeteer' in Iran."

WORLD POPULATION DAY

Bangladesh needs inclusive data for an equitable future

Dr Mohammad Mainul Islam
is professor & former chairman of the Department of Population Sciences at the University of Dhaka.

DR MOHAMMAD MAINUL ISLAM

Today is World Population Day (WPD), and this year's theme is "Embracing the power of inclusive data towards a resilient and equitable future for all." Inclusive data means collecting data for all people, regardless of location, ethnicity, gender, or age. It involves representation, disaggregation, intersectionality of identities, multiple sources, privacy, and support of human resources and technical capacity. It is about closing the data gaps required for a fair and equitable society, and it is more than numbers where every person is seen, heard, and counted.

The key messages for the WPD 2024 as circulated by the United Nations are: (i) in a world of uncertainty and upheaval, we can achieve a peaceful and prosperous future by building resilient systems and societies using evidence-based solutions and reliable, inclusive data; (ii) data collection and analysis tools have vastly improved; yet these changes have also exposed significant information gaps and potential risks, including the misrepresentation or misuse of data; and (iii) countries and societies must champion data collection that counts people as they are, in all their complexity.

This year the world will celebrate the 30th anniversary of the landmark International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD). Since adopting the ICPD Programme of Actions (PoA) in 1994 and the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) in 2015, countries worldwide have been developing the necessary statistical data to track the goals and indicators developed by the United Nations. To measure progress of SDGs, inclusive data is crucial to enables us to see where change is required, allowing us to reach everyone and support them in realising their rights. The SDG progress report demonstrates where a country currently stands on inclusive data collection.

The SDG tracker of Bangladesh shows that almost two-third of all indicators used to monitor the 17 SDGs currently should be made available, but only one-third are updated or readily available. It will take less than six years to reach the SDGs benchmark, but more data will be needed—especially disaggregated data for development. More than half of the data are unavailable for specific goals like SDG 12 (responsible consumption and production) and SDG 14 (life below water). The number of updated data was reduced in 2023 but increased in 2024, which needs a causal explanation from the government. The Bangladesh government is implementing the SDGs at the district and upazila levels. The cabinet approved 39+1 priority indicators in 2018 to localise the SDGs because 39 were deemed necessary at the local level in the nation and had reinforcing effects on other targets. Another priority indicator was left in place to ensure that "no one is left behind," aligning with the requirements of a particular district or upazila and considering the specific circumstances of that geographic area. About five of these 39 priority indicators still need to be updated in the tracker. Another issue with this online tracker is that reviewing the data availability status of each goal's indicator can be confusing because the information is not synchronised. Many of the indicators are only partially mentioned. All these problems must be addressed and resolved immediately for this SDG tracker to function correctly.

While improvements in data collection have been made, data gaps have also been exposed. Significant gaps persist in the availability, quality, accessibility, and use of data in Bangladesh. For example, marginalised groups, such as people with disabilities, are not counted accurately in the latest population and housing census in 2022 leading to the possibility that more people will remain invisible to decision-makers. Inclusive data on disability means collecting data primarily on disability, sex, and age and incorporating other dimensions, such as income, ethnicity, location, and other factors. We need to analyse and critically use the data to develop policies to reach those who are most marginalised or are being left behind. The urgency of addressing these data gaps cannot be overstated, as it is crucial for the future of our society.

Another example can be given regarding the accuracy of the maternal mortality ratio (MMR) in Bangladesh, an essential indicator of SDG-3 (good health and well-being). There has been no large-scale maternal mortality and health care survey after 2016. The MMR data, reported from Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics' (BBS) Sample Vital Registration System (SVRS) that records vital events such as births, deaths, and causes of death, does not truly reflect the figure due to a shortage of the required sample size. As a result, reporting the MMR and its disaggregated figure from there for policy design and interventions is not appropriate. Thus, urgent efforts must be made to make quality data for all indicators available through effective multisectoral partnerships, coordination, and integration among stakeholders to strengthen and improve the country's data capacity. Decision-making depends heavily on data; obtaining high quality data is crucial for reaching the SDGs. Bangladesh needs more investment in inclusive data for a resilient and equitable future. Our country faces enormous challenges, but we can tackle them. Strong political commitment and the effective and timely implementation of such commitment are essential. Significant policies related to population and development need to be reformed and updated using the SDGs framework. We should pursue the SDGs and our common agenda, keeping the population and its sub-groups at the development centre. For example, Bangladesh should prioritise data on the most vulnerable communities, like adolescent mothers (ages 15-19), as adolescent childbirth is common in practice (24 percent, Bangladesh Demographic and Health Survey, BDHS 2022).

More robust data systems drive diverse benefits, improving quality of life and livelihoods and leading to greater efficiencies in social programmes. An analysis published in September 2022 by the Global Partnership for Sustainable Development Data states that every dollar invested in strengthening data systems generates $32 in economic benefits. This underscores the potential for significant positive change achieved through strategic investment in data systems. Thus, the United Nations (UN) recommends increasing domestic funding for data and statistics by 50 percent by 2030, along with urging donor agencies to raise the share of official development assistance for data to at least 0.7 percent by 2030.

Although several SDG targets have been partially met, achieving full realisation is essential for expediting overall progress in Bangladesh. A few significant challenges to achieving the SDGs in Bangladesh are the unavailability of baseline data, lack of monitoring, and lack of coordination among the national targets stated in the national policies and the SDG target. Thus, establishing a national data repository or information bank that consolidates relevant data from each concerned organisation is necessary, and it can be linked with the SDGs tracker.

VISUAL: TEENI AND TUNI

Bangladesh has a population of more than 173 million (SVRS, 2023, BBS). This is a big number with big opportunities, and big challenges. A population of 173 million means there are over 173 million opportunities for a healthier Bangladesh empowered by rights and choices. Adequate and updated population data based on gender, ethnicity, class, religion, disability, etc, are necessary for inclusive development. There is evidence of adopting an inclusive approach to data collection in Bangladesh—data on transgender or Hijra were included in the 2022 Population and Housing Census. The key is to ensure equal access to opportunities and removing barriers to opportunities to harness the potential of all Bangladeshis, including marginalised or disadvantaged populations like women, young people, older people, people with disabilities, and migrants. The best way to cultivate demographic resilience is to support human rights, including individuals' rights and choices—that is the ultimate development.

Vision for an AI law in Bangladesh

Warda Ruheen Bristi and Shafin Haque Omlan
are research associates at Bangladesh Institute of Governance and Management (BIGM).

WARDA RUHEEN BRISTI AND SHAFIN HAQUE OMLAN

We may not notice it at first glance, but the world is going through a technological renaissance in the form of Artificial Intelligence. In the bustling heart of South Asia, Bangladesh also stands on the cusp of this technological renaissance. As artificial intelligence (AI) is transforming industries worldwide, the nation is facing an urgent call to draft forward-thinking AI policy guidelines. Imagine a future where Dhaka's traffic is managed by smart systems, farmers use AI to boost crop yields, and healthcare is revolutionised by predictive analytics. In the current situation, this thought might be farfetched, but this promising horizon can come sooner rather than later if Bangladesh can establish a policy guideline that can navigate its set of challenges and responsibilities. Bangladesh must utilise the AI wave with a blend of ambition and caution, ensuring that innovation does not eclipse ethics and inclusivity.

Crafting Bangladesh's AI policy is a bit like preparing the perfect biriyani: it requires just the right mix of ingredients to create something truly remarkable. The focus should be on blending robust international cooperation to ensure trustworthy AI, with a generous helping of digital infrastructure to provide the computing power needed for innovation. Stir in public awareness and civic engagement to keep society informed and involved, sprinkle generously with investments in public research capabilities, and don't forget to season with education and skill development to prepare the workforce for future challenges. Finally, top it off with initiatives to boost connectivity and digitalisation, and a strategic vision aligned with the Fourth Industrial Revolution (4IR) to ensure sustainable growth. When these elements come together, Bangladesh can set up a tech policy that's not only cutting-edge, but also inclusive and forward-thinking. So, what elements should be on the radar of policymakers when crafting this pivotal piece of legislation?

First of all, AI's transformative potential can only be fully realised if there's a skilled workforce to harness it. Thus, the AI Act must prioritise comprehensive education and training programmes. Integrating AI into school curriculum, establishing vocational training programmes, and offering scholarships for AI-related fields are essential steps. This not only prepares the next generation for AI-driven jobs but also ensures that the current workforce is not left behind.

To position Bangladesh as a leader in AI innovation, substantial investments in AI research and development (R&D) are crucial. This involves funding interdisciplinary research collaborations between universities, research institutions, and private industries. The goal should be to advance AI capabilities in key sectors like healthcare, agriculture, and manufacturing. Think about AI research centres and innovation hubs sprouting across the country, nurturing a vibrant ecosystem of startups and entrepreneurs. We need to build a digital infrastructure. For example, we can talk about the recent policy on AI that was adopted by Vietnam. Within 2030, they want to build an "AI ecosystem." It means a fluid incorporation of AI in the commercial and research sectors. This ecosystem may include various components that work together to foster innovation, ensure ethical standards, and drive the economic and societal benefits in the country. Most importantly, to foster AI innovation in Vietnam, the government is taking a comprehensive strategy focusing on human resource development, organisational construction, research and development, and investment in AI enterprises. This includes deploying basic AI and data science skills through short and medium-term training courses for students and career-changing workers, attracting both domestic and foreign resources to build training centres, and establishing key research hubs at leading universities. Ultimately, the Vietnamese government wants to promote and attract investment capital for the growth of AI enterprises and brands in Vietnam.

Similarly, for AI to flourish, Bangladesh needs to prioritise investment in high-speed internet connectivity, cloud computing services, and data centres. This infrastructure will provide the necessary computing power and data storage capabilities for AI applications across various sectors. Building this infrastructure is another difficult but manageable task with the right collaborative efforts. If the government can encourage collaborations between itself, the private sector, and academia then Bangladesh can create a fertile ground for AI advancements tailored to local needs. And not only through local collaboration, but Bangladesh should also establish partnerships with other countries, international organisations, and tech companies to develop shared principles and standards for trustworthy AI. This can also position the country as a trustworthy player in the global AI landscape, attracting international investments and collaborations.

We have to remember that, in the current AI-driven world, data is the new oil. However, with great data comes great responsibility. Ensuring a robust data security infrastructure is paramount. The AI Act should mandate the use of cutting-edge encryption technologies, continuous monitoring systems, and regular security audits to protect sensitive information from cyber threats. This is not just about safeguarding individual privacy but also about building trust in AI systems. A data breach in a healthcare system powered by AI could have catastrophic consequences, undermining public confidence. Therefore, a comprehensive focus on data security is non-negotiable.

Another thing to note is that AI is a double-edged sword. While it has the potential to drive unprecedented progress, it also poses significant ethical challenges. The AI Act should establish clear guidelines for ethical AI deployment, ensuring transparency, accountability, and fairness. It is very easy to misuse AI and promote misinformation or biases. Nowadays, AI can create realistic but fake images, videos, and audio (deepfakes), which can be used to spread misinformation, manipulate public opinion, or damage reputations. It also increases fraud and scams because there are no established guidelines to use of AI systems. AI can perpetuate and amplify biases present in their training data, leading to discriminatory practices in hiring, lending, law enforcement, and more. So, establishing data protection laws to safeguard personal information and fostering transparency in AI decision-making processes are critical steps toward ethical AI.

All in all, crafting an AI Act for Bangladesh goes beyond technicalities, it centres on people and public engagement. Essential initiatives include public awareness campaigns to educate citizens on AI's benefits and risks, and involving diverse stakeholders—civil society, academia, and industry—in policymaking to ensure transparency and accountability. The Act should also align with Fourth Industrial Revolution (4IR) principles which emphasises innovation, digitalisation, and interconnectedness. By balancing innovation with regulation and addressing local needs while adhering to global standards, Bangladesh can harness AI's transformative power for an inclusive, ethical, and sustainable digital future.

BOOK REVIEW: FICTION

When death is a performance

A review of Kaveh Akbar's 'Martyr!' (Knopf, 2024)

SHAHRIAR SHAAMS

The reader realises soon that 'Martyr!' becomes vibrant and unforgettable only when the story rewinds to Tehran and Arash.

Kaveh Akbar's Martyr! is unruly and endearing. Akbar's years as a poet has given his debut novel an honesty that shines through the book's arduous structure. And for all of Martyr!'s exhilarating tone and emotional trek, the difficulties of writing a novel on addiction, martyrdom, death, and meaning is evident when one reads it.

Cyrus Shams, the main character of Martyr!, is not a complete stand-in for Akbar, but the author lends much of his personality to his creation. They both have moved to the USA from Iran as a toddler, both have suffered from addiction and subsequently found in poetry a strength that aids their recovery.

Yet the strongest moments of Martyr! are those set in an Iran Cyrus would have no recollection of, where his uncle Arash, a soldier during the Iran-Iraq war, rode a horse through the battlefield with a flashlight at night. "He was meant to look like an angel. He was meant to inspire the dying men to die with dignity, conviction. To keep them from suicide."

By comparison, the America where Cyrus is raised and goes to university is unremarkable. Here Cyrus dreams of a suicide that would be meaningful. He plans to write a book of martyrs (snatches of poetry from this work-in-progress pepper throughout Martyr! and often tend to outshine the novel proper). Akbar spends pages to paint Cyrus's university life as one of jolly bohemia full of open-mics at college-town cafes and casual experimentation of drugs and literary styles, yet it is those images of Arash before, comforting soldiers as an angel of death that I could not shake away long after finishing the book.

Briefly after Cyrus is born in Tehran, the Americans missile down an Iranian passenger flight, killing 290 people on board. Cyrus loses his mother Roya, who was to visit Arash in Dubai. Cyrus's father, overwhelmed with grief, soon immigrates to the very country that has killed his wife—an America where the father works at a chicken farm day in and out, where the library launches Cyrus into a world of imagination and creativity. "You're the most American kid I know," his sponsor, Gabe, tells him after an AA meeting. His only connection to Iran now being an annual birthday phone-call to his uncle back home.

The reader realises soon that Martyr! becomes vibrant and unforgettable only when the story rewinds to Tehran and Arash. Much of Martyr! however takes place over four days in Brooklyn, New York, where Cyrus is enamoured with an Iranian performance artist documenting herself dying from cancer in the form of an art exhibition. Cyrus believes she holds some needed insight into his obsession with martyrs, one that would surely benefit his book.

Though in my experience, poets often tend to write mediocre novels, Kaveh Akbar's Martyr! is too heartfelt to be brushed aside. His prose reminds one of Turgenev, where absences of a tighter plot cannot subdue the intelligence and magnanimity of the all too real characters. As Cyrus and Orkideh, the dying artist, confer on the nature of a meaningful death, Kaveh Akbar cites Hamlet, the ambassador of death himself.

"He felt like Hamlet," Cyrus thinks, "just moping around waiting for the world to assuage his grief…" but as Orkideh prepares to die after shocking Cyrus to his core, one sees that Cyrus may feel like Hamlet, but as he eagerly and passively witnesses the performance of dying, he really is Horatio. He lives to tell the tale.

BOOK REVIEW: FICTION

When fiction and nonfiction create a literary supernova

Review of 'The House of Doors' (Bloomsbury Publishing, 2023) by Tan Twan Eng

ZERTAB QUADERI

When a book mentions one of my favourite authors, W. Somerset Maugham, and the short description suggests betrayal, intrigue, secret affairs, political uprisings, failed marriages, and a whodunnit, there's little I can do but take it. Longlisted for The Booker Prize 2023, The House of Doors by the Malaysian author, Tan Twan Eng, is a masterfully crafted literary work of fictional and nonfictional characters in a smudged sphere of fact and fiction. It shows Eng's length and depth of research and his imaginative prowess. Besides having Maugham somewhat in the centre stage, the author uses other real characters, real events, and characters from Maugham's novels and plays to create a story that spans over 30-odd years. Flashbacks of flashbacks with parallel plots, sprinkled with suspense and thrill are the ingredients for this unputdownable read. Immaculately structured with neat chapter divisions that mention the character from whose point of view the story is told, the year, and the location, the book ensures we don't get lost in the temporal and spatial maze.

Maugham, in the book, is the catalyst that leads the main character, Lesley Hamlyn, to spill the beans from her past and present, forming the bulk of the novel. The story begins and ends with Lesley in two different countries and continents. Maugham plays second fiddle and shares glimpses of his life—his sexual orientation, financial and marital straits, emotional dependence on an exploitative "secretary" who travels the world with him, and his special knack for sniffing out dark secrets and scandals which he turns into popular novels, short stories, and plays that keep him from falling into financial ruin.

Reeking of British colonialism, we see the white society in Malaya in the earlier decades of the 20th century living in the lap of luxury. Lesley and her lawyer husband, Robert, live in a mansion and are waited upon hand and foot by the natives. The short but powerful sketches of the nanny, rickshaw pullers, gardeners, and other house staff and those working in Penang sharply contrast their white masters and shed light on the vivid difference between the coloniser and the colonised. However, there is an undercurrent of rising consciousness against imperialism when Chinese revolutionary, Sun Yat Sen, is introduced. Lesley joins a clandestine group and lends help to the cause of breaking free from the current dynasty, signalling a desire to minimise class differences. During these meetings, she falls for Arthur, a fellow member and a Chinese, and carries on her affair in the eponymous house. The doors in The House of Doors lead Lesley to find peace, love, and refuge from her farcical marriage.

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

The theme of masks is explored through the characters and objects, most notably the doors. A door is synonymous with a mask and shows the outside world something that may be the opposite of what is concealed beyond it. In The House of Doors, we see it in the failed marriages of both Maugham and Robert. Both men are homosexuals, yet, they and their wives wear masks and are forced to pretend everything is fine to avoid societal judgments and ostracisation. Similarly, under the cover of The Philomatic Society, Sun Yat Sen carried on his revolutionary meetings and activities at a place with nondescript doors. And, finally, the slightly modified Chinese ideogram of a door inscribed on a Maugham book cover comes to Lesley in the guise of a letter and sets her on her path to reuniting with Arthur in Penang after 40 long years.

Letters also play a big role in The House of Doors. Through Lesley, Maugham gets the fodder and inspiration to write 'The Letter', a short story and play based on the true events of a murder case against Ethel Proudlock in 1911.

Among other things, the book explores the fragility and strength of relationships, human resilience and frailties, and the duality within us and the larger society. The atmospheric novel depicts the multicultural heritage of Malaya and its tropical and coastal landscape. It's loaded with Eastern symbolism and social, cultural, political, historical, and personal events, making it a fascinating read. A cerebral exercise in connecting the dots, I immensely enjoyed straddling the blurred boundaries of fact and fiction.

‘Spirit of sacrifice’ & ‘genius’ Yamal pave way for Spain

- At the age of 16 years and 362 days, Spain’s Lamine Yamal became the youngest goalscorer at a major tournament (World Cup/Euros), a record previously held by Brazil’s Pele against Wales at the 1958 World Cup (17y 239d).
- Spain are the first side to win six games at a single edition of the UEFA European Championship finals.
- This is the first time France have been eliminated at the semifinal stage of a major tournament (World Cup/Euros) since Euro 1996.
- Spain are only the second side to reach as many as five finals of the UEFA European Championship after Germany (6).
- Randal Kolo Muani’s opening goal in the eighth minute of the game was France’s first goal from open play at Euro 2024, while it was their 87th non-penalty attempt of the tournament.

AGENCIES

A touch of ‘genius’ from wunderkind Lamine Yamal and a testament to what can be done by improvising on a proven style of play -- both of these were on display when Spain dispatched France 2-1 in the Euro 2024 semifinal in Munich on Tuesday night.

Keeping a majority of possession and frustrating opponents by denying them opportunities to be creative -- this had been the style of play for Spain for over a decade, during which they won the 2010 World Cup and triumphed in the 2008 and 2012 editions of the Euros.

However, since their last Euro success 12 years ago, that typical Spanish style of play had somewhat been neutralised with their national team unable to win any major silverware after that.

But Spain coach Luis de la Fuente developed on that possession-based football, nurturing a team of youngsters he had overseen from the age level, and the 63-year-old coach is now enjoying the fruits of it as his team is just one step away from winning the Euro 2024.

De la Fuente hailed his team’s quality and cohesion in coming from a goal down to beat France and reach the Euro 2024 final, a feat he took no credit for and said was all about his players’ insatiable hunger for success.

De la Fuente said his team had versatility and outstanding individual qualities, which when put together created a special brand of football that would be on show in Sunday’s final, regardless of whether the opponent is England or Netherlands.

De la Fuente also hailed his young side who, according to the coach, has not been afraid of sacrificing their dominance over the ball in return for being more aggressive, especially offensively.

“They are very generous in their efforts and work rate. This is just one more sign that this is an insatiable team, that they want to keep improving with the spirit of sacrifice,” he said.

Spain went behind to an early goal from France’s Randal Kolo Muani before teenager Yamal levelled with a brilliant strike in the 21st minute, then Dani Olmo added a second just a few minutes after.

De la Fuente said seeing 16-year-old winger Yamal’s performance against France was like watching “a genius”.

Named player of the match, Yamal became the youngest-ever male Euros goalscorer.

“We have seen a genius, the product of a genius,” De la Fuente told reporters.

“He’s a player we have to take care of -- I have to give him the advice to keep working with the same humility and keep his feet on the floor.

“He would keep growing but this maturity and attitude at such a young age is like that of a more experienced player.

“We are lucky he is Spanish and we can enjoy him for many more years.”

Yamal became the competition’s youngest player in Spain’s first match against Croatia and also provided three assists on his team’s run to the final.

De la Fuente reserved praise for the rest of his team, including Olmo.

“We’ve been talking about Lamine but I have 26 great players,” continued the coach.

“I know (Olmo) very well and the potential he has... I am grateful to him too.”

This new-look Spain of De la Fuente has already garnered a lot of praise from experts and fans alike, but for the Spanish coach, the circle will only be completed if he can inspire his team to land the elusive major tournament silverware come Sunday night in Berlin against either England or the Netherlands.

MESSI ENJOYING ‘last battles’ for Argentina

AFP, East Rutherford

Lionel Messi said he was enjoying his “last battles” with Argentina after the 37-year-old found the net in a 2-0 win over Canada on Tuesday to book a place in the Copa America final.

After a lacklustre display against Ecuador in the quarterfinals, Messi looked back to himself again, connecting with Angel Di Maria and strike partner Julian Alvarez, who also scored.

“I’m living it like I lived it in the last Copa America, in the last World Cup....these are the last battles and I’m enjoying them to the maximum,” he told TyC Sports after the win set up a meeting with Uruguay or Colombia in the final.

Messi, now playing with Inter Miami in Major League Soccer, has yet to indicate whether he will continue to play with Argentina in the 2026 World Cup.

But asked about Messi’s “last battles” comment, Argentina coach Lionel Scaloni asked for calm.

“We have to leave him alone, he knows that we will not be the ones to close the door on him. He can stay with us as long as he wants, even when he retires...Let him decide what he wants,” he said.

Messi has chance to win a third straight major title with his national side following their 2022 World Cup triumph and their 2021 Copa America win.

The eight-time Ballon d’Or winner referenced veteran team-mates Di Maria and Nicolas Otamendi and said that the success was validation for the difficult barren years the team had suffered.

“The truth is that it’s crazy what this group has done, what the Argentina national team has been doing,” Messi said on TyC Sports.

“It’s not easy for us to be in a final again, for us to compete again to be champions,” he added.

Messi also added that it has been a difficult tournament for Argentina.

“It’s a difficult Copa, evenly matched, with very bad pitches, with high temperatures, very tough teams, and for us to be in a final again is something to enjoy,” he said.

HP squad formed with eye on future Australia Tests

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) yesterday named a few Test cricketers in their four-day High Performance (HP) squad for the upcoming tour in Australia, keeping in mind their 2027 Future Tours Programme (FTP) schedule.

Shadman Islam, Mahmudul Hasan Joy, and Shahadat Hossain Dipu, all part of the current Test setup, are set to tour Australia for their maiden outing in the Oceania region.

The national team is not accustomed to touring Australia regularly, with their last and only Test tour occurring in 2003 which featured two Tests and three ODIs. In 2008, Bangladesh toured Australia again, but only for a three-match ODI series. Since then, the Tigers have fared in Australia for two global tournaments: 2015 ODI World Cup and 2022 T20 World Cup.

As HP team are also scheduled to play a 50-over series and a T20 tournament involving Big Bash teams and a Pakistani side, the selectors included several white-ball cricketers in their squads: Tanzid Hasan Tamim, Afif Hossain, and Shamim Hossain, alongside some budding cricketers fit for the formats.

Although BCB’s plan to send some of their Test cricketers to gain experience on Australian soil is receiving applause from different corners, questions remain on whether their selection for the white-ball matches is justified. Afif, who was a traveling reserve during Bangladesh’s recent T20 World Cup campaign, hasn’t played a game for Bangladesh since December last year, while Shamim’s last outing in national colours came during last year’s New Zealand tour.

A 28-year-old pacer, Abu Hider Rony, also found his place in both white-ball squads despite his last international match for Bangladesh being in 2018. National selector Hannan Sarkar claimed they formed the squads prioritising players for specific formats and picking some players who could go on to represent them at top level.

“We have a few Test cricketers in our four-day team. As we are scheduled to play Tests in Australia in 2027 according to our FTP schedule, we want to prioritise these players,” Hannan was quoted in a BCB video released yesterday.

“Similar goes for one-day and T20 teams. I think it’s a very good stage where the players can express themselves and gather experience,” he added.

HP chairman Naimur Rahman Durjoy earlier insisted that they have arranged the tour for pipeline cricketers’ betterment to “give game-time opportunities”, and now it’s up to them to “utilise the opportunity and take themselves to next level”.

“We want to continue the process and increase the facilities from the board,” he added.

Whether the series will have a significant impact on Bangladesh cricket in the future remains to be seen.

Krejcikova sets up Rybakina clash

REUTERS, London

Barbora Krejcikova reached her first Wimbledon semifinal on Wednesday with a 6-4, 7-6(4) win over Latvian 13th seed Jelena Ostapenko in the battle of former French Open champions.

The Czech 31st seed kept her composure from the back of the court to force her opponent into 35 unforced errors across the match as Ostapenko’s bid for a second Grand Slam title since her first in 2017 unravelled on Court One.

The 27-year-old Ostapenko had power in her serve but struggled to place it, landing less than 50% of her first serve during the opening set. Krejcikova, French Open champion in 2021, broke in the third game and went on to clinch the opener.

Ostapenko rallied to break her opponent in the second set and open a 4-1 lead. However, mistakes once again dogged her game and Krejcikova put together a run of four winning games to go 5-4 up.

The match went to a tiebreak and a brilliant crosscourt forehand from Krejcikova found the far line to give her a mini-break from which she went on to close out the match, sealing her first win over the Latvian in their four most recent encounters.

The Czech will face 2022 Wimbledon champion Elena Rybakina, who beat Elina Svitolina 6-3, 6-2, in the other quarterfinal.

Over the course of the last five days, the grasscourt major had started to resemble an indoor tournament with matches on the two main showcourts taking place under cover.

The retractable roof on Centre Court was finally open under a clear blue sky on Wednesday as Rybakina produced a majestic performance in front of Britain’s Queen Camilla to reach the last four for the second time in three years.

The Russian-born Kazakh, the only women’s champion left in the draw, sealed the first set with a 115mph thunderbolt and fired down another ace - her seventh of the match - to complete the one-sided victory.

England pacer Gus Atkinson celebrates after castling West Indies captain Kraigg Brathwaite on Day 1 of the first Test at Lord’s yesterday. On his debut, the 26-year-old right-arm pacer was the destroyer-in-chief for his side as he returned seven wickets for 45 to help bundle out the visitors for 121.

UNHRC adopts resolution for Rohingya return

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The United Nations Human Rights Council yesterday unanimously adopted a resolution emphasising on sustainable solution to the Rohingya crisis through their repatriation by creating a congenial environment in Myanmar's Rakhine and ensuring justice and accountability for them.

The resolution was adopted during the ongoing 56th session of the council in Geneva, according to a statement issued by the Permanent Mission of Bangladesh to the UN Office and other international organisations in Geneva.

The statement says Bangladesh took the initiative for the resolution titled "The situation of human rights of Rohingya Muslims and other minorities in Myanmar" and it was placed on behalf of all member states of the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation.

The resolution was adopted following intense and long discussion.

Shanchita Haque, acting permanent representative of the Bangladesh mission, said with limited resources and different challenges, it is not possible for Bangladesh to give shelter to the huge number of Rohingyas for an indefinite period.

"The international community should support Bangladesh in the repatriation by realising the importance of the causes of Bangladesh's concerns," she added.

Pakistan's ISI gets power to intercept calls

"The federal government in the interest of national security and in the apprehension of any offence, is pleased to authorise officers ... to intercept calls and messages or to trace calls through any telecoms system," said the notice, seen by Reuters.

The move was opposed in parliament by the opposition Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) party of jailed former prime minister Imran Khan.

Khan had previously backed the ISI's surveillance of politicians' telephone calls, or even his own, in the absence of legal authorisation.

BIRTH CONTROL ITEMS

Govt stock nearing exhaustion

RASHIDUL HASAN

The government's family planning efforts are likely to be seriously hindered as supplies of contraceptives at the field-level offices are running dangerously low.

At present, there is no injectable contraceptive in any upazila and the stock of birth control pills will run out in a few months, according to officials of the Directorate General of Family Planning (DGFP). The stock of implants has also run out.

The reason for the supply running low is a halt in procurement for months due to a legal battle at the High Court.

Although the legal battle has ended recently and the procurement process has resumed, the DGFP officials cannot give a timeline for when the birth prevention materials, which are distributed for free, will be available at the field level.

Subsequently, the DGFP has started rationing and redistributing the current stock, they added.

The eligible couples in Bangladesh are provided seven options for contraception: permanent system for male and female, intrauterine devices, implants, oral pills, condoms and injectables.

At the end of May, there is no stock of the oral contraceptive pill Sukhi (3rd gen) in 287 upazilas, according to the DGFP stock status report. There is no stock of Sukhi (2nd Gen) in 414 upazilas.

The stock of the other oral contraceptive pill Apon is 13.33 million cycles and was projected to run out in June, according to the report.

While procurement of 45 million cycles of Sukhi (3rd gen) is under process, it will take several months to get the supplies in hand, according to DGFP officials.

There are no injectables in 462 upazilas. The stock of 0.151 million vials was supposed to run out soon, too.

The current stock of condoms is 20.32 million, and this stock can be used up to November.

Population experts fear that the scarcity of birth control materials will increase mother and child mortality rates as eligible couples might go for an unintended pregnancy causing abortion.

Armed group claims control of town in Shan state

AFP, Yangon

Myanmar ethnic minority fighters said yesterday they have seized a town along a key trade highway to China following days of clashes with junta troops.

The town of Naungcho "is totally ours," General Tar Bhone Kyaw of the Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) told AFP.

Earlier yesterday a military source told AFP that ethnic minority fighters were in control of "most" of Naungcho.

Myanmar's northern Shan state has been rocked by clashes since late last month when an alliance of ethnic armed groups renewed an offensive along the highway that runs from second city Mandalay to China's Yunnan province.

Naungcho is around 50 kilometres (30 miles) along the highway from the former British hill station of Pyin Oo Lwin, home to the military's elite officer training academy.

Another road from the town leads to Taunggyi, the capital of Shan state. AFP was unable to reach a junta spokesman for comment.

Myanmar's borderlands are home to myriad ethnic armed groups who have battled the military since independence from Britain in 1948 for autonomy and control of lucrative resources.

Ukraine will stop Putin

Biden tells Nato in forceful speech, promises new air defences for Kyiv

REUTERS, Washington

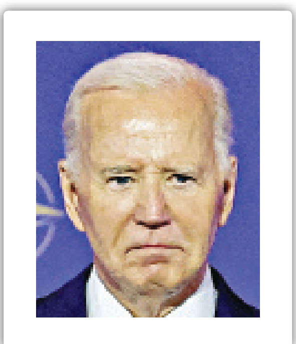
US President Joe Biden pledged to forcefully defend Ukraine against Russia's invasion at the Nato summit in Washington on Tuesday evening, using the global stage to try to show allies at home and abroad that he can still lead.

Biden, 81, has endured 12 days of withering questions about his fitness for office as some of his fellow Democrats on Capitol Hill and campaign donors fear that he will lose the November 5 election after a halting debate performance on June 27.



"(Vladimir) Putin wants nothing less, nothing less, than Ukraine's total subjugation ... and to wipe Ukraine off the map," Biden said in his welcome to Nato member states to the summit, referring to the Russian president. "Ukraine can and will stop Putin."

Biden spoke off of a teleprompter with a strong and confident voice and largely avoided the verbal flubs and signs of confusion that marked his debate performance.

"Today Nato is stronger than it's ever been in its history," he said. Biden also announced a major package of air defences for Ukraine.

The air defences "will help to protect Ukrainian cities, civilians, and soldiers," Biden said in a joint statement with other leaders, adding that they would look to send dozens more shorter range systems in the coming months.

The US pledge comes on top of two new Patriot systems already being given by Germany and Romania, and one the Netherlands has said it is putting together with parts from other allies, reports Reuters.

The centrepiece of the Nato summit is set to be new commitments of military and humanitarian aid to Ukraine. US Secretary of State Antony Blinken said the summit would "further strengthen" the war-torn country's path to Nato membership.

Zelensky, who arrived in Washington on Tuesday and is due to meet with Biden today, has said Ukraine needs a minimum of seven Patriot systems.

"We are fighting for additional security guarantees for Ukraine - and these are weapons and finances, political support," he said on social media.

Ukraine ultimately wants to join Nato to ward against further future attacks by Russia but candidates have to be approved by all of the alliance's members, some of which are wary of provoking a direct conflict with Russia.

Some members want the alliance to make clear Ukraine is moving toward Nato "irreversibly" and are keen for language in a summit statement beyond the alliance's pledge last year that "Ukraine's future is in Nato."

Scaloni hails grit of Messi & Co

REUTERS, East Rutherford

Argentina's path to the Copa America final has been no bed of roses, coach Lionel Scaloni said, as he lauded his players for their performance in Tuesday's 2-0 semifinal win over Canada.

Canada, ranked 48th in the world, played high-energy football and looked to turn the match into a physical battle but Argentina's quality shone through in the end.

Julian Alvarez and Lionel Messi scored to secure Argentina's spot in the final of a third straight major tournament after their victories at the 2022 World Cup and Copa America in 2021.

"It is extremely tough to reach another final. It is tough because we know how hard it is to get there," Scaloni told reporters.

"The bar has been set very high. Everyone thought it was going to be a bed of roses and it wasn't like that at all. Canada proved it today by being a very difficult opponent."

Mummified climber found in Peru 22 yrs later

REUTERS, Santiago

Peruvian police and mountain rescue workers recovered the body of an American climber who went missing in 2002 as glaciers in Peru's highest mountain and surrounding area continue to retreat.

The mummified, skeletal corpse still had well-preserved climbing boots, crampons and clothing, as well as a driver's license and passport belonging to William Stampfl.

Stampfl is suspected to have died in an avalanche more than 20 years ago.

In a statement, police said they recovered his body on July 5 at an altitude of 5,200 metres (17,060.37 ft), well below Huascaran's 6,768-metre summit.

Quota protests heat up as govt mulls hard line

STAR REPORT

Ignoring police warnings and ministers' calls to step back, anti-quota protesters yesterday broke barricades on roads and went ahead with their "Bangla Blockade", leading to a face-off with the law enforcers.

Sporadic incidents of clashes and chases were reported in two districts during the four-hour-long blockade that left at least 20 students injured in Cumilla and Chattogram.

The students said they would continue their demonstrations until parliament enacts a law to reform the quota system, keeping five percent quota for underprivileged communities.

They would bring out processions and hold rallies in all educational institutions across the country at 4:00pm today, said Nahid Islam, a key organiser of the anti-quota campaign.

Students of public universities and colleges along with jobseekers have been demonstrating against the quota system in government jobs for the last 11 days. They occupied key city intersections, major highways, and rail lines.

PM'S CHINA VISIT

Dhaka now has to play its cards right

Say int'l relations experts

PORIMOL PALMA

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's China visit has laid the foundation for a forward-looking and expansive relationship and Dhaka now needs to play its due role to make the most of it, according to international relations analysts.

Following their meeting on July 10, Hasina and Chinese President Xi Jinping announced the elevation of the bilateral relationship to "Comprehensive Strategic Partnership of Cooperation" (CSPC) from the "Strategic Partnership of Cooperation" established in 2016.

The elevation of the bilateral relationship to CSPC means the cooperation will deepen in all the sectors possible keeping in mind Bangladesh's vision for 2041, said M Humayun Kabir, a former diplomat.

Xi and Hasina agreed to "foster greater synergy between development strategies of the two countries", according to the joint statement issued on the conclusion of Hasina's three-day tour.

The Asian giant has huge capabilities in funding, technology, clean energy, healthcare, infrastructure and so on, according to Kabir.

NBFIs' bad loans surge to a record Tk 23,208 crore

MD MEHEDI HASAN

Defaulted loans at non-bank financial institutions (NBFIs) soared 38 percent to a record Tk 23,208.7 crore at the end of 2023, raising concerns over the sector's deteriorating health.

The toxic assets accounted for a record 32 percent of the total disbursed loans of Tk 73,560.5 crore in the sector, up from 31.55 percent a year earlier, according to data from the Bangladesh Bank.

The data on 35 NBFIs' bad loans comes when economists have raised concerns over vulnerabilities in Bangladesh's financial sector due to rising defaulted loans and a lack of corporate governance.

Industry insiders said the central bank is largely responsible for the state of the NBFI sector as its supervision was not strict.

The toxic assets are legacy loans from the large scams and irregularities seen in the sector a few years ago, said Kanti Kumar Saha, chief executive officer of Alliance Finance.

As a result, the four NBFIs have become ailing institutions with more than 90 percent of their loans going bad.

The syndicate of PSC officials and employees that leaked the questions of cadre and non-cadre exams was involved in leaking questions of other recruitment tests as well, investigators have found.

The investigators have also listed at least 24 names that came up during the confessions of those arrested in this connection, said sources involved in the ongoing probe.

They added that those named are currently working in different government departments, including the cadre service, and some are high officials.

Coordinated by Sayed Abed Ali, a former driver of Public Service Commission chairman, the syndicate spread its tentacles throughout the country.

It has so far leaked question papers of at least 30 government exams, including those for the recruitment of health cadres, polytechnic institute instructors, deputy assistant engineers of the public works ministry, upazila assistant education officers, auditors, and nurses.

Intelligence sources said the syndicate was even Junta 'trying to destroy country'

Warns UN special rapporteur

AFP, Bangkok

Myanmar's junta appears to be "trying to destroy a country it cannot control", the UN special rapporteur to the country warned yesterday.

Clashes between an alliance of ethnic minority armed groups and the military have shredded a Beijing-brokered truce in January.

The ceasefire had briefly halted widespread fighting in the northern part of the Southeast Asian nation since a military coup ended democratic rule in 2021.

"The junta is on its heels, it's losing troops, it's losing military facilities, it is literally losing ground," UN special rapporteur Tom Andrews said during a briefing to the national security body of neighbouring Thailand.

"It almost appears as if the Junta is trying to destroy a country that it cannot control."

The military's response to its losses has been to attack civilians, he said, adding there had been a substantial increase in the number of attacks on schools, hospitals and monasteries in the last six months.

recruitments to the posts of 9th grade (formerly 1st class) and 10th to 13th grades (formerly 2nd class), the appointments should be made on the basis of merit. It added that the existing quota system for direct recruitment to those posts was abolished.

On June 5 this year, the HC delivered the verdict following a writ petition filed by Ohidul Islam Tushar and six other children of freedom fighters, challenging the legality of the circular.

On that day, agitators started staging demonstrations at different educational institutions, including Dhaka University, protesting the HC verdict.

They took to the streets on July 1 demanding the reinstatement of the 2018 circular.

Students at different institutions across the country intensified their movement on July 4 as the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court did not stay the HC verdict following a government petition.

The protesters are continuing the movement now, demanding reforms to the quota system by formulating a law.

In the judgement released yesterday, the HC directed the respondents to the writ petition to restore the quota for the children and grandchildren of the freedom fighters. It also directed them to keep the quotas for district, women, people with physical challenges, ethnic groups and others, if there are any.

The HC further ordered the government authorities to publish a notification in this regard as soon as possible, preferably within three months from the date of receipt of its order.

Deputy Attorney General Sk Shaifuzzaman, who received a copy of the HC verdict's portion, told The Daily Star that the details of the findings and grounds, on which the HC delivered the verdict, would be known once the full text of the judgement is released.

He said no appeal can be moved before the Appellate Division challenging the HC verdict without the full text.

"The full text is necessary so the Appellate Division can examine whether the verdict is correct."

On July 10, the Appellate Division issued a four-week status quo on the subject matter and the HC judgement on it.

The status-quo order means the quota system will not remain in force until the Appellate Division's further order, legal experts told The Daily Star.

Quota protests heat up their agitations until yesterday.

However, police yesterday said that they would take legal action if the protesters continued to block roads and cause public sufferings even after the Supreme Court "directed to maintain status quo in respect of subject matter".

Around the same time the police made the announcement, Chhatra League President Saddam Hossain in a press briefing at Dhaka University said Chhatra League was ready to face those trying to use the movement to gain political mileage.

Police yesterday mobilised additional forces and kept riot cars and water cannons in Shahbagh and some key intersections in Dhaka.

Law enforcers put barricades at Shahbagh intersection, but several thousand students coming in from Dhaka University breached it around 5:00pm.

The law enforcers, however, surrounded them and did not let them go beyond the Birdem Hospital, sparking a tussle. The students chanted "bhua" (fake) towards the police and eventually took position at Shahbagh intersection.

Somoy TV reporter Twoha Khan Tamim and cameraperson Prince Arefin were attacked at Shahbagh, the media outlet reported.

Another group of demonstrators, mostly from Dhaka College and Eden Mohila College, marched towards Shahbagh but were halted by police in New Market area.

They held a brief rally in front of Dhaka College and vowed to continue with their demonstrations.

A section of Jagannath University students joined the protesters at Shahbagh after breaking the lock on the university main gate.

During their march towards Shahbagh, police attempted to stop them at Shankhari Bazar, in front of the CMM Court, and at Tantibazar, but failed.

CLASHES

In Cumilla, at least 10 students, including journalists Anon and Sourav of Comilla University, were injured as police charged truncheons on protesters.

"Of the injured, six were released after treatment at the Cumilla General Hospital while the rest were undergoing treatment there," Fazle Rabbi, director of CGH, told The Daily Star.

According to locals and witnesses, the protesters were chanting slogans against the police in Ansar Camp area near the university. Police charged baton to disperse them and the students retaliated by throwing brick chunks.

Police, later, fired tear gas shells, resulting in injuries, they said.

Nazmul Hasan, additional superintendent of police in Cumilla, said the police were there to save lives and properties.

In Chattogram city, at least five people were hurt in two clashes between the police and the protesters in Gate No-2 and Tigerpass areas.

Police charged truncheons on the agitators at Tigerpass around 4:40pm as the protesters tried to march defying barricades. Police used truncheons again when the protesters reached Gate No-2 area around 5:00pm.

Afterwards, the students blocked the gate area until 7:30pm.

CROSSING THE LINE

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan said the students were crossing the line.

Asked if the government would take action if the students did not withdraw their protest programmes, the home minister, during a press conference, said, "They are educated and intelligent. Why would they go against the state? They should observe the situation and return."

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader urged the students to go back to their educational institutions and stop their agitation that is causing public sufferings.

The government must take legal actions if anyone tries to capitalise on the emotions of students and attempts to create anarchy, he said.

DMP Additional Commissioner (Crime and Ops) KH Mahid Uddin yesterday said they would take legal action if quota protesters continued to block roads.

There is no logic behind the movement after the Supreme Court issued a status quo order, he said urging the students to respect the law and the SC.

"The Dhaka Metropolitan Police are not only for them [students]. We are accountable to the city dwellers too," he said.

GO BACK TO CLASSROOMS

The University Grants Commission issued a letter to vice-chancellors of all universities and asked them to take necessary measures to bring the anti-quota demonstrators back to classrooms and create an environment conducive to education.

It said the students should return to their educational institutions and resume studies.

"If the protesting students wish, they can present their arguments to the court through their lawyer. The court would consider it ... ," it said.

Jubo League leader, two others sued the CSA case are Arif Billah alias Nasim, a former senior vice-president of Mohipur thana unit of Chhatra League, and Jubo League activist Roni Hossain of Kalapara. Jubo League leader Shamim contested for the post of chairman in the recent Kalapara upazila election and was defeated.

According to the case statement, Arif and Roni following the instructions of Shamim Tuesday noon uploaded a video clip on their Facebook pages which contained offensive content.They are accused of attempting to destroy communal harmony and deteriorating law and order by spreading misinformation on Facebook. Allegations have also been brought against the three of tarnishing the image of the state minister.

Speaking to The Daily Star, Arif said, "I don't know anything about the case. After the Kalapara upazila polls on May 29, I have been away from the area. Now I'm not involved in local politics. Yet I'm still held responsible whenever something happens in the area. I also want a proper investigation ... ."

This correspondent tried to contact the two other accused in the case, but they did not pick up their phones.

Over "insulting" state minister Mohibbur, Didar Uddin Ahmed, general secretary of Kalapara municipality unit Awami League, filed a GD with Kalapara Police Station on Wednesday, while Rakibul Hasan Ferdous, a member of Rangabali Sadar union unit AL, lodged another GD with Rangabali Police Station on Thursday.

The complainants accused Arif, Roni, and other unidentified individuals of tarnishing the reputation of the state minister by spreading propaganda on social media.

OC Ali Ahmed of Kalapara Police Station could not be reached despite several attempts, while OC Helal Uddin of Rangabali Police Station refused to comment.

Names of some big fish come up in probe involved in the question leaks of recruitment exams of banks and medical admission tests.

It all came to light after the Criminal Investigation Department arrested 17 people, including six officials and employees of the PSC, for their involvement in leaking questions of a railway recruitment test on July 5.

According to investigators, the racket, which began its activities back in 2002, has made huge sums of money over the years.

All the arrestees had multiple suspicious transactions in their bank accounts. The CID arrested PSC office assistant Sajedul Islam with bank cheques worth Tk 10 crore in his possession, they said.

Another arrestee, PSC dispatch rider Khalilur Rahman was found to own wealth worth around Tk 50-60 crore.

Probe sources further said the syndicate had supplied the questions of the railway recruitment test to at least 300 candidates.

Abed Ali alone collected around Tk 7-8 lakh each from at least 60 of them.

The CID is now listing the names of the candidates along with those of absconding syndicate members, including former and current PSC officials.

CID Chief Mohammad Ali Miah, also additional inspector general of police, told The Daily Star yesterday, "We're conducting drives to arrest those who went into hiding after the 17 were arrested.

"We have information that the syndicate started leaking questions since 2002. We've been chasing this the group for the last six months."

He said, "Many big fish are involved. We're hopeful of arresting all those involved soon."

A CID source said Abed Ali's involvement in question leaks came to light during a medical admission test in 2010.

Cops had arrested him and some others at that time and a case was filed with Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station in 2011. After the PSC was informed about Abed's involvement, he was fired in 2014.

Abed admitted his involvement after both arrests.

Sources further said that he even had links with those involved in printing exam question papers. Suspected printing press workers are being investigated in this regard.

Former army personnel Noman Siddique, another arrestee, was found involved in leaking medical exam questions in 2015, investigators said, adding that he dragged his colleague Priyonath Roy into the racket. They both tried to recommend two candidates for a job in the family planning department.

Noman was involved in leaking bank recruitment exam questions for the next couple of years as well.

Meanwhile, the CID yesterday filed prayers with a Dhaka court for a 10-day remand for each of 11 of the 17 arrestees.

No remand was sought for the six others, including Abed Ali, as they have already made confessional statements before courts following their arrests on Sunday and Monday.

Jewel Chakma, additional special superintendent of the CID, submitted the remand prayers for the 11, including two PSC deputy directors -- Abu Zafar and Jahangir Alam, and assistant director SM Alamgir Kabir, and Noman.

Asked whether action would be taken against officials whose names come up during the probe, Public Administration Minister Farhad Hossain said, "If anyone breaks service rules .. if they resort to fraud or deception, action will be taken as per the law.

"We're paying close attention to this matter."

the executive branch can be challenged in court."

He said that the protesters could present their arguments through lawyers and assured that the court would consider them seriously.

The chief justice urged the senior lawyers to provide necessary guidance to the protesters in this regard.

He made the remarks during an appeal hearing regarding a previous High Court verdict that made 16 recommendations to parliament for forming an independent cadre service for the Anti-Corruption Commission to build a corruption-free nation.

Earlier, the chamber judge of the Appellate Division stayed the HC verdict, saying the Supreme Court could not advise parliament.

NBFIs' bad loans surge to a record

Saha, also vice-chairman of Bangladesh Leasing and Finance Companies Association (BLFCA), said the loans that were disbursed in the last one or two years are regular.

"Now, most of the NBFIs are trying to do better," he said, adding that the industry is looking to upgrade its manpower for improved performance.

Md Golam Sarwar Bhuiyan, chairman of the BLFCA, said that not only the NBFIs, but the overall economy is now facing multiple challenges, and that is why the bad loans in the sector have increased.

Bad loans jumped after the central bank in 2022 withdrew the deferral facility extended during the pandemic for paying back loans, said Bhuiyan.

Due to the confidence crisis in the sector, deposits in NBFIs fell to Tk 44,304 crore in the January-March quarter from Tk 44,830 crore in the previous quarter.

Dhaka now has to play its cards right advantage of the new relationship with China," he said.

The two sides agreed to deepen cooperation in trade, investment and finance, and to conclude the joint feasibility study on a China-Bangladesh free trade agreement.

"This will significantly boost trade between the two countries," said Kabir, also the president of Bangladesh Enterprise Institute, a non-profit, non-political research centre.

China is Bangladesh's largest trading partner by a wide margin, with bilateral trade amounting to upwards of $25 billion. However, Bangladesh's exports account for less than 3 percent of the sum.

"China has completed the entry procedures for Bangladesh's fresh mango exports to China, and welcomes Bangladesh to expand exports of jute, leather, aquatic products and other high-quality special products to China. The two sides agreed to further strengthen communication on the export of high-quality Bangladeshi agricultural products to China," the joint statement said.

Ahead of the three-day visit, there was expectation that Beijing would provide a $5 billion loan in yuan for trade facilitation to help Bangladesh cope with the strain on currency reserves, and billions more for projects.

At a press briefing after Hasina's meeting with Li Qiang on Wednesday, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud said China has agreed to provide 1 billion yuan (about $137 million) in assistance. However, the joint statement does not mention this assistance extended to Bangladesh.

China has now become more cautious in giving out loans after it was blamed for the economic crisis in some countries such as Sri Lanka, said Kabir, who served as Bangladesh's ambassador to Nepal and the US and the high commissioner to Australia.

In case of Bangladesh too, China is exercising the same caution.

For instance, China has decided to form a joint technical committee for assessing the projects proposed by Bangladesh, Kabir said.

"I would say that this visit is meant to build a relationship that is futuristic and expansive," he added.

China committed to provide about $20 billion during Xi's visit to Dhaka in 2016 for a host of mega projects. Some of the projects are yet to be implemented. So Bangladesh did not get the full amount pledged.

"So, China wants better scrutiny this time -- Beijing would like to look at the nitty-gritty of the projects this time," said Mahbub Uz Zaman, former ambassador to China.

Xi spoke about building party-to-party relationship between the Communist Party of China (CPC) and the ruling Awami League in Bangladesh. He said "good governance requires good party".

Asked what this means, Imtiaz Ahmed, executive director of the Centre for Alternatives, said: "This is Chinese approach of building relationship, which they do everywhere. Through this, they find it easier to implement their policies."

The Awami League can learn discipline and governance of the party from the CPC, said Ahmed, also a professor of international relations at the University of Dhaka.

Xi also assured Hasina of support for repatriating the more than a million Rohingya. However, analysts say how far it will work will depend on the situation in Myanmar, which is now going through a civil war.

Repatriation has not been possible in the last seven years despite several efforts including under a tripartite mechanism under Chinese leadership.

On this, Kabir said: "Chinese assurance is great and is required for the solution, but we will have to wait to see what happens in Myanmar, particularly in the Rakhine State in the days to come."

SOUTHERN DEV INITIATIVE

China supports Bangladesh's plan

Says joint statement

UNB, Dhaka

China has supported Bangladesh's plan to implement the Southern Integrated Development Initiatives (SIDI) under the framework of the Belt and Road Initiative to help this region achieve balanced and sustainable development.

Chinese enterprises will be encouraged to take an active part in the construction of subways, metro rail and roads, oil and gas exploration, hospitals and water resources and sewage management projects in Bangladesh in a proper way, according to a joint statement issued after Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's July 8-10 official visit to Beijing.

Bangladesh and China will accelerate existing cooperation projects, continue to expand areas of cooperation, and work towards more fruitful outcomes in practical cooperation between the two countries.

The two sides agreed to advance projects such as the Burn Unit in Chattogram Medical College Hospital, the No. 6 Bangladesh-China Friendship Bridge Renovation, the No. 9 Bangladesh-China Friendship Bridge and the National Emergency Operation Center in Bangladesh.

The Chinese side will continue to provide support for training programmes on human resources development of Bangladesh under the framework of "China Aid".

The two sides agreed to step up experience sharing on development planning and economic development policies, and further deepen high-quality Belt and Road cooperation under the principle of planning together, building together and benefiting together.

Bangladesh and China also have agreed to enhance

Lost in Kerala, found in Kamrangirchar

Police recover 207 smuggled smartphones; 2 siblings held

MUNTAKIM SAAD

Nearly four months back, an Indian medical student, Shaheen Rawshan, lost his iPhone 15 Pro Max in Kerala. After about three months, he tracked its location to the East Rasulpur area of Kamrangirchar in Bangladesh.

As he contacted a police official of Lalbagh Division of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, a team of Kamrangirchar police recovered his iPhone from a house in East Rasulpur and arrested two siblings in this connection.

Police also recovered 207 smartphones -- including 138 iPhones smuggled from neighbouring countries, including India, by evading customs duty -- one MacBook and Tk 94,000 during a drive on July 3, Imran Hossain Molla, assistant commissioner of Lalbagh Zone, told The Daily Star.

The matter came to the fore yesterday after the DMP provided a press release in this regard.

The arrestees are -- Shakil, 24, and his brother Shahin, 21.

"They [Shahin and Shakil] used to buy these stolen mobile phones from different people in different cities of India like Mumbai, Kolkata, Chennai, Hyderabad and Kerala and smuggled them into Bangladesh illegally by evading customs duty and would sell them," the police official said.

Such smuggling of stolen smartphones has become frequent nowadays, with several incidents reported of recovered stolen smartphones in both India and Bangladesh.

On June 30, a team of Shahjahanpur police recovered a stolen iPhone belonging to a Kolkata resident from Keraniganj, which she lost in the Park Circus area nearly a year ago.

On November 7 last year, Ferdous Miah, a deputy jailer from Dinajpur, was robbed in Dhaka's Dhanmondi area, losing his Samsung S23 Ultra mobile phone.

There are transnational rackets active in Bangladesh and India that are smuggling stolen and unauthorised mobile phones between the two countries, law enforcers found.

After filing a GD and using a tracking app, he located the phone months later in Gujarat, India.

There are transnational rackets active in Bangladesh and India that are smuggling stolen and unauthorised mobile phones between the two countries, law enforcers found.

High-end phones like iPhones, known for their hard-to-alter IMEI numbers, are risky to sell locally, so criminals smuggle them in a different country, according to law enforcers.

Besides, there is a significant demand in Bangladesh for unauthorised mobile phones that evade customs duties and taxes upon entry.

Imran said Shaheen, an Indian citizen of Kerala, lost his iPhone on March 27. Later on July 2, he contacted him for recovery of the phone.

On July 3, Kamrangirchar police raided the East Rasulpur house and recovered 190 smartphones including 138 iPhones. Based on their information, they raided a shop in Orchard Point shopping mall in Dhanmondi and recovered 17 more smartphones.

A case was filed with Kamrangirchar Police Station under the Special Powers Act following the drive.

The police official said the arrestees maintained communications with multiple contacts in different countries, including India, exchanging information and smuggling smartphones from neighbouring countries.

The investigation uncovered videos, photographs of parcels containing smartphones, and various details related to the illegal sale of stolen mobile phones, he added.

HC order on Yunus' petition July 21

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court will deliver on July 21 its order on a petition, filed by Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus and six other officials of Grameen Telecom, challenging a Dhaka court's order that framed charges against them.

The bench of Justice Md Nazrul Islam Talukder and Justice Kazi Ebadoth Hossain yesterday fixed July 21 for passing the order after conducting hearing on the petition.

Abdullah-Al-Mamun appeared for Prof Yunus, while Khurshid Alam Khan and Additional Attorney General Sk Md Morshed and Deputy Attorney General AKM Amin Uddin Manik represented the ACC and the state respectively.

Prof Yunus and six others of Grameen Telecom on Monday submitted the petition seeking an HC order to scrap the case's trial proceedings.

The case was filed by the ACC on the charge of misappropriating about Tk 25.22 crore of Grameen Telecom Workers' Profit Participation Fund.

On June 12, a Dhaka court framed charges against Yunus and 13 others.

Hazaribagh and Lalbagh to become green hotspots

$105 million project taken by Rajuk, GIZ

MD ABBAS

Hazaribagh was once surrounded by tanneries for which untreated waste was dumped into the Buriganga river, polluting the environment.

Considering the environmental threat, the government relocated the tanneries to Savar in 2017.

Now, dilapidated buildings and abandoned machinery prevail on the site, but long-term tannery operations have accumulated dangerous levels of chromium in the soil.

We only talk about the plan, but in reality, the decision to relocate the tanneries in Hazaribagh has not been fully implemented. If a plan is not implemented properly, there is no point in just planning.

To make the area sustainably liveable for residents, a plan titled "Climate Resilient and Green Action Plan (CRGAP)", prepared by Rajuk and Deutsche Gesellschaft für Internationale Zusammenarbeit (GIZ) with the support of the City Climate Finance Gap Fund, has been finalised to transform Hazaribagh and Lalbagh into a green hotspot.

Under the project, contaminated soil will be cleaned up, and new environment-friendly block-based structures will be built in the Hazaribagh area, Md Ashraful Islam, chief town planner of Rajuk, told The Daily Star.

MIRANZILLA HARIJAN COLONY

SC extends status quo on eviction

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday extended its order that on Wednesday directed Dhaka South City Corporation (DSCC) to maintain status quo on eviction proceedings at Miranzilla Harijan Colony in Dhaka's Bangshal area till further order.

The apex court also asked the High Court to dispose of the writ petition that was filed challenging the eviction move at the colony in two months.

A five-member bench of the Appellate Division headed by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan passed the order after hearing a petition filed by the DSCC that sought a stay on an HC order.

Following the SC order, the authorities cannot conduct any eviction at Miranzilla Harijan Colony.

On June 13, the HC issued one-month status quo on the eviction proceedings in the colony and ordered the DSCC to arrange accommodation for the affected residents.

Following yesterday's SC order, the authorities cannot conduct any eviction at Miranzilla Harijan Colony, Barrister Manoj Kumar Bhowmik, one of the writ petitioners, told The Daily Star.

Barrister Sara Hossain and Barrister Aneek R Haque appeared for the writ petitioners while Advocate Murad Reza argued for the DSCC during the hearing yesterday.

DESTRUCTION OF FOREST

26 including AL men sued

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

The Department of Environment has filed a case against 26 named and 10-15 unnamed persons, most of them being activists of ruling Awami League, over destruction of mangrove forest in Sonadia Island of Cox's Bazar district.

The accused had ravaged around 562 acres of the mangrove forest for fish and shrimp enclosures and salt fields since last January, according to the case filed under the Bangladesh Environment Protection Act.

They also encroached on government land and felled mangrove trees across 4,916 hectares of Ecologically Critical Area in at least seven places under Kutubjom union.

Faizul Kabir, inspector of the Department of Environment Cox's Bazar district office, filed the case with Maheshkhali Police Station on July 9, said Sukanto Chakraborty, officer-in-charge of the station.

The named accused are: Jasim Uddin, 40, president of Maheshkhali upazila unit of Sramik League; Sajedul Karim, 45, general secretary of upazila unit of Jubo League; Nurul Amin Khoka, 41, a former member of Qutubjom Union Parishad; Md Siddique Rimon, 39, an incumbent member of the union parishad; Nurul Amin, 62, former union parishad chairman; Saber Ahmed, 48; Mohsin Anwar, 50; Osman Ali, 61; Rabiur Alam, 42; Md Farooq, 41; Jahangir Alam, 42; Zafar Alam, 60; Md Tarek, 35; Amiruzzaman, 62; Sazzadul Karim, 38; Shahadat Kabir, 45; Sonamia, 37; Shahidullah Sikder, 68; Md Nezam, 43; Amir Hossain, 54; Nasir Uddin, 50; Shafi Alam, 45; Md Alam Sharif, 47; Zainal Ahmad, 45; Amir Hossain Company, 48; and Azizul Haque, 46.

Jamir Uddin, deputy director of DoE in Cox's Bazar, confirmed the matter.

OC Sukanto said necessary action will be taken against the accused.

Tree plantation and development projects, including residential, commercial, and recreational centres, will be established there, he said.

In the historically significant Lalbagh, the project will protect the heritage sites, and will build different climate-resilient developments, including parks and walkways, and structures will be made on both sides of the Buriganga, he added.

Ashraful said once the US $105 million project is completed, the capital's greenery will increase by 25 to 30 percent.

"We will complete the preliminary work by this year and start implementing the project by January," he added. They expect to complete the project by 2029, he added.

To brief about the project, a day-long workshop was organised at the Rajuk Auditorium yesterday.

Addressing as chief guest, Housing and Public Works Minister RAM Obaidul Muktadir Chowdhury said a plan that is not implemented is worthless.

"We only talk about the plan, but in reality, the decision to relocate the tanneries in Hazaribagh has not been fully implemented, and the relocation was not completed properly. If a plan is not implemented properly, there is no point in just planning," he said.

He asked the officials concerned to work properly so that progress is visible by the end of this year.

Rajuk Chairman Siddiqur Rahman Sarker said the plan is designed to guide future green and climate-resilient development.

He reiterated the importance of developing green and environment-friendly infrastructure in Hazaribagh and Lalbagh.

"We want to work together with the local population to create a greener, cleaner, and more sustainable area to ensure a better quality of life. We'll create a green, beautiful, and climate-resilient environment through tree planting, setting up aesthetic parks and playgrounds, and constructing environment-friendly buildings," he added.

Md Fazle Reza Sumon, team leader of CRGAP, presented concerning environmental issues and addressed the necessity of a regeneration plan.

Martina Burkard, acting country director of GIZ Bangladesh, and Nabirul Islam, secretary of the Housing and Public Works Ministry, also spoke at the event.

Quota can be 'logically' reformed

Says Sector Commanders Forum

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The quota system in government jobs can be "logically and realistically" reformed, said Sector Commanders Forum-Liberation War'71 in a statement yesterday.

Its Executive President Md Nurul Alam and Secretary General Haroon Habib came up with remarks at a time when university students have been protesting against the reinstatement of the quota system.

"Most freedom fighters belonged to underprivileged sections of rural areas. They fought for the country's independence, risking their lives. But they were 'ignored and neglected' for decades," said the statement.

The country's half of the total population are women, who are still lagging behind in society, despite different development activities. Even physically challenged and indigenous people are also lagging behind, it said. "So, a considerable ratio of the quota system in government jobs is logical," it added.

A quota system for the development of underprivileged people exists in every corner of the world, the statement said.

"Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman introduced the quota system in the war-torn Bangladesh after independence. However, the freedom fighters could not avail of the opportunity for around 21 years after his assassination in 1975 as the military rulers and their followers, who bore anti-Liberation War sentiments, assumed power during that time," the statement continued.

As a result, many freedom fighters crossed their age limit for government jobs. In 2009, the government extended the quota system as a sign of respect for freedom fighters. In 2018, the government abolished the quota system, and the forum does not think it was rational, it added.

It will be alarming if the anti-liberation force undermines the Liberation War and freedom fighters by intruding into the protesters, the forum said.

Saying that the C-section is prevailing at every corner of the country, the health minister said it has become necessary to find out the root cause behind the rising number.

China has also expressed its support to continue the zero-tariff treatment on 98 percent of taxable items to Bangladesh for a transitional period beyond 2026 when Bangladesh will graduate from LDC status, according to the joint statement.

'ROHINGYA REPATRIATION THE ONLY SOLUTION'

China has pledged to continue to provide support to the "best of its abilities, including providing a platform for dialogue" to help achieve early repatriation of the displaced people to Myanmar.

The two sides shared the view that early repatriation is the only way to resolve the issue concerning the displaced people from Rakhine State of Myanmar, who have taken shelter in Bangladesh, according to the joint statement.

The two sides called on all parties in Myanmar to bridge their differences through dialogue and consultation and underscored the cessation of hostilities in Rakhine State as soon as possible.

Flood situation worsens in Kurigram

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

The ongoing flood situation in Kurigram has deteriorated further as the water levels of the Brahmaputra, Dudhkumar, and Dharla rivers started rising again in 12 hours till yesterday morning.

According to Bangladesh Water Development Board sources, Brahmaputra's water has risen by 10cm since Wednesday evening and was flowing 46cm above danger level at Chilmari Point yesterday morning.

Meanwhile, Dudhkumar was flowing 3cm and Dharla 10cm above danger level at Pateshwari and Bridge points respectively yesterday morning.

"Heavy rains and onrush of water from upstream in India caused the water level to rise again, deteriorating the flood situation," said Rakibul Hasan, executive engineer of BWDB in Kurigram.

Suruj Ali, 65, of Hatia village under Kurigram's Ulipur upazila, said, "After Brahmaputra's water started receding, we hoped the situation would improve. However, the water has started rising again. We are living in an inhumane condition inside these polythene shanties on the BWDB embankment."

Meanwhile, cattle farmers are having a hard time finding fodder for their animals, with vast stretches of pasture land inundated and stocked hay washed away in floodwater.

Around 15 lakh domestic animals have been affected by the flood, said Monakka Ali, district livestock officer in Kurigram.

Meanwhile, the ferry service at Kurigram's Chilmari river-port is suspended as the ghat's connecting road has been submerged.

At least 1,000 people use the ferry service daily to commute from Chilmari to Roumari, Char Rajibpur, Mymensingh, and Jamalpur. Now they have no alternative to using boats to cross the swelling Brahmaputra amid risk while also spending more money.

Prafulla Chauhan, manager of Chilmari Ghat of BIWTC, said the service will resume once the floodwaters recede and the ghat is renovated.

"This ferry ghat is a temporary one. A permanent ghat is under construction," he added.

EROSION WORSENS IN LALMONIRHAT

In Lalmonirhat, even though the flood situation saw gradual improvement, the erosion of the Teesta has worsened, leaving riverbank residents with sleepless nights.

At least 15 houses, a mosque, and around 100 bighas of arable land have been devoured by the river in Gobardhan village under Aditmari upazila since Saturday, while around 50 more homesteads and several hundred bighas of arable land are at risk of erosion, said Matiar Rahman Mati, a union parishad member.

A similar situation prevails in the Dawabari union where 110 homesteads, around 500 bighas of arable land, a government primary school and two mosques have been devoured in the last five days.

At least 300 houses, several hundred bighas of agricultural land and a community clinic are under threat of erosion.

"The BWDB authorities took no steps in this regard. I have dumped 150 sand-filled geo-bags myself, but it is insufficient to stop the erosion," said Mosaddek Hossain Chowdhury, chairman of the union parishad.

Mashiur Rahman, Dawabari Union Parishad chairman, echoed him.

Shunil Kumar, executive engineer of BWDB in Lalmonirhat, said steps will be taken in this regard.

SIRAJGANJ FLOOD

No respite as Jamuna continues to swell

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

The flood situation in Sirajganj continues to deteriorate as Jamuna river's water level has been rising since yesterday morning.

According to Bangladesh Water Development Board in Sirajganj, Jamuna was flowing 37cm and 17cm above danger level at Sirajganj Hard Point and Kazipur Point respectively at noon yesterday.

Rainfall enhanced onrush of upstream water, causing water level to rise by 3cm and 4cm at the two points respectively in previous 12 hours, said Md Nazmul Hossain, sub-divisional engineer of BWDB in Sirajganj.

"The water level is expected to increase till July 14," he added.

At least 336 sq km area in 34 unions in the district have become inundated, leaving over one lakh people marooned, said sources at relief and rehabilitation department in the district.

2 schoolboys die as boat sinks in beel

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Two schoolboys died after a boat capsized in a beel in Sadar upazila of Sherpur yesterday afternoon.

The victims -- Sujon Mia, 14, and Sumon Miah, 14, from Dubarchar Dakshinpara in Sadar upazila -- were eighth-graders at a local high school, said police.

Md Emdadul Haque, officer-in-charge of Sherpur Sadar Police Station, said the teenagers went to the waterbody for a boat ride around 4:30pm.

Suddenly, during the ride, they lost control of the boat due to a heavy current and it sank, said the OC.

On information, police, with support from locals, recovered the bodies and handed them over to the families.

An unnatural death case was filed with the police station, said the OC.

'We've been surviving on just puffed rice'

Flood-hit people grapple with food, water crisis in Jamalpur

SAHIDUL ISLAM NIRAB, Jamalpur

The flood victims in Jamalpur's shoal areas are passing days amid an acute crisis of food and drinking water.

Also, they are having a hard time feeding their domestic animals due to shortage of fodder.

Visiting different shoal areas in Islampur, Sarishabari and Dewanganj upazilas of the district, this correspondent saw flood-affected people have left their homes and sheltered in any possible higher grounds, including railway station, school buildings, bridges and union parishad premises, with their family members and cattle.

Vast stretches of residential and arable lands, roads, markets, fish enclosures and educational institutions have been inundated.

Many of them have been living on dry food for several days without having received any relief.

The flood has so far affected 2,03,028 people of 32 unions and one municipality in the district, according to sources at the relief and rehabilitation department in Jamalpur.

Also, around 1,000 residents in five upazilas of the district lost their homes to erosion by the Jamuna and Brahmaputra rivers.

"We have been surviving on just puffed rice...," said Moynal Ali of Islampur upazila.

Echoing him, Momana Begum of Dewenganj upazila urged the government to provide the victims with food and fodder.

"I have decided to sell four of my cows as I cannot feed them in this situation," said Badsha Miah of Sarishabari upazila.

Shafiur Rahman, deputy commissioner of Jamalpur, said 500 tonnes of rice, Tk 10 lakh cash relief and 4,500 packets of dry food have been allocated for the flood victims in the district, of which 480 tonnes of rice, Tk 6 lakh in cash and 4,050 packets of dry food have already been distributed.

"The UNOs of the flood-affected upazilas have been distributing the relief. If necessary, we will distribute more food among the victims," the DC added.

Rafiqul Islam, executive engineer of BWDB in Jamalpur, said they have taken temporary emergency measures to ensure safety of the residents in riverbank areas.

'MY LADY JANE' shakes up British history with unapologetic romance and whimsy

SHABABA IQBAL

A lot of British history is incredibly depressing: the Black Death, Henry VIII's numerous deceased wives (by his decree), religious wars, and so on. Authors Cynthia Hand, Brodi Ashton, and Jodi Meadows were inspired by all this bleakness to take history into their own hands with their revisionist YA novel, My Lady Jane. This 2017 New York Times bestseller reimagines Lady Jane Grey's tragic, nine-day reign as the pawn Queen of England into a fantastical, swoon-worthy romance that allows Jane to become a player in her own story.

With the guidance of writer and showrunner Gemma Burgess, My Lady Jane translates well into an eight-episode Prime Video series that confirms that history is a lot more fun and watchable when approached with an unapologetically tongue-in-cheek attitude.

Although the series is set in 1553, My Lady Jane wastes no time in establishing its anachronistic, irreverent tone and voice through a hand-drawn, animated prologue that immediately elicits some hearty laughs. Through comically outrageous violence and a brilliantly snarky commentary from an omniscient narrator (Oliver Chris), we are provided with a summary of the actual history and the context behind why 17-year-old Lady Jane Grey (Emily Bader) held any significance for the Tudor dynasty. From there, the show takes off, establishing Jane's predicament as the eldest daughter with no agency in a patriarchal society.

My Lady Jane packs a punch in every way imaginable, but it especially scintillates with the romance. When Jane coincidentally meets her intended, the charismatic Lord Guildford Dudley (Edward Bluemel), their chemistry, although initially antagonistic, is palpable and immediate, making their love story utterly addictive. The show explores a myriad of tropes while the characters deal with their chaotic everyday lives, making each episode more riveting than the one before it. While some moments feel slightly off from the overarching theme, it never detracts from the story's progression.

In some cases, especially in historical pieces, couples are forced to consummate the marriage to add legitimacy, which often robs the woman of her agency. But My Lady Jane works because Guildford never forces that, and the two start their relationship as equals. As Jane and Guildford get to know each other, their disdain slowly becomes toleration, and then a genuine friendship. Their relationship feels believable, and their admiration for each other grows so carefully that when things progress, it is immensely gratifying for viewers to watch.

Notably, the smouldering will-they/won't-they dynamic between Jane and Guildford is not the sole driving force of My Lady Jane. The story delves into numerous layers of political intrigues that revolve around the sickly King Edward VI (Jordan Peters) and his struggle to thwart the ambitions of his bitter half-sister, Mary (Kate O'Flynn), and her cunning partner. However, the most significant narrative element stems from supernatural origins—a conflict between Verities (normal humans) and Ethians (humans who can transform into specific animals). The monarchy, particularly Mary, views Ethians as abominations and places a bounty on their heads, often leading to their demise. The Verities/Ethians division also becomes a reason for Jane and Guildford to deepen their connection beyond just attraction.

The leads are supported by a cast who, as a company, never miss a beat in finding the right balance between heightened drama and smart humour. The show clearly benefits from its primarily female writers' room, who aren't shy about embracing a bawdier and more adult presentation of the story. They capture the book's blithe approach to history while adding bite and intelligence to the dialogue.

However, fans of the historical figure Lady Jane Grey or those expecting a deeper exploration of female empowerment might be left feeling disappointed. The show's focus on light-hearted humour and fantasy elements tends to overshadow the gravity of Jane's real-life struggles and the importance of a woman briefly reigning on the throne.

My Lady Jane doesn't offer much that is new to the already crowded genre of cheekily anachronistic period pieces, such as the popular show Bridgerton. However, it executes the premise very well. The strong chemistry between Bader and Bluemel ensures that the romantic comedy elements are firing on all cylinders—and they truly keep the viewers hooked.

Chashi Alam welcomes first child

Chashi Alam, beloved as 'Habu bhai' in Kajal Arefin Ome's directorial Bachelor Point, has become a father in real life. He and his wife Tultul welcomed their baby on Wednesday (July 10) night.

The actor confirmed the news of the birth of his son to local media on Thursday, stating, "Last night, my wife had a normal delivery. We've named our newborn Nur Farishta."

Last year, Chashi Alam got married to his wife, hosting a small reception with their close family and friends.

Chanchal receives award from Parambrata

Two renowned actors from the Bengali film industry, Chanchal Chowdhury from Bangladesh and Parambrata Chattopadhyay from India, recently crossed paths.

This year, the North American Bengali Conference (NABC) 2024 introduced an award named after the esteemed filmmaker Sunetra Ghatak Chattopadhyay, Parambrata's mother. Chanchal was honoured as the best actor in this category.

The actor expressed his gratitude acknowledging, "My friend, actor Parambrata, presented the award to me. I am deeply honoured to have received an award in the Sunetra Ghatak Memorial Award category from the actor himself."

Established in 1981, NABC is a major event for Bengalis in the US and Canada, featuring various programmes and stars. Every year, celebrities from Bangladesh and West Bengal participate in the festivities.

Work to protect Dharla riverbanks stalled

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

Work for protecting the banks of Dharla river in Kurigram Sadar upazila has remained stalled for over a year now.

As a result, local farmers are worried as the embankment work to save their croplands from possible erosion is still far from completion.

Moreover, nearly a thousand families at Dharla river basin Sardob village under Holokhana union are at serious risk of flooding and river erosion.

However, Water Development Board (WDB) authorities and the contractor concern are blaming each other for the delay as over 60 percent of the work still remain pending.

According to Kurigram WDB, a tender was called to construct a 450-metre portion of the Dharla river embankment protection work at Sardob village in 2021, and contractor Jihan Jennifer Hassan, owner of Foundation Engineers Limited (FEL) in Dhaka, got the Tk 12.93 crore.

Although as per the contract about 1,30,984 cement concrete blocks (CC blocks) was supposed to be constructed, only 25,122 CC blocks have been constructed so far.

Later, a small amount of the CC blocks was dumped at different vulnerable points, but the earth filling work along the river bank still remain incomplete.

The embankment protection work started in May 2021 was scheduled to be completed by May 2023.But surprisingly, after doing only 37 percent of the work the contractor left the project in May 2022, without informing the WDB officials. The contractor also withdrew a partial bill of Tk 3.69 crore before leaving over 60 percent of the work unfinished.

Meanwhile, due to the unfinished work villagers fear that they may have to face flooding this year as usually Sardob is a flood-prone area.

They also urged the authorities concerned to appoint a new contractor and complete the embankment protection work immediately.

While talking, contractor Jennifer Hassan said she had to stop the work midway as she was going through huge financial crisis due to non-payment of bills.

"I can complete the project, if WDB authorities give me a chance to revise the work rate," she said.

Kurigram WDB Sub-Divisional Engineer Ismat Toha said the contractor concern stopped the embankment protection work without consulting with the WDB officials. The contractor was served a show-cause notice, but she did not even bother to reply, Ismat said.

'Hungry' Colombia up past Uruguay despite going down to 10 men in yesterday's incident-packed semifinal in North Carolina.

Facing them are a team that have not been pushed to the edge in the USA. Argentina conceded just one goal throughout the tournament and boast a balanced and experienced squad, marshalled by inspirational Lionel Messi at his career's twilight, oozing with self-belief on the back of three major titles in three years.

Historically, Colombia have struggled against Argentina, with just one win in their last 12 meetings. However, this underdogs status might work in Colombia's favour, allowing them to play with a sense of freedom and without the pressure that often accompanies the superior side on paper.

Their last Copa America encounter saw heroics from Argentina goalkeeper Emiliano Martinez making the difference in tiebreakers. Nevertheless, the Men in Yellow can also draw inspiration from a historic match dating back 30 years, when they handed Diego Maradona's Argentina one of their heaviest defeats ever, a 5-0 thrashing, in a crucial 1994 World Cup qualifiers fixture, advancing into the main event as a result.

A couple of individuals who could script Colombia's success are their coach Nestor Lorenzo, who has guided the side in 25 unbeaten matches, and their talismanic captain James Rodriguez. With Lorenzo having been an assistant coach for Argentina, the 58-year-old is relishing the match-up with his homeland, up against compatriot and counterpart Lionel Scaloni.

"This is going to be very nice. I am going to be competing with players I met during my career and who I admire a lot," said Lorenzo after beating Uruguay, the charges of revered Argentine coach Marcelo Bielsa.

"This is a group that wants to be a protagonist, that wants to win something, that is hungry and that is growing. We are moving forward," he added.

On the individual side of things, Lorenzo will bank on Rodriguez to play the protagonist-in-chief. The in-form playmaker yesterday became the first player to register six assists in a single edition of the competition, surpassing Messi's five assists in 2021.

The final, set to take place in Miami three days later (Monday 6 am, Bangladesh time), will be the first-ever Copa America final meeting between these two sides. While Argentina are seen as favourites to seal a record 16th title, Colombia's solid form leading up to their second-ever final could help etch their name in football folklore once again.

by the Anti-Corruption Commission. The ACC has been probing allegations of amassing illegal wealth by him in Chattogram and Dhaka.

In the probe report to the Police Headquarters, the CMP has recommended firing Kamrul for embezzling the money, according to sources.

The probe committee was led by CMP Additional Commissioner (crime and operation) Abdul Mannan Miah, while Deputy Commissioner (Traffic-North) Joynul Abedin Tito was its member.

It also recommended punitive measures against Inspector Atiqur Rahman of CMP's Detective Branch and two other staffers of the billing section for their involvement in the embezzlement. Atiqur was in-charge of the section until September 9, 2023, said a CMP source.

CMP Additional Commissioner Mannan told The Daily Star, "The internal probe committee found ADC Kamrul and others guilty, and we have forwarded the findings to the Police Headquarters with the recommendation of sacking him."

The PHQ and the home ministry will decide their fate, he added.

Court sources said the daily allocation for food of an arrestee in a police station or a court lockup is Tk 150. But the ADC and the others used to prepare bills of Tk 75 for each without providing the arrestees with any food. Police rather took money from the arrestees' families to provide food.

On May 31, 2023, the ACC launched an inquiry into the allegations of amassing illegal wealth by ADC Kamrul and his wife Saima Begum. Kamrul was summoned to the ACC Chattogram office on August 14 for questioning.

After the inquiry, ACC Assistant Director Emran Hossain of the Chattogram office submitted a report to its headquarters on May 13 this year.

The ACC official in his petition said Matiur and his family members were trying to transfer the ownership of their properties and launder money, and that is why they should be prevented from making such attempts.

Matiur and his family members also opened 23 beneficiary owner's (BO) accounts with different brokerage houses.

On June 24, the same court imposed travel bans on Matiur, Laila and Taufiqur in connection with corruption allegations.

Earlier, the ACC formed a three-member committee to probe the allegations of amassing huge illegal wealth against them.

Hollywood star Clooney penned a devastating editorial in the New York Times Wednesday just three weeks after co-hosting a huge fundraiser in Los Angeles that raised nearly $30 million for Biden.

"It's devastating to say it, but the Joe Biden I was with three weeks ago at the fundraiser was not the Joe 'big F-ing deal' Biden of 2010," wrote Clooney.

"He wasn't even the Joe Biden of 2020. He was the same man we all witnessed at the debate."

Clooney said that Biden would lose the presidential election, and Democrats would also lose both chambers of Congress.

In response to Clooney's editorial, the Biden campaign pointed to the president's statements on Monday saying he was committed to running again in November.

Stop 'judicial harassment' campaign against him, it added.

In September 2023, the UN raised concerns about the intimidation and harassment against Prof Yunus, which has persisted for almost a decade. The smear campaigns against him emanate from the highest levels of government, undermining his right to a fair trial and due process in line with international standards, according to the release.

On January 1 this year, Prof Yunus was convicted of violating Bangladesh's labour laws. He and three of his Grameen Telecom colleagues were sentenced to six months in jail for failing to create a workers' welfare fund in the company. They were granted bail pending appeals, it said.

On June 12 Prof Yunus and 13 others were indicted on charges of embezzlement from the welfare fund of his telecom company. Prof Yunus has denied these charges, and his trial is due to start on July 15.

The judicial harassment of Prof Yunus "seems to be vindictive and politically motivated" and highlights the systematic targeting of civil society and critics by the government. The authorities must halt this abuse of the judicial system to persecute Prof Yunus and end this travesty of justice, the release added.

In December 2023, the Civicus Monitor downgraded Bangladesh's civic space to "closed", its worst rating.

The downgrade is the result of attacks on civil society and a massive government crackdown on opposition politicians and independent critics in the run-up to the national elections held in January 2024, the release said.

GAZA OFFENSIVE

Biden, US complicit in alleged war crimes

Says Erdogan

REUTERS, Ankara

Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan has said US President Joe Biden and his administration are complicit in what he called Israeli war crimes and violations of international law in the Gaza conflict, and he called for sanctions against Israel.

In an interview with Newsweek during the Nato summit in Washington, Erdogan said Israel's "brutal murder" of civilians, its strikes on hospitals, aid centres and elsewhere constituted war crimes.

"The US administration, however, disregards these violations and provides Israel with the most support. They do so at the expense of being complicit in these violations," Erdogan was quoted as saying.

Smoke billows from the site of an Israeli airstrike in the southern Lebanese village of Tairharfa yesterday. Israel and Lebanon's Hezbollah, an ally of the Palestinian group Hamas, have exchanged near daily cross-border fire since the Gaza offensive began on October 7, stoking fears of an escalation into all-out war.

POST-POLLS FRANCE

Demand keys to govt

AFP, Paris

French left-wingers attacked President Emmanuel Macron yesterday after he called for a broad coalition government, demanding that their movement alone should propose a prime minister.

No single force won Sunday's second-round vote outright, though a broad alliance of Socialists, Communists, Greens and the hard-left France Unbowed (LFI) won the most seats, with 193 in the 577-strong National Assembly.

In an open letter to voters, Macron said Wednesday that "nobody won" the ballot. He has left centrist Prime Minister Gabriel Attal in place and called on parties to find common ground for a broad coalition.

Socialist Party chief Olivier Faure accused Macron of failing to "respect the vote of the French people", while LFI figurehead Jean-Luc Melenchon blasted the "return of the royal veto".

Sophie Binet, head of France's biggest trade union federation, the CGT, also enlisted the image of France's long-defunct monarchy to attack the president.

"It's like having Louis XVI locking himself away in Versailles," she said, referring to the king guillotined in 1793 during the French Revolution.

"If (Macron) doesn't respect the result of the polls, he risks plunging the country into chaos once again," she said.

Allow Gaza access

Dozens of int'l news groups urge Israel

AFP, New York

More than 60 news organizations, including some of the world's largest, yesterday signed an open letter calling on Israel to immediately end restrictions on international media entering and reporting on Gaza.

CNN, the BBC, Agence France-Presse and the Associated Press were among 64 media groups demanding greater access to the enclave that has faced a withering assault by Israel since Hamas's deadly October 7 assault.

"We, the undersigned, request that Israeli authorities end immediately the restrictions on foreign media entering Gaza and grant independent access to international news organizations seeking to access the territory," states the letter, organised by the Committee to Protect Journalists.

"Nine months into the war, international reporters are still being denied access to Gaza except for rare and escorted trips arranged by the Israeli military," it said.

"This effective ban on foreign reporting has placed an impossible and unreasonable burden on local reporters to document a war through which they are living," it added.

ISRAELI OFFENSIVE IN GAZA

MSF facing 'critical' medical supply shortage

AFP, Paris

Aid group Doctors Without Borders has warned of "critical" shortages of medical supplies in Gaza, with no resupply for more than two months as fighting between Israel and Hamas wears on.

The group known by its French initials MSF is "facing critical shortages of many things like gauze, gloves... things like that," Amber Alayyan, who works on the Palestinian territories for its French branch, told AFP on Wednesday.

The aid group warned last week in a statement it had been unable to bring any medical supplies into Gaza since the end of April and called on Israel to open more crossing points into the territory.

"We're seeing people who are injured in bombings, in shootings, in drone attacks," Alayyan said.

MSF staff have shifted to changing wound dressings every four days rather than the usual two to save on supplies

"We're seeing people who are living in such poor conditions that they're cooking on the floor."

MSF staff have shifted to changing wound dressings every four days rather than the usual two to save on supplies, paediatrician Alayyan added.

MSF now risks running out of vital medication such as anaesthetics needed for surgery.

"If we have to continue going like this... we won't be able to operate. We won't operate without anaesthesia," Alayyan said.

UNRWA, the United Nations body responsible for Palestinian refugees, estimated last month that around 10 children per day were losing one or both legs in Gaza.

Where MSF is involved, "most of the amputations... are being done as life-saving amputations," Alayyan said.

Afterwards, "we don't even have enough wheelchairs in our own hospital... much less prosthetic devices", she added.

With around 88,000 people wounded in Gaza, according to the health ministry, it will be a "proper catastrophe for years to come in terms of post-operative care, wound care, amputations, prosthetics", Alayyan said.

"Gaza itself needs to be rebuilt. So it's going to have to be rebuilt with wheelchair-accessible ramps all over the place for the thousands of people who are going to be in wheelchairs," she said.

"The offensive needs to stop... the healthcare system is completely destroyed."

After initially blocking all deliveries into Gaza, Israel reopened Kerem Shalom in December under international pressure.

An average of 250 trucks now cross the checkpoint daily according to COGAT, still well below UN figure of 500 aid and commercial trucks before the offensive.

Independent UN rights experts accused Israel on Tuesday of a "targeted starvation campaign" in the Gaza, where they said 34 Palestinians have died of malnutrition since October.

Taiwan detects 66 Chinese aircraft around island

AFP, Taipei

Taiwan's defence ministry said yesterday it had detected 66 Chinese military aircraft around the island in a 24-hour window, a record-high this year, a day after it said Beijing was conducting exercises in nearby waters.

China -- which maintains a near-daily military presence around Taiwan -- claims the self-ruled island as part of its territory and has said it will never renounce the use of force to bring it under its control.

Yesterday's record comes a day after Taipei spotted Chinese aircraft around the island that it said were headed to the western Pacific for exercises with the PLA aircraft carrier Shandong.

"66 PLA aircraft and seven PLAN vessels operating around Taiwan were detected up until 6 am (2200 GMT Wednesday) today," the defence ministry said in yesterday's statement, adding it has "responded accordingly".

Fifty-six of the Chinese aircraft crossed the sensitive median line bisecting the Taiwan Strait -- a narrow 180-kilometre (110-mile) waterway separating the island from China.

Ukraine seizes cargo ship in Black Sea

Detains captain for exporting 'looted' grain from occupied Crimea

REUTERS, Kyiv

Ukraine seized a foreign cargo ship in the Black Sea off its Odesa region and detained the captain on suspicion of helping Moscow export Ukrainian grain from Russian-occupied Crimea, the Security Service of Ukraine (SBU) said yesterday.

The vessel, which it did not identify, was travelling under the flag of a central African country and repeatedly docked at the Crimean sea port of Sevastopol to pick up "looted" agricultural products in 2023-24, the SBU said.

Russian forces occupied swathes of Ukraine's southern agricultural regions in the first year of its invasion in 2022 and Kyiv has accused Russia of stealing and destroying its grain.

The SBU said the captain and 12 crew members helped Russia export Ukrainian grain taken from the occupied south to the Middle East for sale on behalf of Russia.

"The investigation is ongoing to establish all the circumstances of the crime and identify other persons involved in the illegal activity," the SBU said.

The captain, a citizen of a South Caucasus country, could face up to five years in prison for violating travel restrictions governing Ukraine's Russian-occupied territories, it said.

The Odesa region hub plays a key role in Ukraine's Black Sea exports that it has revived without Russia's assent after Moscow quit a UN-brokered deal last summer that had allowed Kyiv to export food during the war with Russia.

ARCTIC CROSSING

Melting ice no guarantee of smooth sailing: study

AFP, Paris

Melting sea ice in the fast-warming Arctic Ocean is not making it easier for sailors to navigate a legendary shortcut between Europe and Asia despite popular belief, scientists said Thursday.

To the contrary, climate change was causing thicker, more hazardous ice to choke the fabled "northwest passage" long-sought by navigators seeking a faster route from the Pacific to the Atlantic Oceans.

Considered virtually impassable a century ago, a growing number of ships have been sailing this remote seaway north of Canada as the thawing of the polar ice promised new opportunities for trade and exploration.

But a new study challenges "the increasingly common belief" that the northwest passage could become a viable alternative shipping route as warming temperatures cause an overall decline in Arctic sea ice.

Make central bank fully independent

Absence of autonomy has proven disastrous

It is heartening to see the government acknowledge the importance of having an independent central bank. Reportedly, the authorities are set to amend the Bangladesh Bank Order, 1972 to supposedly align it with global best practices and give it more autonomy. The development comes at a time when the economy is going through one of the worst downturns in recent memory, with inflation continuing to break new records. As experts have pointed out, failed government policies have been a major factor for the runaway inflation and other economic problems we are currently experiencing. And the role of government-controlled Bangladesh Bank in this debacle is particularly notable.

It is, therefore, reasonable to assume that many of our problems could have been avoided or better addressed if we had an independent and courageous central bank. The government-imposed interest-rate caps on both the lending and deposit rates—at 9 and 6 percent—is a perfect example of this. Perhaps a more independent central bank would have realised—and indeed listened to experts—that this was a flawed policy that would only end up fuelling inflation. The decision to artificially inflate the value of the taka was another disaster that, too, could have been avoided.

Even before the recent economic crisis began, the unchecked "looting" of our banking sector—under political patronage—had damaged our economy beyond comprehension. Those cracks are widening today as the government, including the central bank, fails to curb default loans with the policies for defaulters continuing to be relaxed. The government's decision to provide continuous loan rescheduling facilities and interest rate waivers to loan defaulters has not been beneficial whatsoever. Therefore, we hope the Bangladesh Bank is given autonomy to pursue stricter policies with regard to wilful defaulters, without political interventions.

In its technical assistance report regarding the Bangladesh Bank, the IMF said that the bank "order needs to be substantially amended so that price stability is the overriding objective of the new monetary policy regime, and governance arrangements are aligned accordingly." We cannot agree more. What's concerning, however, is that a provision of the order called for establishing a council comprising finance and commerce ministers, the bank governor, and others. This will ultimately constrain the bank's actions in times of pressure.

Therefore, while the amendment initiative may sound good, its success in terms of making prudent economic decisions will be determined by the degree of autonomy ultimately granted to the central bank. Previously, despite talks of providing it with autonomy, we have seen the government do the exact opposite. Hence, we hope the amendment is not simply an eyewash amid pressure for reforms. It must be able to address longstanding concerns about the bank's function and mandate. An expert-driven Bangladesh Bank that protects the nation's best interests is the need of the hour.

DSCC must respect court order

Ensuring rehabilitation of Harijan families facing eviction is vital

We are troubled by the recent actions of Dhaka South City Corporation (DSCC) and a ward councillor at the Miranzilla Harijan Colony in Bangshal that seem to defy a court order preventing eviction of the Harijan families who reside there. According to media reports, despite the High Court stay order on eviction, the DSCC made moves in contravention of it while local councillor MD Awal Hossain and his men antagonised colony residents, leading to a clash that left 16 injured.

It may be recalled that the DSCC, on June 10, had tried to evict several Harijan families saying they are "illegal residents" as they no longer work for the corporation. Later, on June 13, the HC issued a one-month status quo on eviction proceedings and ordered the DSCC to arrange accommodation for the affected residents. The DSCC, then, filed a leave to appeal petition with the Appellate Division, challenging the order. However, with the appeal pending and the status quo still in force, the DSCC on July 9 sent letters to its chief executive officer and the commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police for conducting eviction proceedings and deployment of police force.

Then, on Wednesday, DSCC Executive Magistrate Md Moniruzzaman went to the colony apparently to check the utility problems of a new building there, as reported by this daily. At the same time, the councillor and his men entered the colony seemingly to help DSCC employees, who got allotment of flats at the new building, to move in. It triggered colony residents who resisted them leading to the clash. All this is quite alarming.

The HC's June 13 order clearly directs the DSCC to make alternative living arrangements for the Harijan families facing eviction. These people have been living there for generations and have no other place to go. Why then did the DSCC find it urgent to install the new flat allottees, ignoring the court order on eviction and rehabilitation? Furthermore, who authorised the councillor and his men to enter colony? While we hail the Appellate Division's direction on Thursday to extend the status quo until further order, whether the DSCC can be trusted to follow the new ruling remains a question. We urge the DSCC and all relevant officials to respect court directives. Any eviction in the future must be preceded by proper rehabilitation of the affected.
